The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPRINGFIELD ARMORY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a statement of expenditures at the Springfield Armory, and of arms fabricated, altered, and repaired at that armory during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department, and ordered to be printed.

PURCHASES FOR USE OF ARMY.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the Senate, accompanying the bill (S. 9) to fix the day for the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President, and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice-President, and the decision of questions arising thereon:

IN THE SENATE, December 14, 1886.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate, No. 9, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. HOAR, Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. PUGH be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request of the Senate for a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on this bill will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection. During the day the Chair will announce the appointment of conferees on the part of the House.

The Speaker subsequently announced the appointment of Mr. CALDWELL, Mr. EDEN, and Mr. COOPER, as the House conferees.

AVENUES, ETC., IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2938) regulating the use of avenues, streets, alleys, and reservations, in the city of Washington; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR, for two days, on account of sickness.

To Mr. MITCHELL, for one week, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SMALL, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers filed by him with the bill (H. R. 3667) for the relief of Walter D. Plowden, no action having been had on the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of Ella I. Small, filed with the bill (H. R. 1021).

AMENDMENT, NATIONAL BANK ACT.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for immediate consideration the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 5191 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding to the list of cities named therein the following, namely: Nashville, Charleston, Atlanta, Richmond, Galveston, Saint Paul, Indianapolis, Kansas City, and Omaha.

SEC. 2. That section 5192 of the Revised Statutes be amended by adding to the list of cities therein named the following, namely: Nashville, Atlanta, Galveston, Saint Paul, Indianapolis, Kansas City, and Omaha.

Mr. BURROWS. It is difficult to understand exactly what this bill covers unless these sections of the Revised Statutes to which reference is made are read.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If the gentleman will pardon me, I think I can make a brief explanation which will show the propriety of the passage of this act.

Mr. BURROWS. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Section 5191 of the act creating the national banks provides that national banks located in sixteen cities therein named shall keep on hand, of the moneys of the United States, a sum equal to 25 per cent. of the aggregate amount of the circulation of the bank and of its deposits. All other national banks are required to keep on hand only 15 per cent. of the aggregate amount of the circulation and deposits. Section 5192 provides that the national banks, located in these cities which are required to keep only 15 per cent. of the aggregate amount on hand, may deposit three-fifths of that reserve fund with national banks located in the reserve cities. This, therefore, simply gives to Kansas City, and those others named in the bill, the same privileges that are now given to Chicago, Saint Louis, New York, Philadelphia, and the other cities embraced in the original act. It enables the national banks doing business in Kansas City, for instance, to keep the reserve fund there, instead of sending it elsewhere. It costs the Government nothing.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I am requested by the committee reporting the bill, or with their consent, to move to strike out the words "Nashville, Charleston, and Richmond," in lines 5 and 6 of section 1. Richmond and Charleston, I will say, are already provided for, and do not wish to assume the additional burdens. I also further move to insert after the words "Saint Paul," in line 6, the word "Minneapolis."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Also in section 2, I move to amend by striking from line 3 the word "Nashville," and inserting after the words "Saint Paul" the word "Minneapolis," which makes it conform to the first section.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HOW.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7648) for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties, and put it upon its passage.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Samuel T. Glover, James O. Broadhead, and Gerard B. Allen, sureties of the late John How, formerly Indian agent at the Western Shoshone Agency, Nevada, on the official bond of said John How, be, and they are hereby, released from any and all liabilities of every kind and nature on or growing out of said bond; that no action shall be brought, maintained, prosecuted, or enforced against said sureties, or either of them, their executors, administrators, or heirs, in any court.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDEN. I would like to have the report read for information, reserving the right to object.

Mr. CLARDY. The report, permit me to say, is quite a long one, and if the gentleman from Illinois will withdraw his demand for the reading of it, I think I can make a statement of the facts which will embody the facts in a few words.

Mr. EDEN. Very well.

Mr. CLARDY. In 1878 John How, an old and respected citizen of Saint Louis, was appointed agent for the Western Shoshone Indian agency in Nevada; and upon his acceptance of the office entered into a bond in the penal sum of $10,000 for the faithful performance of the duties, with Hon. James O. Broadhead, the late Samuel T. Glover, and Mr. Girard B. Allen, all of that city, as his sureties. Near the close or at the expiration of his term of office in 1882, upon charges of irregularity in his official accounts being preferred, an inspector, by the direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, took charge of the agency and made an examination of the accounts. The report submitted by the inspector showed that there had been a violation of the terms of the bond; and upon the face of the report, paying no attention to the appendix, it seemed that the Government had been involved in a loss of some $2,000. But while it appeared that there had been a violation of the bond, an examination of the report further discloses the fact that this violation was a technical one merely, and, in the language of the committee submitting this report, "resulted in no loss to the Government."

The first item is for $162, receipted by marks, and the marks not witnessed. The committee say in their report, after a full examination of this question, (and I may say too that the opinion of the former Commissioner of Indian Affairs corroborates the finding of the present committee of the House), that there has been no loss to the Government, but merely a failure to comply with technical provisions or orders issued by the Department of the Interior.

I do not think that there ought to be any objection to the passage of the bill. My friend from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER], who is fully acquainted with the facts of the case, will also make a statement to the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have carefully examined the bill, and I am satisfied the Government has sustained no loss by reason of the transactions of this Indian agent, Mr. How. I want to say with regard to that gentleman that he bore during his life a character as high as that of any gentleman in the State of Missouri. He was a man of the very highest character, and nobody that ever knew John How ever believed for a moment that he was capable or could by any indirection be capable of defrauding the Government. He is now dead, and this bill is to do justice to his memory, and also to his indorsers. I ask that it be passed unanimously.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARDY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY MARTIN.

Mr. DORSEY. I ask unanimous consent that the House at this time consider the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin, with amendments by the Senate; and I shall ask the House to concur in the Senate amendments.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill be read as it now stands, with the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the bill as proposed to be amended as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Henry Martin, of Seward County, Nebraska, or his legal representatives, may select, within one year from the passage of this act, and shall be allowed, a patent for a tract of 80 acres of the unoccupied and unappropriated public lands of the United States in the State of Nebraska, subject to entry, not mineral in character, and in tracts not less than the subdivisions provided for in the United States land-laws; and if unsurveyed when taken, to conform when surveyed to the general system of the United States land-surveys; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to issue scrip, in legal subdivisions, to the said Martin, or his legal representatives, in accordance with the provisions of this act, which scrip shall be received in payment for said land.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. DORSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES ALBERT BONSACK.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2950) for the relief of James Albert Bonsack, and to bring it before the House for present consideration.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I will have to object for the present.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask the gentleman from Kansas to allow me to make a brief explanation; and when the object of the bill is explained I think there will be no objection to it. This James Albert Bonsack, who asks that this bill be passed, was the inventor of a cigarette machine. He applied for his American patent before he applied for his foreign patents; but by reason of delay in the Patent Office here all his foreign patents were granted first.

Now by a Federal statute if any foreign patent lapses the inventor loses the American patent. The statute was intended to apply to those cases where persons had gone abroad and got patents first. It is very expensive to keep up these foreign patents which are of no use to the American patentee; and all that the inventor asks is that he be released of that obligation by a confirmation of his American patent. It is a defect in our own law. This bill has been reported favorably by committees of two Congresses. It is not for the extension of the rights of the patentee, but to remedy a defect in our own law which would otherwise deprive the inventor of the benefit of his invention.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Has the bill the unanimous report of the Committee on Patents?

Mr. DANIEL. It has, and also of the committee of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I object for the present.

FEES ON PASSPORTS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, by unanimous consent introduced a bill (H. R. 10238) reducing the fee collected on passports; which was read twice, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof).

The SPEAKER. The regular order is now the call of committees for the consideration of bills for one hour. The hour begins at 12 o'clock and 32 minutes. The call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. WELLBORN. I yield the floor to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER].

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SKINNER. The bill I ask to call up for consideration is what is known as the Indian severalty bill; the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes. It appropriates in one of its sections $100,000 for carrying out the provisions of the bill. I want to know if it can be considered in the House, it being on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The bill is now on the House Calendar, and unless the point of order is made that it must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, it can be considered in the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I make the point of order.

Mr. SKINNER. For the purpose of saving time, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I object.

Mr. WELLBORN. It has been suggested to me, Mr. Speaker, that probably this bill is not subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not read the bill, but has accepted the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] that it makes an appropriation of $100,000.

Mr. WELLBORN. That money, perhaps, is to be taken out of the Indian fund.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the bill.

Mr. SKINNER. The money is to be appropriated, but it is to be repaid out of the sales of lands as provided in the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That would make no difference.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause section 9 of the bill to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That for the purpose of making the surveys and resurveys mentioned in section 2 of this act there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be repaid proportionately out of the proceeds of the sales of such land as may be acquired from the Indians under the provisions of this act.

The SPEAKER. It will be observed from the reading of this section that the money is to be appropriated out of the Treasury of the United States. The fact that provision is made in the bill for the repayment of the money at some future time makes no difference as to the construction of the rule of the House. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, from the beginning of our national existence——

Mr. WELLBORN. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the bill had better be read.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire that the bill shall be read by sections after I make a brief explanation of it. I think the committee can understand the bill better after this explanation, and then the bill may be read by sections as we proceed in its consideration, thus saving time.

The CHAIRMAN. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I insist that the bill shall be read.

Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases where any tribes or bands of Indians have been or shall hereafter be located upon any reservation created for their use, either by virtue of treaty stipulations or an act of Congress, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause a patent to issue for each of such reservations in favor of the tribe or tribes, band or bands, of Indians occupying the same under treaty stipulations or act of Congress, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus patented, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the tribes or bands to which it is issued, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same, by patent, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever: Provided, That the President may withhold the issuance of the patent in fee in any case for such further time as he may deem to be for the interests of the Indians. And the trust created in the original patent shall be and remain in full force until the patent in fee be issued. Each of said patents shall be recorded in the General Land Office and the Indian Bureau, and shall be then placed in charge of some person designated therefor on the reservation affected thereby, for the inspection and use at all times of any one interested therein.

SEC. 1. That in all cases where any tribe or band of Indians has been or shall hereafter be located upon any reservation created for their use, either by treaty stipulations or by virtue of an act of Congress or executive order setting apart the same for their use, the President be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever in his opinion any reservation of such Indians, or any part thereof, is suitable and advantageous for agricultural or grazing purposes, and the progress in civilization of the tribe located thereon, or any of the members thereof, shall be such as to encourage the belief that an allotment of lands in severalty to the members of said tribe, or any of them, would be for the best interests of said Indians, to cause said reservation, or such parts thereof as in his opinion are suitable and advantageous for agricultural or grazing purposes, to be surveyed, or resurveyed if necessary, and to allot the lands in said reservation in severalty to the Indians located thereon in quantities as follows:

To each head of a family, one-quarter of a section;

To each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section;

To each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and

To each other person under eighteen years now living, or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the President directing an allotment of the lands embraced in any reservation, one-sixteenth of a section.

In case there is not land in any of said reservations suitable and advantageous for agricultural purposes sufficient to allot lands to each individual of the classes above named in quantities as above provided, the lands so suitable and advantageous embraced in such reservation or reservations shall be allotted to each individual of each of said classes pro rata in accordance with the provisions of this act: Provided, That where the treaty or act of Congress setting apart such reservation provides for the allotment of lands in severalty in quantities in excess of those herein provided, the President, in making the allotments upon such reservations, shall allot the lands to each individual Indian belonging thereon in quantity as specified in such treaty or act: And provided further, That where the lands on any reservation are mainly valuable for grazing purposes, an additional allotment of such grazing lands in quantities as above provided shall be made to each individual; or in case any two or more Indians who may be entitled to allotments shall so agree, the President may assign the grazing lands to which they may be entitled to them in one tract, and to be held and used in common.

SEC. 2. That all allotments set apart under the provisions of this act shall be selected by the Indians, heads of families selecting for their minor children, and the agents shall select for each orphan child, and in such manner as to embrace the improvements of the Indians making the selection. Where the improvements of two or more Indians have been made on the same legal subdivision of land, unless they shall otherwise agree, a provisional line may be run dividing said lands between them, and the amount to which each is entitled shall be equalized in the assignment of the remainder of the land to which they are entitled under this act: Provided, That if any one entitled to an allotment shall fail to make a selection within five years after the President shall direct that allotments may be made on a particular reservation, the Secretary of the Interior may direct the agent of such tribe or band, if such there be, and if there be no agent, then a special agent appointed for that purpose, to make a selection for such Indian, which selection shall be allotted as in cases where selections are made by the Indians, and patents shall issue in like manner.

SEC. 3. That the allotments provided for in this act shall be made by special agents appointed by the President for such purpose, and the agents in charge of the respective reservations on which the allotments are directed to be made, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may from time to time prescribe, and shall be certified by such agents to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in duplicate, one copy to be retained in the Indian Office and the other to be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his action, and to be deposited in the General Land Office.

SEC. 4. That where any Indian not residing upon a reservation, or for whose tribe no reservation has been provided by treaty, act of Congress, or executive order, shall make settlement upon any surveyed or unsurveyed lands of the United States not otherwise appropriated, he or she shall be entitled, upon application to the local land office for the district in which the lands are located, to have the same allotted to him or her, and to his or her children, in quantities and manner as provided in this act for Indians residing upon reservations; and when such settlement is made upon unsurveyed lands, the grant to such Indians shall be adjusted upon the survey of the lands so as to conform thereto; and patents shall be issued to them for such lands in the manner and with the restrictions as herein provided. And the fees to which the officers of such local land office would have been entitled had such lands been entered under the general laws for the disposition of the public lands shall be paid to them, from any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, upon a statement of an account in their behalf for such fees by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and a certification of such account to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of the Interoir.

SEC. 5. That upon the approval of the allotments provided for in this act by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall cause patents to issue therefor in the name of the allottees, which patents shall be of the legal effect, and declare that the United States does and will hold the land thus allotted, for the period of twenty-five years, in trust for the sole use and benefit of the Indian to whom such allotment shall have been made, or, in case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States will convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever. And if any conveyance shall be made of the lands set apart and allotted as herein provided, or any contract made touching the same, before the expiration of the time above mentioned, such conveyance or contract shall be absolutely null and void: Provided, That these patents, when issued, shall override the patent authorized to be issued to the tribes or bands occupying reservations created by virtue of treaty stipulations or act of Congress, and shall separate the individual allotment from the lands held in common, which proviso shall be incorporated in each of the tribal patents: Provided further, That the law of descent and partition in force in the State or Territory where such lands are situate shall apply thereto after patents therefor have been executed and delivered, except as herein otherwise provided; and the laws of the State of Kansas regulating the descent and partition of real estate shall, so far as practicable, apply to all lands in the Indian Territory which may be allotted in severalty under the provisions of this act: And provided further, That at any time after lands have been allotted to all the Indians of any tribe as herein provided, or sooner if in the opinion of the President it shall be for the best interests of said tribe, it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with such Indian tribe for the purchase and release by said tribe, in conformity with the treaty or statute under which such reservation is held, of such portions of its reservation not allotted as such tribe shall, from time to time, consent to sell, on such terms and conditions as shall be considered just and equitable between the United States and said tribe of Indians, which purchase shall not be complete until ratified by Congress, and the form and manner of executing such release shall also be prescribed by Congress; and the principal of all sums agreed to be paid by the United States as the purchase-price of any portion of any such reservation shall be payable only to the Indians or Indian tribe from whom such purchase was made by the express authority of Congress, after the expiration of twenty-five years from the purchase of said lands; but the same shall, in the mean time, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribe or tribes of Indians entitled thereto; and in the mean time, and until such principal sum shall be paid over to or expended for the benefit of said Indians, the United States shall pay interest annually upon said principal sums at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, which interest shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of such Indian tribes, and shall be used for the purpose of educating and preparing them for self-support, and applied to their support and maintenance, as may be necessary. The patents aforesaid shall be recorded in the General Land Office, and afterward delivered, free of charge, to the allottee entitled thereto. And if any religious society or other organization is now occupying any of the public lands to which this act is applicable, for religious or educational work among the Indians, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to confirm such occupation to such society or organization, in quantity not exceeding 160 acres in any one tract, so long as the same shall be so occupied, on such terms as he shall deem just; but nothing herein contained shall change or alter any claim of such society for religious or educational purposes heretofore granted by law.

SEC. 6. That upon the completion of said allotments and the patenting of the lands to said allottees, each and every member of the respective bands or tribes of Indians to whom allotments have been made shall have the benefit of and be subject to the laws, both civil and criminal, of the State or Territory in which they may reside; and no Territory shall pass or enforce any law denying any such Indian within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the law. And every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom allotments shall have been made under the provisions of this act, and every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States who has voluntarily taken up, within said limits, his residence separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is hereby declared to be a citizen of the United States, and is entitled to all the rights, privileges, and immunities of such citizens, whether said Indian has been or not, by birth or otherwise, a member of any tribe of Indians within the territorial limits of the United States, without in any manner impairing or otherwise affecting the right of any such Indian to tribal or other property.

SEC. 7. That in cases where the use of water for irrigation is necessary to render the lands within any Indian reservation available for agricultural purposes, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary to secure a just and equal distribution thereof among the Indians residing upon any such reservations; and no other appropriation or grant of water by any riparian proprietor shall be authorized or permitted to the damage of any other riparian proprietor.

SEC. 8. That the provision of this act shall not extend to the territory occupied by the Cherokees, Creeks, Choctaws, Chickasaws, Seminoles, and Osages, in the Indian Territory, nor to any of the reservations of the Seneca Nation of New York Indians in the State of New York, nor to that strip of territory in the State of Nebraska adjoining the Sioux Nation on the south, added by executive order.

SEC. 9. That for the purpose of making the surveys and resurveys mentioned in section 2 of this act, there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $100,000, to be repaid proportionately out of the proceeds of the sales of such land as may be acquired from the Indians under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the right and power of Congress to grant the right of way through any lands granted to an Indian, or a tribe of Indians, for railroads or other highways, or telegraph lines, for the public use, or to condemn such lands to public uses, upon making just compensation.

The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs were read, as follows:

(1) Strike out sections 1 and 2 of said bill and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That in all cases where any tribe or band of Indians has been, or shall hereafter be, located upon any reservation created for their use, either by treaty stipulation or by virtue of an act of Congress or executive order setting apart the same for their use, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever in his opinion any reservation of such Indians is advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes, to cause said reservation to be surveyed, or resurveyed if necessary, and to allot the lands in said reservation in severalty to the Indians located thereon, in quantities as specified in the treaty with said tribes or bands if said reservation was created by treaty: Provided, That in all cases where no provision for the allotment of land is made in the treaties, acts, or executive orders creating or relating to said reservations, allotments in severalty may be made thereon as follows:

"To each head of a family, one-quarter of a section;

"To each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section;

"To each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and

"To each other person under eighteen years now living, or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the Secretary of the Interior directing an allotment of the lands embraced in any reservation, one-sixteenth of a section: Provided, That in case there is not sufficient land in any of said reservations to allot lands to each individual of the classes above named in quantities as above provided, the lands embraced in such reservation or reservations shall be alloted to each individual of each of said classes pro rata in accordance with the provisions of this act."

(2) Strike out all after the word "void," in line 16, section 6, up to the word "Provided," in line 21.

(3) Strike out all after the word "Congress," in line 40, section 6, up to and including the word "necessary," in line 54.

(4) Insert after the word "Osage," in line 3, section 9, the following: "Miamies and Peorias, and Sacs and Foxes."

(5) At the end of the bill add the following:

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tribe of Indians until the consent of two-thirds of the male members twenty-one years of age shall be first had and obtained."

(6) That the several sections of the bill be renumbered.

We recommend that the bill, when so amended, do pass.

Mr. SKINNER. Mr. Chairman, from the beginning of our existence as a nation the Indian has been the subject of national legislation; but at no time so much as now has there been such pressing necessity for the adoption of a general Indian policy; the enactment of some measure that will lead to a correct solution of the Indian problem.

As long as the great West remained unoccupied or sparsely settled by the white man and abounded with game, the Indian retired before the advancing civilization of the white man, and subsisted by the chase. But now the white civilization of the East has been met by the white civilization from the West. The game has been destroyed, and the food supply from that source is gone from the Indian, and gone forever.

This being a true statement of the situation, the Indian must either perish, depend upon the Government for support, or abandon his thriftless habits, learn to eat bread in the sweat of his face, and finally rise to the level of the civilization that surrounds him and take upon himself the duties and responsibilities of American citizenship. Starvation, pauperism, or independent, self-supporting citizenship—between these the Indian must take his choice, or, rather, we, as his guardians, must choose for him. That the latter may be his destiny is the desire of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and, I believe, of this Congress and the country.

In my opinion, our fathers erred in not at first adopting an Indian policy that could lead to this end. Instead of removing the Eastern Indians from their Eastern homes—instead of massing large numbers of Indians upon one reservation, thus postponing their civilization—they should have left the Indians where they found them and civilized them by piece-meal as they came to them.

But it is useless to grieve over spilled milk or to recount the wrongs that the red man has suffered at the hands of the white man, or the mistakes that our predecessors have made in their attempts to solve the Indian problem, or to postpone its solution. The Indian as he is today confronts us and demands consideration. What shall be his future status? Shall he remain a pauper savage, blocking the pathway of civilization, an increasing burden upon the people? Or shall he be converted into a civilized tax-payer, contributing toward the support of the Government and adding to the material prosperity of the country?

These are the questions that press upon us for consideration. We desire, I say, that the latter shall be his destiny. How is so great a change in his condition to be effected? By what path can we lead him to the plane of citizenship? This is the problem presented for our solution.

The present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who, in the line of his duty, has given these questions his most earnest thought, says in his annual report, 1885, and reiterates it in his last report, that it should be impressed upon the Indians "that they must abandon their tribal relation and take lands in severalty as the corner-stone of their complete success in agriculture; which means self-support, personal independence, and material thrift."

One of the most successful Indian educators of the day—the pioneer of the present system of Indian education, Capt. R. H. Pratt, the superintendent of the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa.—in a speech before the Military Service Institution, December 10, 1885, said:

> The policy of providing one teacher for from one hundred and fifty to two hundred Indians needs to be reversed to a policy that will provide from one hundred and fifty to two hundred teachers to each Indian. This will be the case when our two hundred and sixty thousand Indians are brought into contact with our fifty million people.

This means that the tribal relations must be broken up; that the practice of massing large numbers of Indians on reservations must be stopped; that lands must be allotted in severalty; that where there is more land in any reservation than the Indians on that reservation can profitably use, such surplus lands must be so disposed of that the white man may get possession of them and come in contact with the Indians.

We offer the pending bill, intending for it to fill the full measure of all these requirements, and believing that it points out the most direct route to citizenship for the Indian.

Under its provisions any individual Indian who desires to do so can take a fee-simple title to a certain quantity of land, sufficient for him to make a living upon as a farmer or grazer, shake off the shackles of tribal authority, and become a citizen of the United States without let or hinderance from the tribe to which he belongs; and whenever a majority of the male adults on any reservation desire it the reservation can be broken up, and the lands, in certain quantities, specified in the bill, allotted in severalty to the Indians who belong on such reservation; and as soon as the allotment is made the allottee becomes a citizen of the United States, the strong arm of the law protects him, as it does any other citizen, in life, liberty, and property; and, in addition thereto, his land is made inalienable and non-taxable for a sufficient length of time for the new citizen to become accustomed to his new life, to learn his rights as a citizen, and prepare himself to cope on an equal footing with any white man who might attempt to cheat him out of his newly acquired property; and, in the mean time, the surplus lands upon such reservations can be sold, and the money arising from such sale can be used in such manner as Congress may direct in each particular case, for the benefit of the Indians to whom the land belonged.

Giving the individual Indian a title to the land upon which he resides will have a tendency to stimulate him to work and improve his land and accumulate property, to make him feel more independent and self-reliant; and by associating him with the white man, which will be the case when the reservations are broken up and the surplus lands opened up to white settlement, he will learn habits of thrift and industry.

The effect of the tribal and reservation policy upon the Indian is to make him dependent, to pauperize him to a greater or less degree, to dwarf his mind, and to clog his energies. Huddle together two hundred and sixty-thousand illiterate white people upon reservations, forbid all intercourse between them and other people, issue rations to them, make them dependent, and you make paupers of the large majority of them, and the next generation would be as adverse to working for a living as the Indian is now.

If when the late war ended the Government had gathered all the negroes in the South upon a reservation and had pursued toward them the same policy that has been pursued toward the Indian, the result would have showed itself in a negro appropriation bill of much longer proportions than the Indian appropriation bill of last year, and the negro race would have deteriorated as rapidly as it has advanced in the scale of humanity.

Twenty-one years ago the negro was suddenly raised from slavery to freedom, and shot at once into citizenship, utterly incompetent to appreciate the meaning of the word or the rights that became his in his new condition; with no book-education, no money, no land; dependent entirely upon his muscle for bread and clothes; and yet in all these years he has been self-supporting, and by long and rapid strides has been advancing in civilization. It is all due to the precept and example of the white people with whom they have come in daily contact.

I am informed by those who know both the Indian and the negro that the Indian is the superior. Give, then, to the red man the black man's chance. Let him become a citizen of the United States and be taught by contact with the white man. And in addition thereto give him his land as is provided in this bill and extend over him and his property the same protection that is accorded to white men and the black, and the Indian will soon cease to be burden to the Government, and in good time will help to bear its burdens and add to the material wealth of the country. The Indian problem will be solved.

Mr. SKINNER. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to add only a few words to the suggestions made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER]. This bill is in keeping with the sentiment of the country, as it is, in my judgment, responsive to the best interests of the Indians, the best interests of the whites, and the best interests of the country generally. It has the warm indorsement and approval of the Secretary of the Interior, of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and of all those who have given attention to the subject of the education, the Christianization, and the development of the Indian race. It is for the good of the Indians and for the good of all. As suggested by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER], let us enact this bill, and the Indian problem is substantially solved. The bill provides for the breaking up, as rapidly as possible, of all the tribal organizations and for the allotment of lands to the Indians in severalty, in order that they may possess them individually and proceed to qualify themselves for the duties and responsibilities of citizenship.

The bill, as I have already suggested, is in keeping with the sentiment of the country. Almost every community in the land is asking for such legislation. In the judgment of the great mass of the American people the time has come when the policy of keeping the Indians together in their tribal organizations and restraining and controlling them by bayonets and shotguns must be abandoned and a new era inaugurated—an era of the allotment of lands to the Indians in severalty, an era of education, an era in which they shall be enabled and required to qualify themselves for the duties of American citizenship, and to support themselves by industry and toil. That is the spirit and object of this bill. For that reason, as I have suggested, it meets the warm approval of all the Government officers whose duties bring them in close contact with the Indians, and it has also the indorsement of the Indian rights associations throughout the country, and of the best sentiment of the land.

I desire simply to suggest that of the amendments which we as a committee offer to the Senate bill only two are of much importance. The first which will be offered is to strike out that portion of the first section which provides for a tribal patent. Although the Senate bill has made such provision, the judgment of our committee was and is that the time had passed for the issuance of tribal patents.

Another amendment which we shall offer is to strike out that portion of the sixth section which provides that money accruing from the sale of the Indian lands shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Indians for a period of twenty-five years. In the judgment of our committee this provision is wrong. We believe there ought not to be any such stipulation in the bill. When the Secretary of the Interior enters into negotiations with the Indians for the allotment of lands to them in severalty and for the purchase of the remaining lands let him then make the best contract that can be made for their good and for the good of the people generally, leaving the stipulations of that contract to be determined by the circumstances then existing, subject to the approval and ratification of Congress.

Those are, substantially, the amendments which will be offered to the bill as passed by the Senate. This bill was passed by that body at the last session. A similar measure passed the Senate in the Forty-eighth and in the Forty-seventh Congresses. This measure has thus received public attention and has secured the indorsement of those competent to form a sound judgment upon the question.

Unless there are some gentlemen who desire to propound inquiries concerning some of the features of the bill, or unless some members wish to occupy a few minutes in opposition to it, I shall ask that the bill be read by sections for consideration under the five-minute rule. If any gentleman wishes to ask any question or to occupy a short time in opposition to the measure, I am ready to yield a few minutes for that purpose.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have an amendment which I wish to suggest when we reach the proper point in the bill.

Mr. STEELE. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] whether this bill provides that Indians may become citizens without the formality of taking out naturalization papers.

Mr. PERKINS. Under section 7 of the bill every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States to whom allotment shall have been made under the provisions of this act, and every Indian born within the territorial limits of the United States, who has voluntarily taken up within said limits his residence, separate and apart from any tribe of Indians therein, and has adopted the habits of civilized life, is declared to be a citizen of the United States, without formal application to the court.

Mr. STEELE. I understand that in some cases which have arisen in the gentleman's own State it has been decided that Indians could not be admitted to citizenship because they had not gone through the formality of taking out naturalization papers.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that to be the law generally; but Congress has provided by special legislation for the naturalization of certain Indians or of members of certain tribes. In my own State, by act of Congress, certain Indians have become citizens by declaration in the United States courts of the State, upon the court being satisfied of their qualification for the duties of citizenship.

Mr. STEELE. This bill does not propose to require that formality?

Mr. PERKINS. It does not require it; yet it is not in conflict with the provisions of law heretofore enacted.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish to ask my friend from Kansas why in the eighth section the Miamies, Peorias, and Sacs and Foxes, are excepted from the operations of the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. Principally because in a separate bill which has been considered by our committee, and reported favorably to the House, provision has been made for the allotment of their lands to them in severalty, and also for a division of their fund. They have quite a fund, and they have lands which they have purchased. The condition of their lands is much like that of the lands owned by the Cherokees, Choctaws, Creeks, and Seminoles. For this reason, it was thought that those Indians should be excepted from the operations of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Did the committee pass upon the power of Congress to apply the provisions of the bill to the five civilized tribes?

Mr. PERKINS. Not formally. The Senate had exempted them from the operations of the bill, and we concurred in that action of the Senate without formally discussing the matter. Of course there was doubt in the minds of many of us as to whether we had any authority to interfere with the rights of those Indians there; yet the committee took no formal action upon that proposition, because the Senate had already exempted those Indians from the provisions of the bill.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask that the bill be read by sections under the five-minute rule.

The first section was read.

Mr. PERKINS. The committee recommend striking out this and the second section, and substituting for these two a new section. Perhaps it is best that the next section should be read, before considering the amendment.

The second section was read.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs as a substitute for sections 1 and 2 was read, as follows:

That in all cases where any tribe or band of Indians has been, or shall hereafter be, located upon any reservation created for their use, either by treaty stipulation or by virtue of an act of Congress or executive order setting apart the same for their use, the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized, whenever in his opinion any reservation of such Indians is advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes, to cause said reservation to be surveyed, or resurveyed if necessary, and to allot the lands in said reservation in severalty to the Indians located thereon, in quantities as specified in the treaty with said tribes or bands if said reservation was created by treaty: Provided, That in all cases where no provision for the allotment of land is made in the treaties, acts, or executive orders creating or relating to said reservations, allotments in severalty may be made thereon as follows:

To each head of a family, one quarter of a section;

To each single person over eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section;

To each orphan child under eighteen years of age, one-eighth of a section; and

To each other person under eighteen years now living, or who may be born prior to the date of the order of the Secretary of the Interior directing an allotment of the lands embraced in any reservation, one-sixteenth of a section: Provided, That in case there is not sufficient land in any of said reservations to allot lands to each individual of the classes above named in quantities as above provided, the lands embraced in such reservation or reservations shall be allotted to each individual of each of said classes pro rata in accordance with the provisions of this act.

Mr. SKINNER. After this bill, with the amendment just read, had been reported to the House, the Committee on Indian Affairs formulated some other amendments to this portion of the bill, which I desire now to have read for consideration and adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 1, line 10, after the word "reservation," add the words "or any part thereof;" and in line 12, after the word "to," insert the words "any or all;" strike out the word "the," and after the word "thereon" add the words "upon their application."

Strike out all after the word "quantities," in line 13, section 1, up to the word "as," in line 18; and add at the end of the section the following:

"And provided further, That where the treaty or act of Congress setting apart such reservation provides for the allotment of lands in severalty in quantities in excess of those herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior, in making allotments upon such reservation, shall allot the lands to each individual Indian belonging thereon in quantities as specified in such treaty or act: And provided further, That when the lands allotted are only valuable for grazing purposes, an additional allotment of said grazing lands in quantities as above provided shall be made to each individual."

In line 24, section 1, after the word "other," insert the word "single."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Who offered that?

Mr. SKINNER. That is offered by the committee.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It provides for the allotment of double the quantity of land.

Mr. SKINNER. Yes; when it can not be used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That will lead, in my judgment, to a very dangerous construction. Everything will be grazing land—everything will be unfit for cultivation. I do not think you ought to pass that amendment.

Mr. SKINNER. I am not authorized to withdraw it, as I have presented it from the committee, where it was adopted on full consideration.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The quantity designated in the bill for allotment to individual Indians is ample; and I think the amendment offered providing for a double quantity of land for grazing purposes ought not to be pressed.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; I object to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be put to the House. Is there objection to any other amendment of the committee?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I desire to be heard on the question——

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not before the committee, but the Chair is asking whether there is objection to the amendment proposed by the committee. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] objects to one amendment. Is there objection to the other amendments? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendments with that exception are agreed to.

The question now recurs on the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, which will be again read by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, Where the lands allotted are only valuable for grazing purposes an additional allotment of such grazing lands in quantities as above provided shall be made to each individual.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, that amendment, in my judgment, is not a good one; that is in the case where lands are determined to be unfit for agricultural purposes it provides for the allotment of double the quantity of land. Now just what the decision might be as to the character of land in question may lead to an entire subversion of the idea upon which the bill has been drawn. It provides for giving every head of a family 160 acres, and so on, in smaller quantities as you descend. Here, in case of grazing lands, it is proposed to allot twice the quantity, or 320 acres. One hundred and sixty acres is enough to allot to the head of a family, and 80 acres to those under eighteen years of age. The bill makes ample provision, while the amendment would give 720 acres. That is too much, in my judgment, and I hope the bill will be allowed to go through as it stands.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Chairman, there has been so much confusion in the Hall I do not understand just what objection has been made. I believe the amendment of the committee is right, and that in the case of lands which are not arable lands and not fit for cultivation the allotment should be doubled.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The amendment provides that where lands are unfit for cultivation the allotment shall be doubled.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. In my judgment the double quantity should be given outright. There should be no hesitation about that. We can not expect wild Indians to live upon as little an amount of land as white men.

The first thing we ought to do is to give them grazing lands, and then give them agricultural lands. Give them grazing lands and give them also agricultural lands. You will not induce these people to become agriculturists until they become herders. You have to teach them to herd and feed stock. They have first to become the owners of stock and herders of stock on grazing lands before they succeed in becoming agriculturists. My judgment, therefore, is the amendment of the committee should be adopted, which provides for granting double the quantity of grazing lands. While I am up I will take occasion to say that the information is spreading among these Indians that Congress has determined to grant them lands in severalty. During the vacation twelve or fifteen members of one of the tribes upon the Comanche reservation visited me for the purpose of urging Congress to take this action and give them land in severalty. It is an inducement which will make them work whenever they ascertain the Government will devote a particular piece of land to each individual Indian where he may settle, and where the improvements which may be made, as well as the land itself, will be his—where all the improvements which shall be put upon the land will inure to his benefit and to the benefit of his children. It will be a stimulus to him to go to work and become an agriculturist.

While the bill provides for the allowance of 160 acres to each Indian of agricultural lands, I think it is proper also they should have a double quantity of grazing lands for their use and benefit. Three hundred and twenty acres of these grazing lands is not too much for the head of a family—160 acres of arable land and 320 of grazing land. By so doing you will induce them to become owners of herds of cattle and flocks of sheep by giving them these grazing lands upon which they may raise their herds. I hope, therefore, the amendment of the committee will prevail.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I differ from the gentleman in the opinion which he has expressed. I think the Indian never will cease to become a herder until he becomes an agriculturist. He is a natural herder.

The white man must be considered in this matter as well as the Indian. Under the bill, if the amendments be adopted, a family of four persons, supposing the children to be over eighteen years of age, will be allotted 360 acres of arable land and 360 acres of grazing land, or 720 acres in all. In my judgment that is too much, but on the contrary you will sooner civilize them if you will confine them to a less area.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The committee divided and there were—ayes 78, noes 8.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of the bill has expired.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to; and the committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CONSOLIDATION OF NAVY BUREAUS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of taking up for consideration the special order for the day, the bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Navy, and for other purposes.

Mr. RANDALL. If the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will not the sundry civil appropriation bill be first in order?

The SPEAKER. There is a special order for to-day, and the gentleman from Alabama proposes to go into committee to take up that special order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But is not that special order subject to appropriation bills?

The SPEAKER. It would be. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania should move to go into the Committee of the Whole to consider appropriation bills, the Chair would have to put that question first.

Mr. HERBERT. My motion is before the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the motion so as to give the House a choice between the two matters.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion, as mine is the special order.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman withdraw?

Mr. RANDALL. I prefer the House shall determine the question, and therefore insist on the motion. I have no objection to considering the motion which the gentleman from Alabama indicates, but I think the House should decide, and not the gentleman from Alabama.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 122, noes 31.

So Mr. RANDALL'S motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The Chair desires to state that on yesterday he ruled that 162 made a quorum. That may become an important question, and the Chair desires to say it is an open one.

The Clerk will read the pending amendment, submitted by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] last evening.

The Clerk read as follows:

"After line 59 insert: Supply steamer: For the construction of a steamer for the transportation of oils and other supplies to the light-houses on the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, $147,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment proposes an appropriation to carry out a law enacted at the last session of Congress. By an act of July 28, 1886, which was adopted by both Houses after full discussion on a unanimous report of the Committee on Commerce of both Houses and the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Light-House Board, the Secretary of the Treasury was directed and authorized to cause the construction of one supply steamer for the South Atlantic and Gulf light-house districts, and one for the fourth light-house district. In the last sundry civil appropriation bill an appropriation was made for a small steamer for the fourth light-house district, but no appropriation was made for the large steamer for the South Atlantic and Gulf light-house districts. The Secretary of the Treasury and the Light-House Board in communications represent it is indispensable this steamer to supply the light-houses of that district should be at once constructed. But there is no provision in the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations for that purpose.

The Secretary of the Light-House Board states this steamer is necessary—first, because the present small steamer is inadequate for the wants of the two districts. It is also required as a buoy tender. The representation is further made by the Light-House Board, more than two-thirds, or nearly two-thirds, of the mineral oil sent to light-house districts along the South Atlantic and Gulf coasts is obliged to be sent by freight. As it can not be sent by passenger steamers carrying freight there is great delay. The saving of cost in supplying light-houses in the two districts by the construction of this steamer would be more than sufficient to pay the interest on the expense of construction and running of the steamer which is asked. It seems to me, after the two Houses of Congress after deliberate consideration have decided this light-house supply steamer should be constructed, and that act has become a law, and when the Light-House Board and the Secretary of the Treasury say it is indispensable, there ought not be any further delay in making the necessary appropriation therefor.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Chairman, the merits of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine were discussed at some length when the bill authorizing the construction of the steamer to which it refers was under consideration in the last session of this Congress. That discussion was participated in by the gentleman from Maine himself who now offers the amendment, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], and others, and the bill passed the House unanimously. I trust there will be no objection now on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to the amendment the gentleman proposes.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the facts of the case with reference to this steamer are as follows: There is a law authorizing the construction of this vessel. There is an estimate for the amount necessary to construct it submitted to Congress; but the committee omitted it from the bill for the reason that by the construction of the fourth district light-house tender there is another vessel, the Geranium, which is released from that service and can be applied to the service intended by the construction of this new vessel proposed by the amendment. The Fern is now engaged in the transportation of mineral oils, and the Geranium, by the construction of the new fourth district light-house tender, will be released from that service as well. These two vessels will then be able to perform the duty which is proposed to be accomplished by the amendment. This is the ground upon which the committee opposed the construction of the vessel provided for in the amendment.

I may state, however, that it was not the purpose of the committee ultimately to resist the construction of the vessel, but only for the time being; believing that the service could be amply supplied by the Geranium.

Mr. DINGLEY. But, let me ask the gentleman, ought not the statement of the Light-House Board, the recommendations of the Treasury Department, and the action of Congress as to the necessity for the construction of this new vessel, control, or have at least some weight with the committee in a matter of this character? These recommendations indicate that this is indispensable.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think it is indispensable to comply with the estimates in every case.

Mr. DINGLEY. But Congress thought so when it passed the law directing the Secretary to cause such a vessel to be constructed.

Mr. RANDALL. But the Light-House Board have not importuned us personally about it, which would probably have been the case if it were necessary; and, besides, we knew as a matter of fact that that other vessel was released and could be utilized for this service.

Mr. DINGLEY. But that has been transferred to the buoy service.

Mr. RANDALL. I think not; I do not so understand. No such information comes to the committee. On the contrary, the officer at the head of the Light-House Board made no such recommendation.

Mr. DINGLEY. And besides, I understand that the vessel to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers is entirely unfit for the service in the Gulf and South Atlantic waters.

Mr. RANDALL. If, as has been shown, it is fit for the service in the North Atlantic, it is certainly fit for the service in the calmer and more pacific waters of the south.

Mr. CLARDY. In reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania let me say that the Light-House Board in its report, in which they ask an appropriation for the construction of a steamer for the fourth light-house district, say they have other uses for the Geranium.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no doubt of that, because they want another steamer constructed. But this is the use we thought it could be applied to, and the committee believed it therefore unnecessary to construct another vessel for the same service.

Mr. CLARDY. And I suppose there will be the same objection to that vessel as to the Fern.

Mr. RANDALL. The trouble with the Fern is that it is alleged to be too small to perform the service; but when the other vessel is applied to this service, the two can certainly perform it.

Mr. CLARDY. But the operation of two vessels will be much more expensive, I imagine; and on the score of economy we had better have one large enough.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a question. But for the present, while we have the vessels, they may as well be applied to this service.

Mr. CLARDY. They say in their report, too, that there is some other use for the Geranium.

Mr. RANDALL. That may be, but this is the use to which it should be applied. There is no question whatever that the Fern and Geranium together are sufficient to perform the necessary transportation for the mineral oils for the Light-House Board.

Mr. DINGLEY. There is a statement from the Light-House Board that they are not sufficient to perform the service.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that. It is because they want another vessel built.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH in the chair). The Chair thinks that the time allowed for debate on this amendment is exhausted.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. DINGLEY; the committee divided, and there were—ayes 55, noes 64.

Mr. DINGLEY. For the purpose of having a vote by tellers I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. DINGLEY and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 91, noes 73.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mosquito Inlet Light-Station, Florida: For completing the construction of the light-house at Mosquito Inlet, Fla., $20,000.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of line 71, page 4, between the word "bay" and the word "at" insert "at or near the anchorage in Santa Maria de Galvaez Bay."

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. The words to be inserted, should this amendment be adopted, will be found in the bill which became a law at the last session of Congress, and by authority of which these lights are to be established. In the preparation of the Book of Estimates at the Treasury Department the words were overlooked and unintentionally left out. My amendment does not increase the appropriation at all.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an error of the Department. There is an omission in the estimates, and therefore it does not appear in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For salary of one superintendent for life-saving stations and for the houses of refuge on the coasts of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida, $1,200; of one superintendent for the life-saving and life-boat stations on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, $1,500; and of one on the coasts of Lakes Ontario and Erie, $1,800.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend in line 113 by striking out "$1,200" and inserting "$1,500."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. What is the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. It is that the amendment changes existing law.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Mr. Chairman, in view of the great length of the sea coast of those States, and being somewhat familiar with the seacoast of Florida, knowing something of the duties of the superintendent of the life-saving stations and the houses of refuge, I can see no reason why other superintendents who have shorter distances to travel and not so much labor to perform should receive a greater sum of money as compensation for their services than is accorded to the superintendent of the life-saving stations for the district of South Carolina, Georgia, and Florida.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has reserved the point of order. While I will not pretend to say what the action of this House will be, I think it is an injustice to that superintendent to require him to perform his arduous duties—and there are a number of wrecks occurring continually on that coast—it is an injustice to him to require him to perform those duties and to give him, in comparison with the salaries paid to the other superintendents of life-saving stations, what seems to me inadequate pay for the services required of him. I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. RANDALL. These salaries, if I am correctly advised, are fixed by existing law; but in any event it is part of the administrative work of that branch of the Government, and should be left to the discretion of the officer in charge. I now have the law to sustain the point of order and send it to the Chair. It is the general law reorganizing the Life-Saving Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The law to which the gentleman refers will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the seventh district, embracing the eastern coast of Florida and the coast of Georgia and South Carolina, $1,200 per annum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

The Clerk read the following paragraph, under the head "Engraving and Printing:"

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereafter authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars; and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character;" and denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, or in exchange therefor upon presentation by the holders; and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state to the House that, with the exception of one word, this is the exact provision of the last appropriation act. There was some doubt whether that provision applied only to the moneys appropriated by that act. The committee, therefore, thought best to recommend the re-enactment of that provision—which I think has been acceptable to the people of the United States in every way—changing the word "hereby" as in the existing law and which controlled the act of last year, to the word "hereafter," so that if there was any doubt as to the last law, whether it was continuous or not, this word "hereafter" will make it plain and clear. But I was unwilling that these words should be changed, that "hereby" should be stricken out and "hereafter" inserted, without fully advising the House, as the committee do in their report on this bill, of this change.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Lighting of rivers: For establishing, supplying, and maintaining post-lights on the Hudson River, New York; Cape Fear River, North Carolina; Savannah River, Georgia; Saint John's River, Florida; at the mouth of Red River, Louisiana; on the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, Tennessee, and Great Kanawha Rivers; on the Columbia and Willamette Rivers, Oregon, $190,000.

Mr. RANDALL. It will be observed that in this paragraph relating to river lights the river Tennessee and the Great Kanawha River have been inserted.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Transportation of coin gold: For the transportation of gold coin from San Francisco to New York, $5,000.

Mr. SYMES. I move to amend this paragraph by adding $10,000, making the amount $15,000, for the transportation of gold coin and bullion between the different assay offices and mints of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing.

Mr. SYMES. I will reduce it to writing after I have given some explanation of it.

There has been in the appropriation bills for many years a paragraph appropriating several thousand dollars for the transportation of gold coin and bullion from one assay office or mint in the United States to another, the object of which is that when gold bullion is purchased, as it is required to be by the statute, at the different assay offices or mints in the West, it may be transported to San Francisco, New York, or Philadelphia, or wherever it is required, free of charge to the person who sells it to the Government.

Under the system which amounts to the free coinage of gold and after the establishment of assay offices and mints throughout the Western country it is certainly just that the miner who takes his gold bar to the assay office in Denver, Colo., shall receive exactly the same price for it, without any discount, as the merchant or the bullion broker who may take a gold bar to the assay offices or mints in Philadelphia or New York. There has usually been an appropriation for that purpose. I see none in this bill.

There is nothing in this bill, except $5,000, to be used for the transportation of gold coin from San Francisco to New York. Therefore I offer the amendment providing that that sum be made $15,000; $10,000 for the purpose of paying for the transportation of gold bullion or coin from one assay office or mint in the United States to another.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the amendment—that part of it which relates to bullion.

The CHAIRMAN. If the amendment be reduced to writing, the Chair will hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania on the point of order.

Mr. SYMES. I will reduce the amendment to writing, Mr. Chairman. I think, however, that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations understands it now.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that the paragraph in the bill is in accordance with the law as it now is, and that the modification proposed by the gentleman would be a change of existing law. As to the amount involved, I shall have something to say about it when we reach that part of the amendment. Perhaps I may say now that we gave $10,000 for the current year; the estimate is only $10,000 for the next year, and we are advised that the money already appropriated has not been expended.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the point of order insisted upon?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not determine the point of order on a motion not in writing. The Chair does not know what the motion is.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, a friend of mine is reducing the motion to writing. In the mean time I desire to say, in reply to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that I do not understand that my amendment changes the law. It simply adds to the appropriation for the transportation of gold coin and bullion, and in every appropriation bill passed by this House I think I may say (having examined the subject) the past ten years may be found a clause similar to this amendment. Is not that so, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. RANDALL. We are not transporters of bullion, and there is no law that I know of which permits the Government of the United States to transport bullion in this way. This is for transportation from the assay offices to the mints.

Mr. SYMES. To the mints; or, as the Treasury Department usually regulate the matter, to the assay office in New York.

Mr. RANDALL. The Government is not a transporter of bullion at all except for its own special requirements.

Mr. SYMES. I beg the gentleman's pardon, the Government is a transporter of bullion in this sense: that under the law which provides for the free coinage of gold, the Government, for its convenience and the convenience of its citizens, establishes mints and assay offices in different parts of the country, and, to enforce that law, it has gold coin and currency for the purpose of paying for gold bullion wherever it is offered, whether it be at the mint in Carson City, Nev., or at the assay office in Denver, Colo., or at the assay office in New York city.

Then the Government transfers that bullion to some mint for coinage, and it is the Government's duty, mark you, to pay the expense of the transfer. Yet, under a system characteristic of drawing distinctions between the assay offices in the Eastern cities and the assay offices in the Western States and Territories, after they buy a miner's gold bar and pay him the free-coinage price for it, so to speak, then they keep out a percentage to pay the expense of transferring the bullion to the Mint at Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL. Why not?

Mr. SYMES. Under the existing law, as it has been construed, they have no right to do that; but if we do not provide the funds to pay for that transportation, they may have some excuse for doing it.

Mr. RANDALL. The Government of the United States wants bullion. The practice is that that bullion shall be delivered where the coinage is going to take place. The proposition of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] would vary that practice and would make a law which does not exist, providing that the owner of the bullion at the mine should have the right to receive the cost of transportation to the assay office or the mint. Now, that is a course which we do not wish to enter upon.

Mr. SYMES. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say that the issue between us is this: Under the present law, the free-coinage law, and under the laws and the practice of the Treasury Department, which has established these different assay offices to carry out the free-coinage law, it is the right, under that law, of any citizen to go to the assay office in the city of Denver and demand for his gold bar as many gold dollars as there are $23\frac{22}{100}$ grains of standard gold in that bar; and he is entitled to receive those gold dollars without any discount whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I yield my time to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. I am obliged to the gentleman. Now, Mr. Chairman, it has been the practice for the last year or two—not a practice, for it is a violation of an old, well-established practice—but during the last year or two, for want of funds to pay the cost of transferring to the Mint at Philadelphia this bullion which has been bought or received under the free-coinage law by the assayer at Denver, when he proceeds to pay a man for his bullion, under that law, he keeps back a certain percentage or discount, which he reckons at a rate sufficient to pay for the transfer of the bullion to the Mint at Philadelphia.

That, Mr. Chairman, is in violation of the statute law of this country, and I will defy any lawyer, or any gentleman as intelligent as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, to contend otherwise. Therefore, I am not asking for a change of law; I am simply asking for an appropriation of $10,000 to carry out the law, so that the free-coinage law of this country may be executed as it is written on the statute-book; so that an assay office of the United States shall not go into the business of discounting the bullion of a miner when he takes it at an office in the West, and that the owner of the bullion shall receive for his gold bar as many standard dollars as there are $23\frac{22}{100}$ grains of standard gold in it. I am, in fact, asking for the enforcement of the law, not for an addition or a change.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that by the law as it now exists the Government is bound to receive at its assay offices either gold or silver bullion at its coining value. Free coinage by the Government means coinage at the mints, not at the assay offices. It is the duty of any one having gold bullion which he wishes to have coined to deliver it at the place of coinage. He may have it assayed at an assay office in order to determine its weight and fineness, to determine the quantity of pure metal in the bar. But this bullion is coined only at the mints; and under the free-coinage law the metal is to be delivered by the owner at the mint, there to be certified and stamped—not at the assay office. The Government is under no obligation, and has not assumed, to convey bullion from any and every assay office to its mints. The duty of delivering the bullion at the mint belongs to the owner of the bullion. In other words, free coinage does not include free transportation.

Mr. SYMES. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last word. I wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER]——

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is one of order. If the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] can refer to any statute which he thinks authorizes the proposed amendment, the Chair will be glad to have that statute pointed out. The merits of the proposition are not at present under debate.

Mr. SYMES. I supposed that my brief on this subject was in my desk; but I do not find it. I did not suppose this question would come up to-day. I am satisfied, however, that under the statutes providing for the free coinage of gold the miner has the right to take his bullion to a United States assay office and demand the same number of gold dollars to which he would be entitled, for instance, at the mint in Philadelphia.

Further than that, there is a statute to which I could readily turn if time were allowed, requiring the Treasurer of the United States to keep on deposit in these assay offices money to pay for this bullion at the free-coinage rate.

Mr. RANDALL. If I am correctly advised, the law provides for the receipt of this bullion at mints only, not at the assay offices. I do not think the law authorizes the deposit of bullion in this way at an assay office.

Mr. SYMES. It does; and I have cited the statutes which expressly so provide.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand the gentleman to maintain—but I do not agree with him—that under the existing law the miner may take his bullion to an assay office and there receive the same price for it that the Government would pay at any of its mints; so that the Government would be obliged to pay on this bullion the expense of transportation to Philadelphia, New Orleans, or wherever it might be coined. The Chair will no doubt be able to ascertain by reference to the statutes what is the provision of the law on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has before him section 3519 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that—

Any owner of gold bullion may deposit the same at any mint, to be formed into coin or bars for his benefit.

In the absence of any statute to the contrary exhibited to the Chair, the Chair is disposed to hold that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. SYMES. The Chair will allow me to say that there are other provisions of law—I can not turn to them at this moment—which modify the provision just read in the direction I have stated. I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether I may not have a vote upon this matter in the House; and by that time I shall be prepared to show the statute giving this right for which I contend.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know that there is any appropriation required for this purpose at all, as no money was spent by the Government last year under this head; yet as a matter of precaution, so that there may be no difficulty in this respect, we have inserted an appropriation of $5,000. I cannot accede to the proposition of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SYMES. The appropriation of $5,000 is confined to the transfer of gold coin from New York to Philadelphia.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the law provides for the receipt of this bullion at mints alone, though I cannot speak with absolute certainty.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the words "coin gold" in the heading of this paragraph be transposed, so as to read "gold coin."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection. that modification will be made.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; when a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 118) relative to certain papers in the State Department by error.

The message also announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 263) for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass., asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MAHONE, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. CAMDEN.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recoinage of gold and silver coins: For recoinage of gold and silver coins in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $20,000.

Mr. LANHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

At the end of line 628 insert—

Provided, That for a period of six months after the passage hereof, United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at their face value in payment of all dues to the United States, and shall not be again paid out or in any other manner issued. That the holder of any United States trade-dollars, during the period aforesaid, on presentation of the same at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, if said coins be not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, may receive in exchange therefor a like amount and value, dollar for dollar, in standard silver dollars or in subsidiary coins (at the option of the holder) of the United States. That the trade-dollars received by, paid to, or deposited with the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer or national depositary of the United States shall not be paid out or in any other manner issued, but, at the expense of the United States, shall be transmitted to the coinage mints and recoined into standard silver dollars. That all laws and parts of laws authorizing the coinage and issuance of United States trade-dollars are hereby repealed.

Mr. MORRISON. I object to and raise the point of order on that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. If the gentleman from Texas differs from the Chair, the Chair will hear him.

Mr. LANHAM. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois will not insist on his point of order. I fear we may not have an opportunity to pass the bill reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures in any other way during this session. I think it is important it should be passed. It is a meritorious measure that has received the earnest consideration of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. It has been reported by that committee without a dissenting voice. It is possible that the point of order may be well taken. In fact, I am assured by gentlemen who are better parliamentarians than myself that it is well taken, and I therefore can only ask the gentleman from Illinois not to insist upon it at this time, but to allow the amendment to come before the committee for action.

Mr. MORRISON. I would much like to oblige the gentleman from Texas, but must insist on the point of order, as I am opposed to the proposition itself.

Mr. LANHAM. Let me make a statement. I have changed the second section of this bill in order to obviate the objection raised by the gentleman from Illinois in the discussion of the conference report upon the surplus resolution at the last session of Congress, wherein he insisted, under the terms of the second section, that trade-dollars which were impaired might be received at the offices of the Treasury. I have changed that so as expressly to state that coins mutilated, defaced, or stamped should not be received. If that be the only objection the gentleman has to it, I have removed it by the change I have suggested.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being insisted on, the Chair sustains it, and the amendment is ruled out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of assistant custodians and janitors: For pay of assistant custodians and janitors, including all personal services in connection with all public buildings under control of the Treasury Department outside of the District of Columbia, $425,000; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall so apportion this sum as to prevent a deficiency therein.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee for some little light on this paragraph. I see that in 1885 the appropriation for custodians and janitors of public buildings was $300,000. There was another large reduction in the appropriation for the preceding year. Resulting from that reduction we find a deficiency of $94,478.29. Notwithstanding that warning, that $300,000 was insufficient for the public service, the House again appropriated only $300,000, and again a deficiency bill had to be brought in, amounting to $50,000. The result of this, notwithstanding the experience of two acts of legislation under this head forced a reduction of 30 per cent. in the working force of janitors and custodians on public buildings. The result of this freezing process of course became apparent. A large number of officers were removed, but subsequently the appropriation was restored to $400,000, and now we are asked to appropriate an amount of $425,000.

I would like the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to give us a little light on this subject and to state whether there is any good explanation for it beyond the advantage of squeezing the sponge and getting out of it everything they could of Republican custodians and janitors, and then going back to Republican figures and allowing the Democratic boys to run the public buildings. If there is any other explanation I should like to hear it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there is any politics designed in this paragraph. I should like to say, in my own city most of those are Democrats.

Mr. REED, of Maine. They had better luck than the rest.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Iowa will notice this item has been somewhat increased. In 1884 it was $300,000. I am not able to say, without the books at hand, whether, as the gentleman says, there was a deficiency. Next year there was an expenditure of $395,000, and next year about $350,000. Last year we gave $400,000, and we are advised there will be no deficiency on that amount. This year we increased it to $425,000 for the same reason we increased the amount last year. This year there are additional public buildings, requiring janitors and custodians.

I take it the increase is not political at all, but grows out of the necessity for a larger sum in taking care of an increased number of public buildings. And that is all I have to say, except that the Department asks for much more than we have given.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is not as satisfactory as I would like to have it. It seems there was $94,000 of deficiency in that appropriation of 1885, and it will not be forgotten that from one end of the country to the other the Democratic press gave great credit to the Democratic House for their economy in cutting this down to the low standard to which it was reduced. Now, when the appropriations have reached a point higher than ever, I do not think an increase of public buildings will give an explanation which will rest in the mind even of our Democracy. Why not be frank and say the reduction made in 1885 and 1886 was a political move on the political chess-board, and not in the interest of economy, as alleged.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman is mistaken, so far as the custodians of public buildings are concerned. I think he acted on the principle these men were Republicans. No charges were made against them; but they were naturally succeeded by Democrats.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Their predecessors went out when the sponge was squeezed, didn't they?

Mr. RANDALL. Nobody was squeezed.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does the gentleman not know the fact that 30 per cent. went out under the "reducing" process?

Mr. RANDALL. That may be, but it was not on account of any political considerations. The committee appropriated what their investigations led them to believe was necessary.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. But there was a deficiency. I am not discussing how they got Republicans out and Democrats in, but am asking attention to the plain facts I have stated.

Mr. RANDALL. And the Administration is in harmony, or will have to be in harmony, with the Committee on Appropriations and the House of Representatives in its economy in that particular. I hope this additional $25,000 will be more than sufficient, and that the same economy which the committee has recommended in this respect will be practiced in all of the public buildings.

But, in answer to the gentleman's first question, the additional $25,000 grows out of the increased expenditure necessitated by the care of new public buildings.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman will observe that during all of this reducing process in 1886 the estimates were $431,000, and in 1887 they were $474,000; but notwithstanding the estimates, notwithstanding the deficiencies, you held it down to $300,000, until 30 per cent. of the officials were squeezed out to make room for others to come in.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that anybody was squeezed out. They were invited out politely. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That I admit; but it was done under the plea of economy, I believe.

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; it was done for the good of the service.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And under the plea that "we as Democrats want the offices."

Mr. REED, of Maine. It was a very shrewd expedient, then, for he has got credit for economy and got the Democratic janitors in office, too. [Laughter and applause.] A very shrewd thing; only equaled by his skillful answers to you. [Renewed laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fuel, lights, and water for public buildings: For fuel, lights, water, electric-light plants, including repairs thereto, in such buildings as may be designated by the Secretary of the Treasury, for electric-light wiring, and miscellaneous items required by the janitors and firemen in the proper care of the buildings, furniture, and heating apparatus, exclusive of personal services, for all public buildings, including marine hospitals, under the control of the Treasury Department, inclusive of new buildings, $600,000. And the appropriation herein made for gas in any of the public buildings in the District of Columbia under the control of the Treasury Department shall include the rental or use of any gas-governor, gas-purifier, or other device for reducing the expenses of gas, when first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and ordered by him in writing: Provided, That no sum shall be paid for such rental or use of such gas-governor, gas-purifier, or device greater than the one-half part of the amount of money actually saved thereby.

Mr. RANDALL. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 29, in line 681, after the word "dollars," strike out all that follows down to and including line 690.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized, in case of threatened or actual epidemic of cholera or yellow fever, to use the unexpended balance of the sum appropriated therefor by the act approved August 4, 1886, in aid of State and local boards or otherwise, in his discretion, in preventing and suppressing the spread of the same and for maintaining quarantine and maritime inspections at points of danger.

Mr. DAVIS. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding at end of paragraph the words "The President is authorized to use of the same unexpended balance a sum not exceeding $10,000 for the purpose of investigating the merits of the method practiced in Mexico and Brazil for preventing yellow fever by inoculation."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order upon that.

Mr. DAVIS. A bill providing for this investigation was introduced by the Committee on Commerce at the first session of this Congress, but the time allotted for its consideration did not permit its passage. The vote, however, upon incidental questions connected therewith showed that it commended itself to a majority of the House. Afterwards it was modified; the appropriation was diminished, and in that form it received the unanimous support of the committee, and would doubtless have passed the House with almost entire unanimity if it could have been reached for consideration.

I do not desire to consume any of the time of the committee, as I understand this is not objected to by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am satisfied that all will recognize the importance of such a proceeding.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a change of the law. I think the discretion is already vested in the President of the United States, and power conferred upon him to look into just such matters. I do not think that the Congress of the United States had better arbitrarily direct him in a case like this where he has full discretion already.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand the matter has been brought to the attention of the President since the last session of Congress, and he expressly declined to act, because he did not think he had authority under the provisions of the law. I am satisfied that any member of the House who looks at it will take the same view of the case.

Mr. RANDALL. I was called upon in this connection by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], and we conferred with reference to it, examining the question quite thoroughly. If the gentleman from Louisiana, who is now in his seat, will state what his opinion is in that direction, as to the discretion of the President, I shall be glad.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to make the point of order that there was no law for this.

Mr. RANDALL. No; but that this changed the existing law. I would be glad to hear the gentleman from Louisiana, as I have asked him to make a statement.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I had the same idea that my friend from Massachusetts has, that this paragraph in the bill, perhaps, should be amended so as to give the President authority, in his discretion, to send one or more medical officers of the Government to Brazil and Mexico to make an investigation of the prevention of the yellow fever by the process of inoculation. In looking into this matter, and after talking with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I sought an interview with Dr. Hamilton, of the Marine-Hospital Service, in which he stated to me that an amendment of the law in this particular was not necessary, because now, under the wording of the law making an appropriation for an epidemic fund, that authority was already vested in the President, and that the President has at this time the power, which has been exercised on certain occasions in the past, to detail officers of the medical service of the Government to make similar investigations as that contemplated by the amendment of my friend from Massachusetts.

It was because of this statement to me by Dr. Hamilton that I withdrew my intention of proposing an amendment similar to the one offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. RANDALL. I insist on the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. If I can be heard for a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. DAVIS. I wish to state the plain language of the provision only permits the President to act in case of threatened or actual epidemic, and I beg to state to the House that that is the view of the President of the United States himself on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Chair understands the gentleman from Massachusetts correctly, he concedes that it would change the present law. If it does it is out of order.

The Clerk read the following paragraph under the heading "Department of the Interior—Public Buildings."

That as soon as completed as provided for in the sundry civil act approved August 4, 1886, the Secretary of the Interior shall, within the fiscal year 1888, cause to be removed to the Pension building, the General Land Office, Indian Office, Bureau of Education, office of Commissioner of Railroads, Bureau of Labor, and the office of the agent for the payment of pensions in the District of Columbia, and office of the Geological Survey, and vacate the buildings rented for and now occupied by said offices and bureaus, or portions thereof: Provided, further, That the office of the Quartermaster-General shall, on or before the 31st day of January, 1887, be removed to rooms in the east wing of the new State, War, and Navy building.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to correct an error in line 817, by the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "1887" where it occurs, and insert "1888;" and strike out the word "east" and insert in lieu thereof the word "west."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For the United States Geological Survey: For the Geological Survey, and the classification of the public lands, and examination of the geological structure, mineral resources, and products of the national domain, and to continue the preparation of a geological map of the United States, including the pay of temporary employés in the field and office, and all other necessary expenses, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $400,000.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations why it is that these expenses of the Geological Survey are put down in a lump sum of $400,000. I notice that the expenses of the Coast and Geodetic Survey are all itemized, running through thirteen pages; while the expenses of the Geological Survey, including this and the paragraphs which follow, cover only a page and a half.

Here are $400,000 in a lump, sum for what, in my opinion, is a very extravagant bureau extravagantly conducted. Unless there is itemizing it is absolutely impossible, if it is desired to make an amendment, to know how to get at it. The law, as I understand, requires that these things shall be itemized. That law is enforced as against the Coast and Geodetic Survey. Why not enforce the same law as against the Geological Survey, and require its expenditures to be itemized?

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to have that done.

Mr. HERBERT. It seems to me that could be done as well with reference to one bureau as with reference to the other.

Mr. RANDALL. I think so.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will insist on that hereafter. Meanwhile I will offer an amendment with a view to accomplishing that purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. I will listen to the gentleman's amendment. And I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman from Alabama, that I supposed the Committee on Appropriations had followed every recommendation made by the commission, of which the gentleman from Alabama was a member, in connection with this bureau, especially in relation to printing and other matters. I do not now recollect—my memory may be at fault—but I do not remember to have read of any recommendation from that commission as to the subdivision of that $400,000. But if the gentleman will propose an amendment which looks to a subdivision of the items and the distinct payment of each officer of that bureau, I will hail it with pleasure.

Mr. HERBERT. As I understand, there is a general law now providing that these things shall be itemized.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know where that law is.

Mr. HERBERT. It is the law of 1885.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a practice in the committee to require such itemizing, and a very good one. It ought to apply everywhere, and hence I approve the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RYAN. I will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that the law he refers to relates only to printing.

Mr. HERBERT. I was under the impression there was such a law. I will offer now the amendment I have indicated.

Mr. RANDALL. All the itemizing made as to the Coast and Geodetic Survey was the result of years of struggle; and if anybody wants to undertake a like struggle with reference to the Geological Survey he will be very apt to have my co-operation.

While the gentleman from Alabama is preparing his amendment I want to say further that as regards the Coast Survey this system of itemizing was begun by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] when chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but was not entirely completed within the limit of his two years of service on that committee. I followed him and took up his work in that particular; and only last year did we finally succeed in the accomplishing of the object which he inaugurated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest that while the gentleman from Alabama is preparing his amendment the Clerk may continue the reading of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I consent to that.

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The Clerk read the amendment proposed by Mr. HERBERT, as follows:

Add at the end of line 936 the following:
"And hereafter the estimates for all moneys wanted by the Geological Survey shall be itemized."

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For furnishing new building for convict and homicidal insane persons, $5,000.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 985, insert "For cottage at cemetery, $900."

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman, I had occasion recently to visit the Government Hospital for the Insane, where the insane of the Army and Navy, of the Marine Corps, of the revenue-cutter service, and of the national homes for disabled volunteer soldiers are treated. My business was to make inquiry about a soldier from my district who died there and was buried in the hospital cemetery. This cemetery is nearly a mile distant from the hospital, and there is no provision for its proper keeping or for the protection of the soldier dead who lie buried there—no protection from the ghouls who desecrate the graves of the dead. This fact I know is a matter of much concern and distressful apprehension to the friends and relatives of these dead. It seems to me that it is only necessary to bring the matter to the attention of the House in order to have the proper provision made for the protection and safe-keeping of this cemetery. This amendment proposes to appropriate $900 for the erection of a cottage at the cemetery grounds as a residence for a man who shall take charge of those grounds, keep them in order, and protect them from unlawful intrusion. There is no one in charge there now, and no provision whatever for the care of the cemetery.

I do not care to discuss the matter at any length. It is enough to state it. It seems to me it is a case that addresses itself to the House's sense of what is right and decent. It seems to me that the services to the country of the soldiers who are buried in that cemetery entitle them to protection for their final resting-place, and I hope that this amendment will be adopted, in order that in future that cemetery may have the protection which it requires and which heretofore it has not had.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no authority of law for such an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. What does the gentleman from Ohio say to the point of order that there is no authority of law for the appropriation?

Mr. THOMPSON. Do I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to make that point of order now against this amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order was made at the beginning and reserved.

Mr. THOMPSON. I hope the point will not be insisted upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I am sorry that I am not able to accommodate the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Benicia arsenal, Benicia, California: For new machinery for carpenter and machine shops, $3,000.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to that paragraph.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On line 1076 after the word "dollars" insert "for construction, preservation, and repair of roads, walks, and fences, and preservation and repairs of public buildings, $10,000."

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is an exact quotation from the Book of Estimates and the recommendation of the Secretary of War. That might be said to constitute some argument in its favor, to some minds it ought to constitute a conclusive argument in favor of the amendment, granting him to be competent and informed, and I assume that he is both. It seems to me like a business proposition that we should preserve those things that are in existence from further decay, and certainly the amount of $10,000 recommended by the Secretary of War is within the principle of a government economically administered. I hope, sir, the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. The estimate for the preservation and repair of the arsenals is $50,000. We have the entire sum, and it is sufficient for all. The head of the ordnance bureau stated before the Committee on Appropriations that there need not be any separate provision made for repairs of arsenals, and he made that statement in the presence of the Secretary of War, who was before the committee at the same time. I hope the amendment will not prevail, and I do not think that the Benicia arsenal will suffer at all in consequence of its being voted down.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 52, nays 75.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Piccatiny powder depot, Dover, N. J.: For erecting magazines and other necessary buildings, cleaning, draining, and grading grounds, making roads, building fences, and all expenses incident thereto, $35,000.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the words "thirty-five," in line 1085, and inserting "one hundred," so that the appropriation embraced in the paragraph just read will be $100,000 instead of $35,000.

I offer this amendment in the interest, as I believe, of a true economy. Its object is to complete at once the work in this powder depot which has been in progress for eight or ten years, and which ought to have been completed before this time. It is necessary work, and for these reasons: It is the only depot for the storage of powder which the Government has on the Atlantic coast for its navy-yards, its forts, and its arsenals. It has been ascertained that powder can not be stored in any of the forts upon the coast without a deterioration so rapid as to make such storage criminally extravagant. Experiments have established the fact, which is not disputed, that this deterioration is at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, so that in eight years the powder stored in any of these places would, by the dampness of the atmosphere, be rendered absolutely worthless.

Recognizing this scientific truth, it has been the policy of the Government, a policy pursued with a fair amount of assiduity, to build within the 2,000 acres which have been selected for this purpose in the vicinity of Dover, N. J., remote from the influence of sea air and where for local reasons the surrounding atmosphere is very dry, an extensive collection of magazines, in which may be stored all the powder necessary for the Atlantic coast. The quantity of powder necessary to be stored here for the ordinary purposes of the Atlantic coast is estimated at 50,000 barrels. Under the appropriations already made for this purpose there have been constructed during seven or eight years three of these magazines, and the appropriation proposed in this bill will enable the Government to complete the fourth. But, in order to store all the 50,000 barrels necessary for ordinary purposes, it is important we should have a fifth magazine. While the appropriation of $35,000 will complete the fourth, the appropriation of $100,000 which I propose will not only do that, but will enable the Government to construct a fifth. These five magazines will then be complete, and all the powder of the Government necessary for the Atlantic coast will be safely stored. As this work must be done, why should it not be done immediately, in order that the powder now scattered about in forts where it is deteriorating at the rate I have stated may be gathered and preserved in this national depot?

Mr. RANDALL. While this amendment proposes to increase the appropriation to $100,000, the estimate of the War Department is only $50,000. Besides, we have a statement from the Chief of Ordnance that the amount we gave last year for this purpose was sufficient to complete one of these magazines. We propose to give the same amount this year, and thus add another magazine. I think the amendment ought not to prevail, as it proposes to expend double the amount of the estimate.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. Chairman, the point made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL], from the fact that the appropriation proposed in my amendment is not asked by the Department and is not embraced in the estimates, would seem to be sound; but the reason this sum is not asked by the Department and the reason it is not in the estimates is that the Department have for years urged just the reasons which I now urge, some years asking $175,000, some, $150,000, and some, $125,000 for this purpose, and have always found the gentleman from Pennsylvania unwilling to give any more than a sum sufficient to build a single magazine. On that account the officers of the Department have lost courage, and in this instance have simply asked what they thought he would be willing to grant.

Mr. RANDALL. A rare instance of "loss of courage."

Mr. PHELPS. They have never yielded their judgment that these magazines ought all to be built promptly, and that the necessary appropriation ought to be made.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I think I have uniformly co-operated with the gentleman from New Jersey in reference to this matter, and have always been willing, so far as my vote was concerned—the only vote I could control—that enough money should be given each year to build a new magazine. This, I think, is all that even the Department has in view. I hope the gentleman will not press his amendment, for I am quite sure he will agree that the Department is better advised in this matter than either of us.

Mr. PHELPS. I must press the amendment in the interest of economy; but I am not unwilling to admit that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, according to his light, has been uniformly kind and generous in his treatment of this matter.

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. PHELPS was rejected; there being—ayes 51, noes 76.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The committee rose informally; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. NEECE reported that the Committee on Enrolled Bills had examined and found truly enrolled the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin; when the Speaker signed the same.

INTERNATIONAL COPYRIGHT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for your information a report from the Secretary of State, inclosing the correspondence which has passed between the Department of State and the Governments of Switzerland and France on the subject of international copyright since the date of my message of July 9, 1886, on this question.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, December 15, 1886.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For telegraphing reports, messages, and other meteorological information in connection with the observation and report of storms, $125,000.

Mr. SYMES. I move an amendment in line 1225 by striking out $125,000 and inserting in lieu thereof $138,000.

Mr. Chairman, this increases the appropriation $13,000. It makes it $138,000. That is the amount of the present estimate for the next year.

It seems to be necessary, from all the information I can obtain, to increase this appropriation $13,000, to make it in accordance with the estimate of the Signal Service Bureau and to make available all the valuable information obtained by that bureau.

It is a fact that over five thousand letters have been received by the Signal Service Bureau during the past six months asking for reports in certain cities and towns throughout the country where they do not now receive the same; it is a fact that now these Signal Service reports are received and made available at the expense of the Government in four hundred cities and towns of the United States. It is a further fact that over one thousand cities and towns in the United States which are calling for these reports do not obtain them at the expense of the Government, but they are paid for by associations and municipal governments.

I submit to this House whether or not, if we go to the expense of maintaining the bureau, if we expend a few hundred thousand dollars a year in keeping its machinery in motion and advancing it in accordance with the progress and material prosperity of the country, we shall not increase this appropriation $13,000, so that this information may be made available.

It will not be denied, sir, on this floor that the reports of the Signal Service giving notice of approaching storms, and particularly of cold waves and blizzards, save millions and millions of money. As I say, this only asks for a pittance of $13,000, so this information may be made more completely available. I can show from statistics and reports of that office this $13,000 is very much needed to make available the few hundred thousand dollars expended in support of this bureau and to keep up the signal stations and for telegraphing the information. It is asked that it may be distributed more widely in the country.

Mr. RYAN. I do not think this amendment is necessary unless it is the disposition of the House to enlarge and expand this service. The expenditure for this branch of the service last year was something like $7,000 less than the appropriation. The thing to be taken into consideration is that under the decision of the Department, where subsidized lines are used the cost is placed to the credit of those lines, as required by law, which would make a difference of thirteen or fourteen thousand dollars, which added to the $7,000 would make something like $20,000 less than last year was required of actual cash expenditure. You will see our reduction is made on that basis.

Mr. RANDALL. I quite agree with my colleague on the committee; there is no need to increase the appropriation.

Mr. RYAN. I do not know but that this may be necessary in the interest of good service. It is not necessary, in my judgment, unless the disposition of the House is to enlarge and expand the service.

Mr. SYMES. I demand a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 20, noes 65.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses of storm, cautionary, offshore, cold-wave, and other signals on the sea, lake, and Gulf coasts of the United States, and in the interior, announcing the probable approach and force of storms, including the pay of observers, services of operators, lanterns, and flags, $10,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I move in line 1230 to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven"; and I will simply say to the House this increases the appropriation $1,000, and $1,000 only. According to the estimate for this service the money is imperatively needed and needed in the interest of commerce. I understand there is no particular objection to the amendment, and I hope it will pass.

Mr. RYAN. The appropriation for that service in 1885 was $10,000. Last year it was $11,000 by a clerical mistake. For the current year it is $10,000, as it is in this bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 64.

Mr. BUCHANAN. No quorum.

The Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Inasmuch as it is evident more than half the members of the House are attending business elsewhere, I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to make inquiry of the chairman of the committee whether there is anywhere in the Book of Estimates provision for repairing the observatory on Mount Washington, as recommended last year?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not remember that there was. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. RYAN] is perhaps better authority on the signal service than I. I have no recollection of this matter.

Mr. RYAN. I think no such recommendation came to us.

Mr. GALLINGER. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that no such recommendation was made, and I have no amendment, therefore, to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

For rent, hire of civilian employés, furniture, light, stationery, ice, stoves and fixtures, repairs, rent of telephones, text-books, lumber, and other expenses of offices maintained as stations of observation outside of Washington, District of Columbia, $35,000.

Mr. SYMES. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend lines 1244 and 1245 by striking out $35,000 and inserting $40,000.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, this, as will be seen, increases the appropriation $5,000. It is applicable to that branch of the Signal Service particularly which consists in the establishment of offices and the payment of employés, rent, &c.

I am informed, sir, by estimates that have been made by the Signal Office, in accordance with requests from associations of citizens in the Western country, that it would enable that office or bureau to establish five additional stations, one in the northeast corner of Colorado, or northwest corner of Kansas, for the benefit of the range and ranch cattle interests in that vicinity; also one at Falstaff, Ariz., for the same purpose; one at Rollins, in Wyoming Territory, for this purpose, and particularly for the purpose of notifying those shipping large quantities of fruit from the Pacific coast to the States on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, and sometimes farther east, in the winter season of the approach of cold waves and freezing weather.

It is a well-known fact to merchants dealing in fruit, and shipping from the Pacific coast and the Salt Lake valley towards the east, that by the failure to obtain information relative to the approach of a cold wave immense quantities of fruit are damaged by freezing. Millions of money will in the future be lost on such shipments of fruit, consisting sometimes of whole train-loads, unless there are three or four stations established on the Pacific railroad for the purpose of affording such information.

Then, too, it is in the interest of the men engaged in the cattle industry along the Rocky Mountains that I ask this mere pittance of $5,000 to be added to the appropriation for the purpose of establishing these additional stations in the discretion of the Signal Bureau, and where the western communities may ask for them as being most necessary for their protection.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 72, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SYMES. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is too late to make the point of order after the result of the vote has been announced.

Mr. SYMES. How can I tell what the vote is until the Chair announces it? I stated that no quorum had voted as soon as I could. I was watching to make the point, and as soon as the Chairman had announced the vote I rose to my feet and made the point.

Mr. RANDALL. I trust the gentleman will not insist upon that point of order.

Mr. SYMES. I think it is time we should insist upon something for the purpose of the public good. If we can not get an appropriation of $5,000 to save millions of dollars of loss, it is time to make a point of order or to take some steps to correct the evil.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to state that he has no interest whatever in the matter, but simply announced the vote and then the result, and it was after that that the question of a quorum was raised. The Chair thinks it is too late.

Mr. SYMES. Then I have another amendment to offer to that paragraph. I move to amend lines 1244 and 1245 by inserting in lieu of $35,000, $41,000 instead of $40,000, the last amendment.

Now, I desire to say that we are expending hundreds of thousands of dollars for the purpose of maintaining a Signal Service Bureau. We have stations, or are supposed to have them, already established all over the American continent, where they will be available to utilize this information for the benefit of the commerce of the country. There is a new branch of commerce which has grown up within the last few years, and which now reaches an immense amount annually in the Western States. It is the shipment during all seasons of the year of millions of dollars' worth of fine fruits from the shores of the Pacific to the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains and to the Western States, where we do not at the present time raise any fruit, comparatively speaking.

I repeat, sir, it often happens that the proper information, by signal stations at proper points, of the approach of a cold wave will save the destruction of a great many train loads of valuable fruit. Also, sir, the information of a cold wave or blizzard from the North to the range and ranch cattle business will often save the destruction of thousands of valuable cattle. I am asking now an appropriation of only $6,000 additional for the purpose of protecting these great interests.

We find here the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations preparing this bill for sixty millions of people. This particular branch of the bill is a very important one; and I apprehend if you take the percentage of increase that I am asking at this time, it will not equal the percentage of increase during the past year of population, wealth, and commerce throughout the portions of the country where it is sought to establish this additional signal service.

I do not envy a gentleman who lives on the Atlantic coast, whose whole horizon of narrow-minded statesmanship is bounded by a line which does not cross the Mississippi or Missouri, or the plains of the Rocky Mountains, but stops when it gets out near the Mississippi River.

I say to him, sir, that if he does not progress far enough in his principles of statesmanship to extend the same privileges to the people throughout the great northwestern country, the people of that country will see that men are made chairmen of Committees on Appropriations whose vision extends beyond the few signal offices of the Atlantic coast, which we have always supported, to give notification of approaching storms that may destroy commerce in the coasting trade. The trade that I am referring to is just as important as the coasting trade along the coast of the Atlantic Ocean; and I ask this House to give us this pittance that we may protect the interests of commerce throughout the eastern and western slopes of the Rocky Mountains. [Applause.]

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Nevada——

Several MEMBERS. Colorado.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Colorado, that my vision in this bill has extended beyond the East; that there has been more appropriation of money for the Pacific coast than usual in this bill, and relatively more than for years past.

Now, I can perform my duty here, I think, and understand it moderately well; and I do not propose to be driven or have any terrors exhibited here to frighten me from that line of duty; and certainly that will not be done by the words of such demagoguery as have emanated from the gentleman from the Western State.

Mr. SYMES. I move to strike out the last word. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. The word "demagoguery."

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, when he says that he does not propose to give way upon this matter after there has been what he calls demagogue talk, that he had better read in the dictionary the meaning of the term. I say that while I may not be a particular critic as to the meaning of such words, yet it seems to me that the definition of a demagogue, as given by the best political writers, applies to men who are pretended leaders of great parties, and who have, as their only stock in trade, the fact that they can go through an appropriation bill with a cheese-paring knife, and can cut down a few dollars here and a few dollars there, and make the whole bill $5,000,000 less than last year, and then have their strikers send it all over the country by telegraph that they have benefited the nation and the Democratic party by a great big plea of economy.

This is the cheapest character of statesmanship and demagoguery that ever led our country on to material prosperity. When the United States statutes provide that the salary of a certain officer at a certain office in the western country is $3,000, we find an appropriation in the gentleman's bills of $2,500 to pay a $3,000 salary. And we find the Supreme Court, sitting in the center of this Capitol, holding that that officer at the close of the year, after having received his $2,500, may sue in the Court of Claims and recover the other $500 and mulct the United States in costs. I watched it here in the former session of this Congress; and as I was a new member I did not feel like standing here and leading in the criticism of it. I propose henceforth to do so if necessary, and I propose to hold up before the country that great and grand character of statesmanship which proposes to appropriate less money to an officer than the statutes of the United States give him in the face of the decision of the Supreme Court that he may collect the balance and mulct the United States in costs. If that is the statesmanship of the great leaders of the Democratic party, God save the country from such leadership. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. RANDALL. The Democratic party will live, thrive, and control in this country without regard to the gentleman's opinion as to its leadership. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not know of any salary changed in this bill at all. I only wanted to correct the gentleman's statement of facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will treat the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Colorado as withdrawn. The question is on the amendment proposed by that gentleman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 89.

Mr. SYMES. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 69, noes 96.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one brigadier-general and sixteen second lieutenants, $29,500; for longevity pay to officers of the Signal Corps, to be paid with current monthly pay, $4,680; for pay of not exceeding one hundred and fifty sergeants, thirty corporals, and two hundred and ninety privates, including payment due on discharge, $180,000; for mileage to all officers when traveling on Signal Service duty under orders, $5,000: Provided, That in disbursing this sum the maximum sum to be allowed and paid shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, the cost of transportation actually paid, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare; for commutation of quarters to commissioned officers at places where there are no public quarters, $5,500; in all, $223,680. And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed five commissioned officers of the regular Army, to be exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law; and the regular Army officers herein authorized to be detailed for the Signal Corps shall receive their pay and allowances from the appropriation for the support of the Army; and no money herein appropriated shall be used for pay and allowances of second lieutenants appointed or to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps, under the provisions of the act approved June 20, 1878, in excess of the number of sixteen, or for the pay and allowances of exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against the proviso beginning on line 1276 and extending down to the word "car fare," in line 1280.

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order was made on the provision which is now in the law, when it was pending at the last session, and the Chair decided that it was merely a limitation of the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is willing to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] on the point of order if he desires; but it seems that this proviso does not change the law but simply limits this particular appropriation. Does the gentleman desire to be heard upon the point?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Having been temporarily absent, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 1261, with the view of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will allow the amendment to be read for information, the right of objection being reserved.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 1261 strike out "7" and insert "12;" so that the paragraph will read:
"For observations, and expenses incidental thereto, announcing the probable approach and severity of frosts or rains, for the benefit of the cotton region of the United States, $12,000."

Mr. RANDALL. We have given the amount of the estimate, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to going back to consider the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I trust that the chairman of the committee will hear me in relation to this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Chairman, upon inquiry I have ascertained that the amount proposed by the committee is the same which has been heretofore appropriated for the purposes specified in this clause; but I have ascertained, also, that it is entirely inadequate to the magnitude of the interests which are designed to be protected and promoted. Take my own State (Mississippi) for an example, which will illustrate the facts as to others. Permit me to read an extract from a letter from the Chief Signal Officer. In reply to a communication which I addressed to him I had the honor to receive the letter from which I will read:

I would say that there is no doubt as to the advantage which would result to he local weather service of your State by the establishment of two full meteorological stations of this service within its limits, one at the capital and one at the southern extremity of the State, on the Gulf. Your State service is in cooperation with the Signal Service in the distribution of cold-wave warnings, and, although of recent organization, I have received many statements showing the value of the work of the service to the people of the State. I am not able to place these additional stations in your State, owing to the limited number of men and the small appropriations. It will require probably $2,500 for each additional station, &c.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the sum proposed by the committee is but $7,000 for the protection of the great cotton interests of the Southern States. I submit that it is entirely inadequate, and that the sum which I propose, $12,000, is a mere bagatelle compared with the magnitude of the industry designed to be benefited. I will not consume the time of the committee further than to express the hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. The amount given in the bill is the amount of the estimate, and the amount which has been given for several years past. I do not think it safe for us to exceed the amount of the estimates in the manner now proposed. I concur in all that the gentleman from Mississippi has said touching the importance of this service; but I do not concede the propriety of appropriating a greater amount than is asked by those who execute this part of the Government service.

Mr. BUCHANAN. We were unable to hear distinctly on this side the statement just made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL]. Does he state that the appropriation embraced in the bill is the amount of the estimate in full?

Mr. RANDALL. It is.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I have just read to the committee a communication from the Chief Signal Officer, stating that the amount which the bill proposes to appropriate is inadequate, and that this service is important. This is a sufficient answer to the point just made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I take it these estimates come from that same officer.

Mr. BARKSDALE. The estimate is inadequate, though it may come from him. His communication to me settles that point.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I did not hear all that was said by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] in support of this amendment, but I have no doubt he presented very clearly good reasons for its adoption. I think there is probably no interest which requires greater protection in this regard than the cotton interests of the Southern States. The Signal Service Bureau is frequently enabled to predict during the spring and early summer the approach of a frost or any storm which is likely to injure the crop. Hence the importance of this amendment.

Sir, I am satisfied that when enough of these great interests of the West and South and other parts of the country combine, the narrow-minded statesmanship that has kept out of this bill to-day two little amendments designed to protect great interests in this country will be voted down in this House. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi will be adopted.

I desire to add that when I refer to the "leaders" on this committee or any of the "leaders" on the other side of the House, I except from my references the distinguished, undisputed leader, my friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN]. [Laughter.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. BARKSDALE, it was rejected, there being—ayes 19, noes 53.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL CEMETERIES.

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents of national cemeteries, pay of laborers and other employés, purchase of tools and materials, $100,000.

For superintendents of national cemeteries: For pay of seventy-three superintendents of national cemeteries, $60,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand some gentlemen here desire to get away from the House to-day a little earlier than usual. I do not wish to impose on the good nature of the House. We have made such good progress in the consideration of this bill that I want to show my appreciation of the fact. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

PRINTING AND BINDING DEFICIENCY.

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to call attention to the fact that this is an "urgent deficiency" bill, and contains one item at least which requires that the bill become a law by next Saturday night.

IMPROVEMENT OF FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVERS.

Mr. RANDALL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back with a favorable recommendation the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Attorney-General is hereby directed to report to this House at his earliest convenience the amounts due to the several commissioners to ascertain flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, arising under an act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin," approved March 3, 1875.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has there been an adverse report in that matter?

Mr. PAYNE. There has been no report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be agreed to subject to the rules.

REBATE ON IMPORTED MATERIAL.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be directed to inquire into the subject, and if, in their opinion, it be for the public interest, to prepare and report to the Senate a bill providing for the payment of a rebate upon all imported materials which are incorporated with domestic material, or which may be converted into other articles without incorporation with domestic material and exported to foreign countries for sale, thereby providing for the extension of our foreign trade by placing the domestic producer and manufacturer upon a fair basis of competition with foreign producers and manufacturers in foreign markets without reducing the price of American labor or in any wise interfering with the existing prices of labor or production in the home market.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, in regard to this matter, which is not a new one, and to which I have endeavored to call attention during several Congresses, I wish to say just a word, and that is that the objections sometimes urged to a general rebate upon foreign materials manufactured into domestic commodities for exportation and sale in a foreign market is the difficulty in the practical administration of such a law. But I have found by inquiry of Treasury officials and others that in their opinion there would be no serious difficulty in its administration. It is already the law with reference to materials used in several industries, and the same machinery which is necessary in the administration of the law with reference to those articles, by a slight extension, could be made to cover nearly everything that we manufacture in this country from foreign materials or in part from foreign materials that might by suitable encouragement find their way for sale in foreign countries.

If this be so, if there be found to be no practical or insuperable objection in the way of administration, the result would be the building up of a business that we have not at all now—the sale of American diversified manufactures in the markets of the world, placing the American manufacturer, without injury to American labor or a reduction of American wages, upon the same basis as the foreign manufacturer in his own markets or in those of other countries to which he may export for sale.

It has seemed to me for a long time that upon this line there could be legislation which, while not interfering with the control of our own markets for our own manufacturers and producers, would yet give the opportunity of a great extension of our foreign trade, and that too without disturbing the laws under which our domestic prosperity has been built up, and by the preservation of which alone can that industry and prosperity be retained.

I hope that the Committee on Finance will take the matter into serious consideration, so that, if not at the present session, yet, before long, at some future session, there may be a bill carefully provided extending the principles already adopted with reference to several industries in such a way as to cover nearly everything that we can produce for exportation and for sale abroad.

The resolution was agreed to.

MISSOURI RIVER APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that the resolution which I submitted yesterday may be taken up for disposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas in the appropriation in river and harbor bill of 1886 for the Missouri River it was required that work should be continued at Omaha, Plattsmouth, Eastport, and Brownsville, in Nebraska and Iowa:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate in what manner the Missouri River Commission apportioned said money so appropriated, and whether any portion was ordered to continue the work at the points above mentioned as provided in said river and harbor bill, and if the Secretary of War approved the refusal of the board so to continue work at the above points.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire the Chief Clerk to insert in the resolution the points mentioned by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] yesterday. I send to the desk a copy of the resolution with the points mentioned in it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution as modified will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas in the appropriation in the river and harbor bill of 1866 for the Missouri River it was required that work should be continued at Atchison, Saint Joseph, Fort Leavenworth Reservation, Arrow Rock, and Kansas City in Kansas and Missouri, and Omaha, Plattsmouth, Eastport, and Brownsville in Nebraska and Iowa:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to inform the Senate in what manner the Missouri River Commission apportioned said money so appropriated, and whether any portion was ordered to continue the work at the points above mentioned, as provided in said river and harbor bill, and if the Secretary of War approved the refusal of the board so to continue work at the above points.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, only one word further. I stated yesterday with great distinctness, as I supposed, that the point in dispute now between the Missouri River Commission and the Congress of the United States was a clean-cut distinction, made some two years ago, when that very question was up for consideration in the Senate as an amendment to the then river and harbor appropriation bill; and I stated distinctly yesterday that this matter of difference caused the defeat of the river and harbor bill in March, 1885. From that proposition the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN], and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER], members of the Committee on Commerce, at first dissented, and insisted that the position was not as stated by myself.

I only desire now in this connection to express my gratification that the Senator from Michigan, a member of the Committee on Commerce, and who had charge of the bill in March, 1885, after fully examining the RECORD found that the statement of fact as I had made it—the position as stated there between the river commission and Congress—was correct, and it appeared in the RECORD, and that the matter of dissent on the part of the Committee on Commerce from the position which I had taken was a mistake which they had made in supposing it was some other bill to which reference was made.

When I suggested the position of the Missouri River Commission I ought to have stated that the position of the commission was dictated by a majority of that board, but that the minority of the commission, those appointed from civil life—one upon the board from Missouri and one from Nebraska—opposed the position taken by the Army engineers.

The difficulty is that the Army engineers who are controlling the Mississippi River as well as the Missouri River Commission, are determined that every appropriation, as far as they can, even assuming power to do it, made by Congress shall be expended in carrying out their theory, which is only a theory. In justice to the civil engineers on the Missouri River Commission I desire to say that they dissented; and, since this appropriation was passed at the last session, in their conferences they have insisted and desired that the money should be expended as Congress had directed; but the Army engineers, being a majority of that board, with their usual pertinacity insisted upon seizing upon Congress and repealing its acts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the resolution as modified.

The resolution as modified was agreed to.

AID TO COMMON SCHOOLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask an order for reprinting the bill (S. 194) the edition of which has been exhausted.

Ordered, That Senate bill 194 be reprinted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that bill?

Mr. BLAIR. It relates to national aid to common schools.

The order was agreed to.

MYRON E. DUNLAP.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate for the consideration at this time of the bill (H. R. 2013) being Order of Business 1649.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap."

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be read.

Mr. HOAR. I inquire for information whether it will take any time.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not think it will. There is a report on it from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Myron E. Dunlap, late first lieutenant of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, was cashiered from the service for tendering his resignation; and

Whereas said dismissal was based upon insufficient grounds: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the said First Lieut. Myron E. Dunlap, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery, be, and he is hereby, honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, as if he had been regularly mustered out of the military service of the United States on the 23d day of July, 1864; and the Secretary of War is hereby directed to enter upon the proper records of the War Department the corrections made by this act of the military record of said officer: Provided, That this act shall never be construed so as to grant any pay or allowance to the beneficiary under the same.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the report be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. CAMERON July 6, 1886:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap, submit the following report:

The facts out of which this claim for relief arises will be found clearly stated in House Report No. 50, first session, Forty-eighth Congress, which report is hereto annexed.

It appears that the reasons set forth in this report fully establish the justness of the claim, and the committee therefore report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

Myron E. Dunlap entered the military service of the United States as second lieutenant of Company I, Seventy-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers. His associates in that regiment bear testimony to his fidelity to duty as an officer during the time he served with it. He was honorably discharged from that regiment on the 6th day of December, 1862. The motives which led to his discharge were these: His health had become impaired and he felt unable to perform the duties devolving upon him. He subsequently entered the military service as first lieutenant in the Fourteenth New York Artillery, and served with that regiment until the 23d day of January, 1864, when he was sentenced by a general court-martial to be cashiered and to be forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust under the United States Government.

During the time he served in the Fourteenth Regiment of Artillery he made an excellent military record. Lieut. Theodore P. Cook, of the Fourteenth New York Artillery, says:

"He (Dunlap) went to the field with the Fourteenth New York Artillery, and was with the regiment doing active service from the crossing of the Rapidan until the time of his discharge, and was with the regiment in all the engagements during that time. At the battle of the Wilderness he was conspicuous in commanding the skirmish line in front of our brigade, and in capturing a number of prisoners. Again, on the 17th of June, 1864, at Petersburg, he had charge of the skirmishers in our front, and was exposed to a galling fire most of the day. In the evening of the same day he was wounded in the shoulder from a piece of shell which glanced from a tree near where the line was being formed. Lieutenant Dunlap was a brave, honorable soldier, and I have always regarded his dismissal as a great outrage and a crime, and the Government ought to set it right by placing him back on the muster-rolls of his regiment, and by treating him in all respects as though he had been mustered out with his regiment at the close of the war."

Lieut. C. A. Veeder, of the same regiment, testifies substantially in the same way, and speaks in the highest terms of the soldierly qualities and bearing of Lieutenant Dunlap.

Col. John Fisk, of the Second Mounted Rifles, New York Volunteers; Capt. B. R. Keefler, of the Seventy-eighth New York Volunteers: General E. G. Marshall, who commanded the brigade in which the Fourteenth New York Artillery was placed, severally speak in the most complimentary manner of Lieutenant Dunlap's high character and efficiency as an officer.

It also appears that Lieutenant Dunlap was active in raising two companies for the service, the first of which was attached to the Seventy-eighth New York Regiment, and of which Dunlap was second lieutenant. The other company was attached to the Fourteenth New York Artillery, and Dunlap was made first lieutenant of that company.

There is no doubt whatever that the conduct of Lieutenant Dunlap, from the time he first entered the service up until the time he had some difficulty with the officer in command of the Fourteenth New York Artillery, was unexceptionable and praiseworthy. The difficulty arose in this way: Dunlap was senior first lieutenant of Company A on the first day of June, 1864, when he was transferred to Company C, in which he was junior officer. He protested against this transfer, and addressed his protest to brigade headquarters, but no notice having been taken of it, Dunlap believes that Capt. L. J. Jones, the officer in command of the regiment, did not forward it. He inquired of Captain Jones why it was that he was transferred from Company A to Company C. Captain Jones replied that he was incompetent to command a company.

On the 24th day of July, 1864, Dunlap was transferred to Company E of his regiment. He felt that the last transfer indicated an intention not to return him to his own command, where he would have been in the line of promotion. Feeling aggrieved, Lieutenant Dunlap tendered his resignation, whereupon Captain Jones procured charges to be made against him. A court-martial was convened at the headquarters of the First Division of the Ninth Army Corps. The charge was, "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline." There were two specifications to the charge. The first set forth that Dunlap did tender his resignation while in front of the enemy and under their fire. The second, that he did offer as a reason why his resignation should be accepted that he was incompetent. When the charges and specifications were read to him he asked that the hearing should be continued to the next day. This was refused. He informed the court that he would plead guilty to the specification that he had tendered his resignation, but to nothing else. The court thereupon considered the case, found him guilty of the charge and specifications, and sentenced him to be cashiered and forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust under the United States. When apprised of the civil disabilities imposed, Dunlap made application to the President for their removal, which was granted upon the recommendation of Judge-Advocate-General Holt. The following is his opinion:

WAR DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF MILITARY JUSTICE,
October 5, 1864.

To the PRESIDENT:

In the case of Lieut. Myron E. Dunlap, Fourteenth New York Heavy Artillery, the following report is respectfully submitted:

He was tried by general court-martial at headquarters First Division Ninth Army Corps, July 28, 1864, for "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline." There were two specifications to the charge. The first set forth that he "did tender his resignation while in front of the enemy and under their fire." The second set forth that he "did offer as a reason why his resignation should be accepted that he was incompetent." He pleaded guilty to the specifications, and not guilty to the charge. He then requested an extension of time, to produce a witness for the defense, which the court refused. He was found guilty of the charge and specifications, and sentenced "to be cashiered, and forever disqualified from holding any office of profit or trust under the United States."

Lieutenant Dunlap, in making application for removal of the disability imposed by the sentence, says that the judge-advocate of the court had expressed the opinion that no severe punishment could be inflicted, and if the court thought the case merited so severe a punishment they should have given him the benefit of all the evidence he could produce. In a case of this description, in which the gravity of the offense depends so much upon the circumstances under which it was committed, every opportunity should have been given for the introduction of evidence.

No evidence was offered, and the accused did not avail himself of the privilege of making a statement. It appears, however, from the copy of a communication addressed by Lieutenant Dunlap to the assistant adjutant-general, Ninth Army Corps, that his reason for offering his resignation was that he had been in command of Company A, and on June 1, 1864, was transferred to Company C, in which he was junior officer, the commanding officer of the regiment giving as a reason for the transfer that he was incompetent to command a company. He protested to the commanding officer of the brigade, but no notice was taken of his protest; he remained with Company C until July 24, when he was ordered to take command of Company E. Feeling that if he was incompetent to command Company A he was equally incompetent to command Company E, he offered his resignation on the ground of incompetency.

It is probable that his action was dictated by wounded pride, and not by a consciousness of incompetency; but though it was highly improper and deserving of punishment, it is conceived that the sentence of the court is heavier than the circumstances justified, especially as there is no express allegation in the specifications, and no evidence upon the trial, that his conduct was the result of cowardice or other improper motive.

Lieutenant Dunlap has filed the petition of twenty-six officers of his regiment, in which they certify to his character as a man and his efficiency as a soldier, and ask that this disability imposed by the sentence be removed.

In consideration of all the circumstances of the case, and the high standing of Lieutenant Dunlap as an officer, it is recommended that the request of the petitioners be granted.

J. HOLT, Judge-Advocate-General.

The adjudication of this case is singularly objectionable. The denial of Dunlap's request for the postponement of the hearing that he might produce witnesses was extraordinary even for a court-martial; for the Army Regulations expressly provide that the judge-advocate shall summon the necessary witnesses for the trial; and the Articles of War also provide for the taking of depositions of witnesses.

See article 73, edition 1861, and article 93 of the revised Articles of War, which says: "A court-martial shall, for reasonable cause, grant a continuance to either party for such time and as often as may appear to be just." Also, in the decisions of the Judge-Advocate-General (1880), page 299, paragraph 13, it is made the duty of the judge-advocate of the court to see that the accused has a fair trial and an opportunity to make full defense.

In addition to this the Army Regulations expressly authorized volunteer officers to resign. On page 12, Army Regulations, 1861, paragraph 24, it is provided that "no officer will be considered out of the service on the tender of his resignation until it shall have been duly accepted by the proper authority." And paragraph 28, on same page, says: "In time of war, or with an army in the field, resignation shall take effect within thirty days from the date of the order of acceptance." And again, on page 497, Army Regulations, 1861, paragraph 1647, we find authority for resignations in the following most emphatic language: "Officers of the volunteer service tendering their resignations will forward them through the intermediate commanders to the officer commanding the department or corps d'armée in which they may be serving, who is authorized to grant them honorable discharges;" not to court-martial them for it, but to grant them honorable discharges, as the law provides. (Vide act approved July 22, 1861, section 10; Army Regulations, 1863, page 507.)

In the Digest of Opinions of the Judge-Advocate General, page 430, he says: "While in time of peace an officer in the Army in good standing is in general entitled to tender and have accepted his resignation, yet, in time of war, or when grave embarrassment to the service or prejudice to discipline may result from his leaving his duty, the acceptance of his resignation may be refused."

But nowhere does he say that an officer in time of war shall be court-martialed and dismissed for tendering his resignation, except in the case where it is tendered pending an engagement, and then the charge against him would be cowardice, and not "conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline," as charged in this case.

As to the proper form of relief in such cases, it is laid down in the decisions of the Judge-Advocate General, supra, page 478:

"In the case of a volunteer officer unjustly dismissed by sentence or order during the war, and applying for restoration, there is the obstacle (not encountered in the case of a regular officer) that the volunteer contingent of the Army has been long since disbanded, so that a restoration to office in the same is impracticable. And as a dismissed officer can not of course be granted an honorable discharge from the Army without first being readmitted to the Army by a new appointment, and as a volunteer officer can not as such be so readmitted, advised (February, 1880), in a case of a volunteer officer applying for relief on account of an unjust dismissal, that the form of relief most apposite to his case would be a special enactment giving him pay from the date of his dismissal—reciting that the same was based upon insufficient grounds—to the date of the final muster out of his regiment, precisely as if he had continued in the service during the interval."

As several acts of Congress have been passed since the close of the late war for the purpose of correcting the military records of dismissed officers and privates, the relief sought for in this case is not without precedent.

The following are some of the acts of Congress passed at former sessions to correct military records and grant honorable discharges: See Private Acts, first session Forty-fourth Congress, p. 7, act April 13, 1876; Private Acts, first session Thirty-third Congress, p. 336, No. 87; p. 383, No. 147; p. 437, No. 244. See also pp. 343, 367, 394, 491 of same session. Acts were passed at previous and subsequent sessions.

General Marshall, whose brilliant military record and high character entitle whatever he may say to the highest consideration, wrote a letter in relation to the petition of Lieutenant Dunlap, as follows:

LEHIGH GAP, PA., January 31, 1882.

DEAR SIR: I have fully examined the case of the dismissal of First Lieut. M. E. Dunlap, Fourteenth New York Artillery, who was so dismissed for tendering his resignation. I was absent on account of wounds, and firmly believe if I had been present commanding my brigade, of which my regiment, Fourteenth New York Artillery, was then a part, that he would not have been brought before a court-martial. I feel certain that if the late General and Senator Burnside were alive he would as feelingly as myself coincide with me that an error, a great moral wrong, had been done this officer in his dismissal. I can only account for it that the Ninth Army Corps about that time went into the charge that succeeded the Petersburg mine explosion.

I shall be thankful if you will please examine his case in its legal sense; also, if you desire, my military record, and trust you will take an interest to correct the great wrong done him, his children, and family. I know him in no other light than as a gallant and faithful officer, and I can have but one feeling of asking that justice may be done him.

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

E. G. MARSHALL,
Col. and Bvt. Brig. Gen., U. S. A., and Bvt. Maj. Gen. Vols.

General THOMAS M. BAYNE, M. C.

Lieutenant Dunlap simply desires that the stain upon his record shall be removed. He does not ask for pay or allowances of any kind. The restoration of his good name is all that he seeks for. The question as to the power of Congress to set aside the judgment of the court-martial ought not to be raised in this case. Whatever may be the power of Congress in that regard, it will surely not be contended that a judgment founded upon a charge under an article of war which had no application, and a specification which was not cognate to the charge, can be otherwise than nugatory. It lacks such a judment; lacks all the essentials of validity, and amounts to little more than a stain upon the military record of the party convicted.

Your committee contends, however, that Congress has power to set aside and make void the judgment of a court-martial, though it may be regular and strictly in accordance with military law. The power of Congress to legislate upon all subjects that fall within the purview of the Constitution is unlimited, unless the Constitution expressly or by implication forbids the exercise of the power. Congress has no power to pass a bill of attainder or an ex post facto law, nor any law which will impair the obligations of contracts. But when Congress enacts laws and articles of war which subject certain classes of the people to their control, to the performance of certain duties, or to the duties of the military or naval service, it can surely undo and extinguish that which has been done, regular or irregular, in pursuance of such laws, unless the undoing of it should violate some mandate of the Constitution.

The committee therefore holds that Congress has the power to remove the judgment in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say that I do not concur in the recommendations for relief in this case. However, I do not propose to enter any special objection to the passage of the bill. I think it is a very dangerous precedent, and I doubt whether Congress has any such power as is contemplated in the bill. I do not believe it is right that Congress should enter upon the discussion of such questions now, and attempt to mete out justice. I think it is a tribunal incapable of doing justice in such cases. It has been a long time since this case occurred before the officers. No doubt the beneficiary is a very clever and worthy gentleman, and there is an undesirable stain upon his record, but I do not believe that Congress is the proper tribunal to undertake to adjust such matters.

The bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOAR. I intended to call up at this time the civil-tenure bill, but as that is the unfinished business for 2 o'clock I have been requested by several Senators to allow other business to go on until that time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business being closed, the Calendar is now in order under the eighth rule. The first bill on the Calendar will be stated.

OBSTRUCTION OF NAVIGABLE WATERS.

The bill (S. 64) to prevent the obstruction of navigable waters and to protect public works against trespass or injury was announced as first in order upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. Does that bill come up in regular order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes up in regular order on the Calendar, subject to objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made to its present consideration, the bill goes over under the rule.

CINNABAR AND CLARK'S FORK RAILROAD COMPANY.

The bill (S. 980) granting the right of way to the Cinnabar and Clark's Fork Railroad Company was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to that, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

GEORGE W. SAULPAW.

The bill (S. 474) for the relief of George W. Saulpaw was announced as next in order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

Mr. HOAR. The report was read in full when the bill was reached on the Calendar at the last session, but it may be read again.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is this the bill which the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] opposed so vigorously at the last session?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; it is the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then, in his absence, I think I shall have to object to its consideration now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

The bill (S. 729) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter was announced as next in order and was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean, and is there a report? Let us have the report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report was filed but yesterday, and has not yet come from the printer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let the bill go over. It need not lose its place, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I was just going to ask that it retain its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over without displacement.

Mr. McMILLAN. Does that apply to the cases that have gone over before?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does not. The other cases have gone over to take their places under the ninth rule.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then why not have this take the same course? I do not see why there should be any distinction between them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota object?

Mr. McMILLAN. Oh, no.

CITIZENS' BANK OF LOUISIANA.

The bill (S. 709) for the relief of the Citizens' Bank of Louisiana was announced as next in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

THEOPHILUS FISK MILLS.

The bill (S. 2023) providing for the payment of $2,500 to Theophilus Fisk Mills for executing a model and design for an equestrian statue of the late General John A. Rawlins was announced as next in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. Let that go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under what rule?

Mr. VOORHEES. Just let it go over so that it does not lose its place. I wish to have a little time to examine some papers that I have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will go over without displacement, retaining its place on the Calendar.

DISTRICT COMMISSIONERS.

The next business on the Calendar was a resolution submitted March 31, 1886, by Mr. VAN WYCK; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia inform the Senate whether either of the said commissioners is now stockholder or director or attorney of either of the street horse railways or national banks of the District of Columbia, or of the Washington Gaslight Company. Also, if not now, whether heretofore either of them has been stockholder, director, or attorney of either of said corporations, and if so, when he ceased to be such stockholder, director, or attorney as aforesaid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not suppose that the Senator from Nebraska desires seriously to press that matter at this time.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Let it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over without prejudice.

B. B. CONNOR.

The bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky., was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being a minority report the Chair supposes that the bill goes over, as that is in the nature of an objection. The Chair will state that where a minority report has been made against a bill it has usually been regarded as in the nature of an objection. But the Chair will not make the objection.

Mr. BECK. I should like to have the bill remain on the Calendar if an objection is made now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No objection has been made.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon, I thought there was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It goes over without prejudice.

ARKANSAS HOT SPRINGS.

The bill (S. 2079) to provide for the control of the reservation of public lands and the distribution of hot water, Hot Springs, Ark., was announced as next in order on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

ADMIRALTY SUITS AGAINST THE UNITED STATES.

The bill (S. 4) to permit the owners of certain vessels, and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon, to sue the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the owner or owners of any American ship or vessel engaged in or belonging to the United States merchant-marine service, and the owners or underwriters of the cargoes laden thereon, and the owners or underwriters of any property on board thereof, may, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to, sue the United States in any United States district court in which the parties so suing, or any of them, may reside, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such courts, for any damage, loss, or injury to such ship or vessel, or her owner or owners, or to the owners or underwriters of any cargo laden thereon, or of any property on board thereof, arising from or attributable to the mismanagement of any vessel owned by the United States, or to the negligence or want of skill of those in charge thereof, by collision; and the said district court is hereby authorized to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such injury, loss, or damage, if any shall be found due, against the United States, in favor of such owners or underwriters, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in the admiralty between private parties, and with the same rights of appeal that now exist by law in civil cases in which the United States are a party: Provided, however, That this act shall not extend to cases occurring prior to the passage thereof, nor in any case shall any such suit be brought more than six years after the collision shall have occurred.

SEC. 2. That the process or procedure by which such suits may or can be brought, and service on or notice to the United States or its officers shall be made or given, may be regulated by courts of admiralty by rules or orders made therein; and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General of the United States to cause the United States attorney in each district to appear for and defend the United States in any such suit brought in his district.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This bill is reported favorably by a majority of the Judiciary Committee. It was before the Senate at the last session of Congress, and I think was partially considered and discussed at that time. I then stated my objections to the bill. It introduces a new principle entirely into the administration of the justice of this country. It makes the Government liable for the negligence of her officers in charge of vessels of the United States, both for negligence and for tort of every kind.

I am opposed to that principle. I do not believe that the Government of the United States, or any sovereign power, should be required to be responsible for the negligence of officers that are appointed under the general system of her laws. It has never been so. And why underwriters or why owners of cargoes should be permitted to have this right at this day I am unable to see. The Government has enough to be responsible for now. She exercises great care in the appointment of her officers, and to that extent she is responsible to her citizens for the proper discharge of her duties; but this is extending her responsibility far beyond that, and beyond anything that has ever been required of her heretofore.

I am opposed to the bill, and shall vote against it.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress this bill was taken up, but under circumstances where a debate of more than five minutes could not be allowed to any member. Is that the condition now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The same rule applies at the present moment. If the Senator desires, the bill may go over to the Calendar to the ninth rule, under which debate is not limited.

Mr. EVARTS. I do not wish to take long about the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The five-minute rule is in force on this call of the Calendar.

Mr. EVARTS. The objection was then made to this bill by one of the honorable Senators from Missouri that this did not go far enough, he thinking that a recourse to the courts was a better resort for people having claims against this Government than that Congress should be burdened and entangled in the presentation of claims.

There are two diverse opinions, therefore, the first being that it is better that our citizens should have the courts open to them when they have what they consider rightful claims against the Government, and that the defeat and delay of their justice should not be accomplished, as it is from session to session, here. Now, this is a bill introduced in the straightest possible circumstances for the opening of courts. It applies solely to torts at sea, injuries that are committed between vessels that as between private owners are cognizable by the courts of admiralty, and are there to be determined.

We certainly do not wish to give any license to the management of United States vessels that they and their officers shall be wholly irresponsible; nor do we wish to say to the public that their property thus exposed is to be remedilessly lost because some general principle precludes them from an assertion of their rights. What, then, is the result? Hitherto, when such mischiefs have occurred, when such rights ought to be redressed, when the Government ought to listen to both in the sense of relieving the grievance and in the sense of curbing the administration of the management of vessels, it comes here, and the instances are in the records of Congress of applications here by claimants.

Now, every one will, I think, understand that if there is any subject which is to be rectified by a real investigation, and reaching the right and wrong of collisions at sea, a committee of this body, or a committee of the other House, is the least competent that may be imagined. Before an experienced and competent admiralty judge, where the witnesses testify from opposite vessels honestly, under the bias that belongs to them, perhaps not always truly, but honestly differ from the aspect presented to them in two moving bodies, nothing is more difficult in the administration of questions of fact than for an admiralty court to determine the right.

This is said to be an opening wedge. Well, some how or other justice should be done to the people of the United States that suffer wrong from this Government or its agents. If they need and should receive redress there should be some opportunity for them to have at least the facts examined and the truth known, and not to have that redress dependent upon the caprices, or the opportunities, or the obstructions of other business against such rightful presentation of claims.

I have therefore thought, and I believe that the great body of the Judiciary Committee were agreed, that this was a very proper thing by itself unless it did obstruct or oppose some necessary principle of protection against suits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to remind the Senator from New York that his five minutes have expired.

Mr. EVARTS. I hope that now the Senate will pass this bill, which has been carefully guarded, I believe, in its phrases. I do not think any objection is made to the completeness of the guarantee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been read. Does the Senator desire it read again?

Mr. MCMILLAN. No, sir.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this is a very important measure; it is a very revolutionary measure; it makes a very extraordinary change in the attitude of the Government of the United States in reference to the acts of its officers and agents.

As was well remarked by the Senator from Minnesota, hitherto no government, especially the Government of the United States, has ever felt itself bound to make reparation or give redress for the wrongful or the negligent acts of its officers and agents. If the principle of this bill is adopted (and I see no reason why if it apply to cases of vessels it should not be applied everywhere) we ought to guarantee all property that is transmitted by mail; we ought to be responsible for every trespass and every negligence of every marshal in the United States, and of every other officer of the United States. If the principle of this bill is adopted generally it will cost the Treasury of the United States not less than $50,000,000 per annum. It makes the United States the absolute guarantor in the case of the negligence of every single officer who may be appointed by it. It is true it only applies in terms to vessels of the United States, but no man can give a sound reason why the principle should stop there.

Why, sir, it goes further—and I desire to call the attention of the Senate to that—in making the United States responsible for the negligence or want of skill of its seamen, than is applied to private owners of vessels, because the private owner of a vessel is only liable to the extent of his interest in the vessel which does the damage, and can not be held liable beyond that. Here, sir, the vessel belonging to the United States may be of insignificant value and the damage done may be to one of the finest vessels that sails on the ocean, and the responsibility of the United States would not be limited, as in the case of private owners, to the value of its own vessel, but would extend to the value of the vessel destroyed.

I hope, sir, that this bill will not pass.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, as has been stated by the Senator from Mississippi, the principle involved in this bill is far-reaching in its effects. Early in the present session I introduced a resolution, which was adopted by the Senate, directing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into and report as to how far the Government of the United States should be held responsible for the wrongful or negligent acts of its agents, and if they should determine that the Government ought to be held responsible for such acts to report a general bill upon the subject. I do not know whether that resolution has been considered by the committee; certainly no report has been made upon it, and we are still in the same situation that we were then and have been in for years. Thousands of bills for private relief are introduced and referred to the several committees; some are reported favorably, some adversely, and a few of those that are reported favorably are considered and passed, while the great mass of claims, many of them meritorious, are postponed from year to year and bills providing for their payment are presented year after year.

I should have been much better satisfied to vote upon this bill if the Judiciary Committee had also considered and reported upon the general question as to how far the Government should hold itself liable to persons who have been injured in person or property by the wrongful or negligent act of its agents. I can conceive of no distinction between torts at sea and torts upon land. I know of no reason for a law of Congress which authorizes the United States to be sued by persons who have been injured by the torts of its agents at sea and withholds that remedy from persons who have been injured by torts on land; and when you come to consider the general question of the liability of the Government, as was well said by the Senator from Mississippi, it will embrace every Department of the Government and the acts and omissions of every agent of the Government in every Department.

We have a bill pending now, which has gone over under the ninth rule upon my objection, to pay damages to a person who alleges that he was injured in an elevator in a public building in San Francisco. It would be just as reasonable for the Government to be required to pay damages in the case of a mail-wagon driven by an employé of the Government running into a pedestrian on the streets and injuring him as it would to allow the owners of a vessel or a cargo to sue the United States because the vessel or the cargo had been injured by a collision with a Government vessel on the high seas. As was said by the Senator from Mississippi, to extend this principle to its legitimate end would be to hold the Government liable for the transportation of the mails as an express company or a person engaged in the express business is liable.

I think it would be the part of wisdom to have the question first determined as to how far the Government ought to hold itself liable in any event for the acts of its agents, and that then there should be some general law upon the subject covering all such cases. If it is determined that the Government shall be liable, and shall respond in damages for the wrongful or negligent acts of its agents in all the Departments of the Government, then this is a proper bill. If not, it does not seem to me that it is. It is simply a matter of partiality to a class of citizens who are injured on the high seas while the same remedy is denied to those who are injured by torts on land.

No government can be made liable in damages for the acts of its agents except by its consent; no government can be sued except under some provision of law authorizing it. That principle applies to the Government of the United States. It applies also to the State governments. In England in such cases after suit is instituted application is made to the lords of admiralty for permission to prosecute, and leave must be first obtained before the suit can proceed.

Under the provisions of this bill, as I understand, any person injured on the high seas by collision with a Government vessel through the negligence or wrongful act of a Government employé or agent may bring and prosecute his suit in the courts of the United States. As has been said, it is an innovation, it is a radical change in the law. It is establishing a precedent which if followed to its legitimate conclusion will cost the Government many millions of dollars. It may be right, but before considering this bill I would much prefer that the general question should be determined as to whether or not the Government will hold itself liable for the wrongful and negligent acts of its agents in all cases, or if not in all in what cases, so that all should understand the magnitude of the question.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand, Mr. President, that this bill introduces any innovation in the principle which has governed the United States since the inauguration of the Constitution. We have always recognized that it was the duty of the Government to see to it that there was not added to the perils of the sea (against which we undertake to guard our citizens and the whole maritime world in a thousand ways by light-houses, by improving harbors, by life-saving appliances) the danger of death or of the loss of property or of injury to person or property by reason of the negligent action of the Government itself; and that rule prevails in some method of application with all civilized nations. Whether they allow themselves to be holden for the torts of their servants on land, whether they admit a liability for failure of the duties of government to citizens or to strangers, they always admit an obligation to protect persons at sea against injury by reason of their act and from the mismanagement of their government vessels; and we have always on petition either referred the applicant setting forth a case of such grievance to a committee of this or the other House, and Congress has given relief itself, or of late years we have been accustomed to send such cases to the Court of Claims by special act. There have been several such statutes passed since I have been a member of this body, and there is no instance of a prima facie case of loss at sea by reason of the negligence of the officers or managers of a United States vessel where the remedy has been denied.

Now the Court of Claims is a very inconvenient tribunal. Its judges are not expected to be learned admiralty lawyers. It sits at Washington, distant very often from the residence of the owner of the vessel; distant very often from the transaction which is to be inquired into. Sailors can not be kept on shore as witnesses until the case can be reached in order in the Court of Claims. An admiralty court where the owner lives, in the port to which the vessel is taken, is always open; the proceedings are summary; they are conducted by magistrates learned in the law of admiralty. The object of this bill, therefore, is not to create a new obligation on the part of the Government; it is only to create a new and more convenient remedy.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Does the Senator pretend to say that the Government of the United States is now legally bound for negligence on the part of an officer?

Mr. HOAR. I do not. What I say is that the Congress of the United States always recognizes the obligation. Of course it is not a legal obligation in the sense of an existing remedy without new legislation; but, wherever the claim is made, the claim is investigated and the remedy is given either by sending the party to the Court of Claims or by a special act of Congress. The claimant never is turned away on the ground that we do not recognize that as an obligation.

This bill proposes simply to change the existing practice by giving the party the opportunity as of right to present himself in an admiralty court in the district where the owner resides.

Mr. MCMILLAN. And recognizes and establishes the principle that the court of admiralty is bound to hold the Government responsible.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, just as Congress acts on the principle that it is bound to hold the Government responsible.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I have never known Congress to make any recognition of that principle.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator was chairman of the Committee on Claims, and he must have reported such bills himself.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I remember but one case, of a vessel which was injured by collision at sea or in any of the harbors, and that was the case of a vessel owned by a former member of this body. The bill, I think, was reported adversely once or twice. I think at the last session the case was perhaps referred to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOAR. When the Senator himself was a member of the Committee on Claims he reported in favor of sending to that court the owner of a vessel which was injured by a collision on the Potomac River by a Government vessel.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That was the case to which I referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts is out.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to say one or two words more if there be no objection, as my time was chiefly occupied by the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will proceed, unless objection be made.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say, as one member of the Judiciary Committee, that I am prepared to state the principle which I think should govern the United States in recognizing by sea or by land—although the case of liability for collision at sea is much stronger in principle and stands on its own reason—its obligation for the acts of its agent. Wherever the Government is engaged in a business, such as the manufacture of arms at Springfield, or in carrying the mails through the streets, and the driver of a mail-wagon runs into another, I do not see any reason why the citizen should be exposed to loss by the negligence or carelessness of our agents without compensation, any more than in the like case of private citizens; but where the Government is exercising the functions of government, as for instance in the carriage of the mails for a person who deposits his mail-matter to be carried, or where judges or jurors or marshals or legislators err, the people can not be held responsible; the people act in these things by imperfect instrumentalities, and all that the citizen has a right to expect is that he shall have from the Government itself the best service of such instrumentalities as the people provide. There is a broad distinction between compensating citizens for the errors of courts or jurors, or injuries done by officers of the Government in exercising its functions and the injuries sustained from instrumentalities which the Government, as a business agency, is exercising. One we should deny, and the other, I think, we should admit.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, whether the principle of this bill be correct, and should be extended to all cases where the Government might consider itself liable, I do not discuss now; but there is no limitation in the bill or by any of its provisions against the bringing of innumerable suits under it against the United States. The bill provides:

> That the owner or owners of any American ship or vessel engaged in or belonging to the United States merchant-marine service, and the owners or underwriters of the cargoes laden thereon, and the owners or underwriters of any property on board thereof, may, and they are hereby authorized and empowered to sue the United States in any United States district court in which the party so suing, or any of them, may reside.

I call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to that point. I say under the provisions of this bill there is authority for persons having any claim under the bill against the United States to commence suit in any district where they, or any of them, reside. It extends to the owners of all goods, underwriters, and vessel-owners. There is no limitation to the number of suits. If they were all brought in one court they might be consolidated under the admiralty practice; but a vessel upon the lakes between Buffalo and Chicago may have cargoes belonging to a hundred or a thousand people from San Francisco to Portland, and if they have a cause of action they may bring suits throughout the whole length and breadth of the United States in any district where they reside, whether the damages be great or small. It seems to me that a new provision of law changing the usual current of judicial proceedings against the United States should make provision for a suit, if at all, in which all parties interested should join, and not give the right to sue in any and in all districts of the United States where any of these parties may reside.

I am a little uncertain whether this bill in fact confines the damages recovered to the actual damage sustained by collision. It would look as if the different paragraphs might indicate that suits might be brought for mismanagement and damage caused otherwise than by collision.

Mr. HOAR. I understand it was intended to be confined to damage "arising from or attributable to the mismanagement of any vessel owned by the United States, or to the negligence or want of skill of those in charge thereof, by collision."

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that was probably meant, though it is not clear from the language. Now, under our law and under the regulations of the Treasury Department, revenue-cutters are required to delay vessels, to overhaul them, to examine their papers. They are required also to go to assist vessels in storms, to tug them, to get them into harbor. I venture to say that, under the provisions of this bill, if a revenue-cutter went out in a storm to assist a vessel into port, and in the course of the tempest had a collision with the vessel she was going to assist, and injured it, or injured its cargo even in the effort to save it, the owner of the cargo and the owner of the vessel could bring a suit under this bill against the United States to recover damages. I do not say they could succeed, but they could commence suit. They could harass the officers of the Government.

I do not think the bill is sufficiently guarded. I think there should be a provision that but one suit should be commenced on account of one collision.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Michigan has expired.

Mr. CONGER. I did not propose to occupy further time than was necessary to ask these questions. The Senator from New York was not in when I spoke of the number of suits that might be brought. I said they might be brought by the owner of the vessel or by any owner of the cargo, and there was a possibility of a suit being brought in every district of the United States.

Mr. EVARTS. It stands on the same footing with private claimants, and the admiralty courts then combine all such suitors and make one litigation.

Mr. DOLPH. I would like to inquire if an amendment to the amendment of the committee is now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the committee has been agreed to. It would be in order only to amend by adding additional clauses.

Mr. DOLPH. It would not be in order to amend by striking out certain words?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not. The amendment has been agreed to in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask permission to submit a few additional remarks in regard to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks leave of the Senate to speak twice upon this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DOLPH. In the remarks which I submitted upon the bill I did not intend to be understood as opposing the measure. I have already made a report, Report No. 242, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, on a resolution which passed the Senate, authorizing certain parties to sue the Government in the Court of Claims in a similar case. What I desired to do was to call the attention of the Senate again to the necessity for some general legislation on this subject of claims against the Government for the wrongful or negligent acts of its agents.

The amendment I proposed to make was to strike out in lines 25 and 26 of section 1 the words "cases occurring prior to the passage hereof, nor in any." I see no reasons why the committees of Congress should be left to struggle with claims which have already accrued against the Government, and this act be made applicable only to claims that hereafter arise. If the principle is good it ought to be extended to all existing claims of this kind.

Mr. EVARTS. Allow me to say that it was thought by the committee that it was prudent that the new legislation should operate upon after-occurring acts, not on past acts. We are not aware of any important case heretofore occurring which is not provided for; but, as a general principle, legislating without evidence before us as to past occurrences our purpose was to make our accessibility for recourse in the courts apply to circumstances arising afterwards.

Mr. DOLPH. To throw possibly some additional light on the subject, at least to let the matter appear in the RECORD, I propose to refer to a case or two decided by the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court has decided that a liability in cases covered by this bill already exists on the part of the Government. The only trouble is that the Government has not allowed suit to be brought in such cases, but they have gone so far as to hold that where the court had acquired jurisdiction, as in the case of a prize vessel which had been ordered sold and the proceeds were in the registry of the court, a party intervening for damages on account of a collision between the prize vessel while being navigated to the port where it was libeled and condemned and another vessel, might prefer his claim and the court would entertain jurisdiction to have the claim paid out of the proceeds of the condemned vessel, the court having jurisdiction, that that might be done without special authority of law. In the case of the Siren, 7 Wallace, 152, it was held:

> A claim for damages exists against a vessel of the United States guilty of maritime tort as much as if the offending vessel belonged to a private citizen, and although for reasons of public policy, the claim can not be enforced by direct proceedings against the vessel, yet it will be enforced by the courts whenever the property itself upon which the claim exists becomes, through the affirmative action of the United States, subject to their jurisdiction and control.

In that case Mr. Justice Field, in speaking for the court, said:

> It is a familiar doctrine of the law that the sovereign can not be sued in his own court without his consent. The doctrine rests upon reasons of public policy, the inconvenience and danger which would follow from any different rule.

Then, also, in the case of the Siren the practice of England is stated, to which I referred before:

> In England when the damage is inflicted by a vessel belonging to the Crown it was formerly held that the remedy must be sought against the officer in command of the offending ship—

That is to say, the government repudiated any liability for the injury—> but the present practice is to file a libel in rem.

As I understand, the present bill only authorizes a suit in personam against the Government of the United States, the ordinary suit in damages; and therefore the inconvenience which would follow from libeling a Government vessel while in Government service would not follow a suit under the provisions of the present bill. But, to read again:

> But the present practice is to file a libel in rem, upon which the court directs the register to write to the lords of admiralty requesting an appearance on behalf of the Crown, which is generally given, when the subsequent proceedings to the decree are conducted as in other cases.

I shall vote for the bill, but I should have been much better pleased to vote for a general bill to cover the whole ground. I am not prepared myself to say that I would be willing to go as far as I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to go, and to vote for an act which would allow persons to sue the Government in the courts of the United States for every injury occasioned by every wrongful or negligent act of any of the Government agents; but where the line is to be drawn is a very delicate and important question, and it is one that ought to receive the immediate attention of the Judiciary Committee and of Congress, because all such claims are now presented to Congress and the time of the committees and a large portion of the time of Congress is occupied by bills for private relief in cases where parties ought to be remitted to the courts.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. GEORGE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAXEY (when Mr. COKE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. COKE] is absent on account of sickness. He is paired generally with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. I do not see him present, and therefore do not vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. My colleague [Mr. HALE] is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Spooner,

OPEN SESSIONS.

The next business on the Calendar was the following resolution, submitted by Mr. RIDDLEBERGER April 12, 1886:

> Resolved, That all matters other than those relating to treaties shall be considered and acted upon by the Senate in open session.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I suggest that, in the absence of the Senator from Virginia who offered that resolution, it go over without losing its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar was the bill (S. 780) to regulate appointments in the Marine Hospital Service of the United States.

Mr. GORMAN and Mr. COCKRELL. Let that go over.

Mr. McMILLAN. Let it go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will go over without prejudice.

ADJUSTMENT OF STATE CLAIMS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. 309) to settle and adjust the claims of any State for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should like to hear some explanation of that bill. As the Senator who reported it is not in, let it go over without prejudice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over without prejudice.

JOSEPH FRANCIS.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over, objection being made.

Mr. EVARTS. Without prejudice?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We can not consider it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. EVARTS. May I ask where it will go if it is now passed over?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go to the Calendar under the ninth rule, subject to a motion to take it up at any time in the morning hour.

Mr. EVARTS. And with opportunity for debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then it will be without limitation of debate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps; and

A bill (S. 830) for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendments to the bill (S. 263) providing for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass., disagreed to by the Senate, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILKINS, Mr. WORTHINGTON, and Mr. ROCKWELL the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 7507) for the relief of James M. Hagar;

A bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected;

A bill (H. R. 356) granting a pension to Lucinda Barrett;

A bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed on him; and

A bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, in place of Middletown.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 118) relative to certain papers in the State Department by error; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

BARBARA FUCHS.

The bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to place on the pension-roll the name of Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, stepmother of John Fuchs, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment of Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. SAWYER, May 11, 1886:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs, have carefully examined the same, and adopt the report of the House of Representatives, and report in favor of the passage of the bill.

The claimant filed her application for a pension as the dependent stepmother of John Fuchs, late private of Company H, Sixth Regiment Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and who was killed in action June 19, 1864, at Petersburg, Va. Soldier was never married. Claim was rejected on the ground that there is no title in claimant, she not being the natural mother of soldier.

M. Feelder and Jacob Blum testify that they knew claimant as the stepmother of soldier; that soldier at the time of his father's (Sebastian Fuchs) marriage with said claimant was a child of about three years of age.

John G. Steiger and Phillip Eder testify that claimant's husband, at soldier's death, was feeble and unable to support her.

Michael Feelder and Jacob Blum further testify that claimant has not remarried since the death of soldier's father, April 5, 1867. He was a laboring man, sickly and unable to support his family. He used to mend shoes, and had no income from his real estate. Since his death claimant has supported herself by selling the real estate she owned. They owned some real estate in Fountain City, Wis., worth about $2,000, and she has sold the most of it to support herself. Soldier worked for his parents prior to his enlistment, and gave all his earnings to them, and did this for three years before his enlistment.

In soldier's letter to parents, bearing date February, 1864, at Camp Washburn, he sends for their support $60 out of his bounty of $75; he also sent them his certificate of muster, to enable them to draw the bounty given by the town, with instructions to use it for their support.

The applicant at the death of her husband (soldier's father) was left with four girls to support, the oldest being seventeen and the youngest two and one-half years of age. The soldier's letter written but a few months before his death, and his sending a large portion of his earnings to the support of his parents, strengthened with other testimony showing that prior to and at the time of his enlistment he felt it his duty to contribute to the support of his father's family, evidence the fact that had he lived he would have cared for her who cared for him in his infancy in her now poor and helpless condition.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

Mr. COCKRELL. This bill establishes a dangerous precedent. I think there is no justice or equity in it. The claimant in this case has two thousand dollars' worth of real estate, as shown by the report. There are a great many tax-payers in the United States who have not that amount of property. I object to the bill. Let it go over under the other rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed with the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed with the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. COCKRELL. Can that be done in the morning hour?

Mr. CAMERON. It can be done by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the regular motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is perfectly in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill notwithstanding the objection.

The motion was agreed to, and the consideration of the bill was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to record my vote against the principle of the bill, and the injustice and inequality and wrong perpetrated by such special legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I shall ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill. The Senator from Missouri has stated his objection; I think it is right that we should all be recorded on that report, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is not the question decided? The Chair distinctly stated that that bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did decide that the bill had passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then it is now too late to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and on that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is in order. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, I have a word to say. It appears to me from this report that this is a clear case of justice, and that probably the only ground on which the Pension Office refused this woman a pension was the fact that this boy was her step-son, and not her natural son, although he had been taken by her in his infancy and had been the child of the family.

As objection is made to the passage of the bill, and there being no dispute that this report states the case as it is, I want to take the judgment of the Senate by yeas and nays on the question whether they will grant relief in this case or not. I of course shall vote against the motion to reconsider, but under the decision of the Chair it is the only way we have of voting in favor of this claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate reconsider the vote by which this bill was passed, and on that question calls for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNA. Before the question is put I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that, as I understood the situation—I may be wrong—the bill was passed without the yeas and nays being called for.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It passed under the protest of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KENNA. I am not speaking of the protest, but I did not understand the Chair to have announced a single negative vote, and if this performance is simply——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair declared the bill passed in the ordinary way, without announcing the vote, there being no yeas and nays. The bill was passed.

Mr. KENNA. I think, as a matter of fact, there was not any negative vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes; several.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Missouri may have voted "no," but I understood the Senator to recognize the fact that the bill was passed, and he did not rise till it had passed, the difference being that we voted unanimously without a yea-and-nay vote, and then to get a yea-and-nay vote a reconsideration is moved. I suppose the question of reconsideration becomes one of great magnitude and importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the roll is called I would say, in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri, that the Senate has passed many bills involving precisely the same principle, and I never before heard of opposition to one of those bills.

Mr. COCKRELL. I say that precious few bills of this kind have ever been passed by the Senate. This is going beyond the provisions and authority of the general law, to extend dependence to a step-mother or step-father. This is an extension of it to that class.

Mr. BLAIR. It is very true that is not the general law. If it were the general law there would be no bill of this kind before the Senate. While I can not now particularize, I remember several cases, I think half a dozen, since I have been connected with the Committee on Pensions—and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] says more than that, and he is right—in which the same principle was adopted and ratified by the Senate in the enactment of special laws. I never knew of such a case brought before the Senate and referred to the committee, and examined by the committee, whereon the report was not favorable, and whereon the action of the Senate and of the other House was not favorable. I never knew of such a bill being defeated on the ground that it afforded relief to a step-father or step-mother, when it was shown that the step-father or step-mother discharged substantially the duties and the obligations of the natural parent.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, this is establishing a new principle of granting pensions—a new class of cases—pensions to step-fathers and step-mothers. Now, I should like to see some such cases which have been passed.

The law authorizing the granting of pensions to fathers and mothers is based on the relation of dependence—that the child is obligated to support and maintain the parent; and when the parents are dependent upon such child, or upon his earnings or wages, and that child dies in the service, or is killed in the line of duty, and the parent is deprived of the benefit and advantages of his services, then the law grants a pension. The evidence here shows clearly that this claimant was the step-mother. Now, as to the relation of dependence, what is the evidence here? The evidence, as recited in this report, shows that this soldier remitted to his parents, his father then living, portions of his wages, portions of his bounty. He was killed in action in 1864, and his father died in 1867—on the fifth of April, 1867. When the application for pension was made, if made at all, to the Pension Office, is not disclosed. It is not disclosed that any application was made to the Pension Office distinctly; at least the date of it is not given. The report says:

> Soldier was never married. Claim was rejected on the ground that there is no title in claimant, she not being the natural mother of soldier.

Now, I say the dependence contemplated by the pension laws and regulations can not exist, as the step-mother is the owner of $2,000 worth of real estate. That is not the dependence the law contemplates. She doubtless had personal property, and had other property besides this. What do the committee say about her property?

> They owned some real estate in Fountain City, Wis., worth about $2,000, and she has sold the most of it to support herself.

And further:

> Since his death claimant has supported herself by selling the real estate she owned.

She owns over $2,000 worth of real estate. What is the helplessness of this family? Is there any charge here that this step-mother is unable to work? Is there any charge here that her children, four girls, one of whom was at that time seventeen years of age, were unable to work; that any of them were helpless; that any of them were crippled, decrepit, unable to earn a living, unable to earn a support, with $2,000 of property to go on, with good health and good physical condition? There are thousands and hundreds of thousands of widows and orphans of soldiers who lost their lives that to-day are not in the condition of this alleged dependent step-mother. I am opposed to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to make a little speech, even if I have to move to go on with this bill after 2 o'clock.

We have now got two questions. The first is whether it is right to give a pension to a dependent step-mother of a soldier who came into her family, or she came into his, when he was a mere infant, and who stood as a mother to him in all the early years of his life. That the Senate has settled, and Congress has settled, and the President has settled over and over again; and as this report says (and we must take it to be true, and there is no suggestion that it is not correct) the sole ground on which the Pension Office rejected this claim—and it was a legal ground, and the Pension Office could not help it—was that the law did not provide for mothers who stood in loco parentis by law by the fact of having married the father of this child instead of being the natural and actual mother of this soldier boy. The Pension Office was bound to reject it; it could not help it, and that, as the report says, was the only reason why it did reject it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I beg pardon. It does not say that is the only reason.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It says it was rejected on that ground.

Mr. COCKRELL. It says it was "rejected on the ground that there is no title in claimant."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly. That is it.

Mr. COCKRELL. It does not say it was the only ground.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I should suppose it would be a fair construction of the report which says the Pension Office rejected the claim on a ground which was stated, that that was the only ground on which the Pension Office acted. Now that being gotten over and we being willing to put the step-mother on the footing of the natural mother when she has acted in every respect as a natural mother from the infancy of this child, the question then is whether there was a state of dependence within the spirit and meaning of the statute. Now the statutes say, if I recollect them correctly——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will pause. It is the duty of the Chair, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, to announce the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointment of civil officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that that be laid aside informally for a few minutes, till we finish this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the unfinished business be laid aside informally with a view to finishing the pending pension bill. If there be no objection that will be considered the order of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will only trespass on the patience of the Senate for two minutes, on the subject of dependence.

The statutes of the United States, if I remember them correctly, on the subject of pensions to dependent parents, treating this old lady as a dependent parent, are, that if the parent were dependent upon the soldier in whole or in part—I think that is the language, and I am right—then the party is entitled to a pension. Now what do we find? We find that this family, the father and the mother, with another family growing up of three or four or five or six children, were in possession of a piece of real estate in a village that could be appraised at $2,000. There would be the cottage and the little garden of an eighth or a quarter of an acre. But where is the bread to come from, the father feeble and sickly, as is stated. The boy that this mother had brought up had gone to the war, and he knew and felt that the family could not get on, and so he sent back his wages as a soldier, and his bounty and so on, to keep his father and mother, and his half-brothers and half-sisters from starvation.

If that is not a case of dependence in part, although they had a piece of ground and a roof over their heads that was worth $2,000, then I do not know what is.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I simply desire to say a single word. The Senator from Missouri said that he would like to see some of the bills that had been passed of a similar character to this. When he said that, I took the laws of the last session of Congress, and although I have not had time to examine them all, I think I am safe in saying that some six or seven acts that passed at the last session of Congress which received the approval of the President were for the benefit of dependent step-fathers and dependent step-mothers. I do not include now some bills that were allowed to become laws because the President said he had not time to examine them carefully. But I think a careful examination—I have not had time to go through with it all—will show that at least six bills of this character were passed at the last session of Congress which did meet the approval of the President.

Since I have been in the Senate, having been some portion of that time upon the Pensions Committee, I am able to say that I have never heard an objection made in the Senate before to the pensioning of a dependent step-father or step-mother when the case showed that a pension would be granted under similar circumstances to a real father or mother. I have not examined the facts in this case, and therefore do not speak with reference to it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I admit that there may have been cases—I recollect one or two under extraordinary circumstances—where the step-father or step-mother may have been granted a special pension, but it was because of utter dependence and helplessness and inability to do anything at all. I say the relation of dependence does not exist here. With this widow with four stout, hearty children, and herself able-bodied and stout and young comparatively, so far as the record goes, and two thousand dollars' worth of property, I say that the relation of dependence does not exist.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BECK (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who is necessarily absent from the Senate Chamber.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 8, nays 36; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers."

Mr. BECK. I thought the business at 2 o'clock to be proceeded with was the bill which was argued in part yesterday in regard to members of Congress acting as attorneys for railroads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending that bill yesterday the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moved that the unfinished business for to-day be laid before the Senate, which was done in due order upon motion. Perhaps the attention of the Senator from Kentucky was not called to the matter.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Kentucky has probably forgotten that this bill was in order yesterday, and that I gave way to his bill with the understanding that this should not lose its right to-day.

Mr. BECK. I was not aware of that. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me now, before he goes on with his bill, to make a remark or two somewhat personal to myself in regard to the bill which was under discussion yesterday? It will take only a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I find on looking over the RECORD this morning that yesterday, in discussing the bill relative to attorneys for railroads, not knowing really when I rose that I should speak five minutes, in a somewhat blunt way, as I am rather too apt to do, I used expressions which Senators on the Judiciary Committee and some of their friends may think I meant as being personal when I spoke of "bad faith." That is a harsh phrase, and I desire to assure the Senate and Senators that I did not mean to apply any remark of that sort as personal to any Senator. What I was seeking to do was to show that those Senators did not propose to vote for the measure they themselves had presented; and if there was anything in my language which would induce any Senator to believe that I thought he had personally done anything unbecoming in a Senator or a gentleman, I desire to apologize and retract it.

My friend from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] at the time, as I remember and as I see by the RECORD now, put the question to me whether I meant anything personal to him. I answered in the hurry of debate, and without knowing precisely what I was saying, or perhaps the exact effect of my language. I desire now to assure him, especially, that I could not, by any possibility, be brought to the point of saying anything that I thought would be offensive to him. I would just as soon offend any member of my own family. And so with any other Senator. I do not conduct debates, if I know it, upon personal grounds. However, I see that language was used by me which might, perhaps, be construed that way, and if so, I desire to retract it.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President, I simply desire to say that my relations with the Senator from Kentucky have always been of the most intimate and friendly character. I have always admired him for his ability and learning and for his great usefulness to the country, and I have felt and have said that it would be a great loss to the country for him to be lost to the Senate.

I did construe his language used on yesterday as personally offensive. It was difficult for me to believe that he so intended it; and when I explained to him my action upon the bill as a member of the Judiciary Committee I thought he would then say what he has now said. What he now says is entirely satisfactory to me and gratifying to me, and by it I am relieved from a necessity which would have been very painful of giving further attention to the remarks which I considered offensive.

SETTLERS AND PURCHASERS OF LANDS IN NEBRASKA AND KANSAS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The unfinished business, being the civil-tenure bill, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Vermont for a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I yield, Mr. President.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask that I may be allowed a moment to have a bill which was made the special order for Tuesday last made a special order for some day early in January. In doing that I desire to say that the bill, which is one for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands in Nebraska and Kansas adjoining the Denver and Saint Jo Railroad, was made a special order for Tuesday last, but could not be reached, as the unfinished business, the tenure-of-office repeal bill, had precedence. Doubting whether it can be reached this week, I ask to have it made the special order for the second Tuesday of January next at 2 o'clock. In doing so, it is due to myself to make a simple statement.

The land contemplated by this bill was entered by homestead and pre-emption and payment in cash about sixteen years ago. Soon thereafter the railroad company claimed it; but the Secretary of the Interior decided adversely. Patents were duly issued, and for ten years or more no question or doubt was raised as to legality of title.

The road became insolvent; sold all its assets, good and bad. This old claim was sold, revived, and finally received the sanction of the United States Supreme Court.

Upon this land taxes have been paid nearly fifteen years. Much of it has been cultivated into productive and valuable farms. Upon some of it children have been born and buried.

The marshal, by order of the court, was directed to dispossess such occupants and owners, when, to save their homes and possessions, they accepted the terms of the claimant, which were liberal from one whose title had been adjudged good by the highest court in the nation, and paid $3.50 per acre to make good the Government patent.

The only remedy then was to ask the Government to return the money paid to protect its own title. In the Forty-seventh Congress a bill was introduced by myself, reported from the Public Lands Committee, and after discussion passed the Senate, but failed in the House. The same bill, after discussion, again passed the Senate of the Forty-eighth Congress, but failed in the House.

The same bill again passed the first session of this Congress. And a bill substantially the same, with an additional section, reported by the Claims Committee of the House, could only be considered in that body by the friends of the bill agreeing in advance to an amendment granting $3.50 per acre to actual settlers, meaning homestead settlers, but to all who had paid the Government cash, only $1.25 per acre.

The Nebraska delegation, upon conference, deemed it best to accept the amendment rather than have no action on the bill, trusting to disagreement on the part of the Senate, and then by a conference committtee reconciling, if possible, the difference. And so the amended bill passed the House. Then it came to the Senate, and the Public Lands Committee reported to strike out the amended House bill and insert the Senate bill already passed, which is now on the Calendar.

It was a fact, understood in Congress and out, that I was an owner of a portion of these lands; and, through malicious falsehoods, some papers in Nebraska circulated that the settlers could be paid, except that I insisted that my title should be protected the same as all others.

I concluded summarily to dispose of that falsehood by stating to the Representative in Congress from the district where this land is located that I would end the contest by recommending the Senate to accept the House amendment, and thus relieve myself from an attack so false and vicious; but he remonstrated on the ground that many other innocent persons would be injured. I deferred the contemplated action until he could ascertain from Nebraska the number of persons wronged. Learning there were large numbers, he again remonstrated against concurrence by the Senate.

I also received remonstrances from citizens of Nebraska, and found that many actual settlers and cultivators of the land would be wronged. The House amendment only contemplated $3.50 per acre to homestead settlers, whereas many of the cultivators of the land had obtained the same by purchase from those who had obtained the same from Government by cash purchase, and these certainly had the same equity as a homestead settler. So that I was thus precluded from recommending the House amendment. To protect myself from calumny I had no right to abandon the claims of those who had a legal and equitable demand against the Government.

My ownership of some of this land has been an open fact in Nebraska, for it was made the basis of an infamous falsehood. So also has it been an open fact in the Senate and the United States Supreme Court. The case of Van Wyck vs. Knevals, was the suit carried to the Supreme Court to test the questions involved, and decided the Government did not own the land it had many years before patented. This case has frequently been referred to in both branches of Congress, and beseechingly alluded to by all land-grant railroads.

In the committee-room of the Public Lands I have distinctly stated such ownership and my relation to this bill, and in the Forty-seventh Congress, when this bill was first considered, after the bill and report had been read and before any discussion, as will be found in the RECORD, Vol. 13, Part 5, first session, page 5072, I said:

It may be proper to state at the outset that I myself—because it is due to the Senate that I should explain my own action—some years ago was unfortunate enough to claim some of the very land mentioned between the dates named, between the 28th day of March and the 15th day of April, 1870. While that connection might be of such a nature as not to justify me in voting upon this bill, it is due that I should state the fact to the Senate, as I stated it to the Committee on Public Lands at the time it was under consideration there.

So that in the courts, committee-room, and Senate my relation to this land and this bill was open and well known.

And I only desire to call attention to what was or might have been known by any one desiring to be informed.

I have not only publicly proclaimed this fact in committee and Senate, but have always refrained from voting either in committee or Senate.

True I have, as was my duty as Senator and to the citizens of Nebraska interested, faithfully obtained all the facts and zealously presented them to the consideration of the Senate.

I only desire now, calling attention thus publicly to the fact of my own relation to this bill, to say to the Senate that I intend to leave the matter to their sense of justice without further suggestion, and if they can do ample justice to those who have trusted implicitly to the contract, good faith, and honor of the Government by excluding any claim I may have from benefit by operation of this bill, I should not only advise but cheerfully consent to such determination.

I only ask justice toward some of my constituents who have been wronged by the courts or the Government, to have this bill placed on the special Calendar for early consideration, so that opportunity and time may be given, should the Senate non-concur, for an agreement between the two Houses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the bill referred to by him, being the bill (H. R. 1413) for the relief of settlers and purchasers of lands on the public domain in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, be made the special order of the Senate for the second Tuesday in January, at 2 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

A bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin; and

A joint resolution (H. Res. 220) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1886.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 7507) for the relief of James M. Hagar was read twice by its title.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Commerce if there be no objection.

Mr. FRYE. I think it should go to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the bill? Let it be read if it is short.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the suggestion of the Senator from Maine the bill will be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. 356) granting a pension to Lucinda Barrett was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed on him was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, in place of Middletown, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT REPEAL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I am satisfied the holidays are so near that nobody wishes to hear much said on the important subject of repealing the laws which are mentioned in this bill. We are all hungry for the Christmas goose, if that is the proper phrase, and impatient of debate. So, only for Buncombe—I wish that was the name of one of the counties in Vermont—or still better, for the historic accuracy of this discussion, I wish to ask the indulgence of the Senate for ten or fifteen minutes, to reply to the observations of my learned and distinguished brother from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the topic we discussed the other day.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, we can not hear over this way. I am anxious to hear what the Senator from Vermont is saying.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can not hear either.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order, and gentlemen will resume their seats. The Senator from Vermont will suspend until the Senate is in order. The Chair again requests that Senators who are standing shall be seated and that conversations shall cease.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am probably the person who deserves the censure of the Chair for having suggested that I was talking for Buncombe, so that everybody might have justly felt justified in talking about his own affairs. But I said that because I am perfectly aware that with the probable solid vote of gentlemen who do not agree with us of this side in political opinion, and with the vote of those on this side who believe that this law has always been unconstitutional and improvident, the measure will carry; but it is right, nevertheless, to know precisely what we are doing and why we do it.

So, I now come to the observations of my friend from Mississippi the other day as to the meaning of the changes which were made in the House of Representatives in the bill establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs, as it was then called, in 1789.

I had stated, not professing to use the exact verbal language, the phrase in one way which would have made fairly and legally just the observations of the Senator from Mississippi, but I had not stated the language precisely as it was as the bill was finally adopted, although in substance I intended to do it, and thought I did, and think I did.

In Committee of the Whole House, when the bill was up, the clause "to be removable by the President of the United States," or words to that effect, was retained by a small majority. Then, when the matter came to be again considered in the House proper, the first step was to make an amendment in another part of the bill that in the case of death or vacancy, &c., and when the chief officer, the Secretary of State, as we now call him, should be removed by the President of the United States, the chief clerk should perform its duties until the office was properly filled. That having, after discussion, been carried on a yea-and-nay vote, stating that this chief officer should be removable at the pleasure of the President of the United States, the clause formerly agreed to in Committee of the Whole was stricken out.

The Senator from Mississippi was quite right in saying—and I think I said it myself, but not so well as he did—that a certain number of gentlemen of the House of Representatives wished to make that change upon the ground that the President of the United States possessed by the Constitution an inherent and inalienable authority to remove any person in the service of the United States from office. A certain other body of gentlemen in that House of Representatives were of opinion that the Constitution of the United States did not import or imply, or confer, or give, any such power; but they were desirous, as an act of legislative wisdom and policy, for the time being, to confer upon the President that power. So these changes were made.

My friend from Mississippi thinks, if I correctly understand him, that the effect of the discussion and of the voting, which took place upon it by yeas and nays, was to show clearly that a majority of the House of Representatives thought that the President of the United States did possess by the Constitution this inherent and inalienable power as a part of the function of his office. In that I think my friend from Mississippi was mistaken.

When President Johnson was under impeachment and there was drawn into question in this body the matter of power of removal from office by a President without the consent of the Senate, and without any provision of law, &c., as one of the sworn judges, as we all were—not acting merely as Senators but under judicial oaths to impartially hear, try, and determine that great and historic cause—I was desirous of ascertaining precisely what that proceeding in the House of Representatives was; and with the utmost faithfulness of which I was capable, and with the utmost care of which I was capable, I read carefully and annotated the whole debate, and analyzed the yeas and nays every time they were taken. In the opinion which I expressed on the impeachment of President Johnson I stated it, and I read it here as the shortest possible way of stating it again.

An analysis of the debates—

I am now speaking of the House of Representatives in 1789—

An analysis of the debates and votes upon the act of 1789, creating the Department of Foreign Affairs, will demonstrate the inconclusiveness of tests of this sort.

That is just such a test as was stated by my friend from Mississippi a day or two ago—

Of the 54 members of the House of Representatives present, those who argued that the power of removal was, by the Constitution, in the President were Sedgwick, Madison (who had maintained the opposite)—

In an earlier part of the debate—

Vining, Boudinot, Clymer, Benson, Scott, Goodhue, and Baldwin. Those who contended—

That is, in the debate—

That the President had not the power, but that it might be conferred by law, but ought not to be conferred by law, were Jackson, Stone, and Tucker.

Those who believed that the President had not the power, and that it could not be conferred, were White, Smith of South Carolina, Livermore, and Page.

Those who maintained that the President had not the inherent power, but that it might be bestowed by law and that it was expedient to bestow it, were Huntington, Madison, at first—

Who afterwards changed his ground—

Gerry, Ames, Hartly, Lawrence, Sherman, Lee, and Sylvester—twenty-four in all, speaking—

On all these various phases of the question.

Of these, fifteen thought the Constitution did not confer this power upon the President, while only nine thought otherwise. But those who thought he had the power and those who thought the law ought to confer it were seventeen.

Thirty did not speak at all, and in voting upon the words conferring or recognizing the power they were just as likely to vote upon the grounds of Roger Sherman as upon the reasons of those who merely intended to admit the power. On the motion to strike out the words "to be removable by the President," the ayes were 20, and the noes 34.

That was in committee.

But no guess, even, can be formed that this majority took one view rather than the other. Indeed, adding only the eight who spoke against the inherent power, but for the provisions of law, to the twenty opponents of both, and there is a clear majority adverse to any such inherent power in the President. And when on the next day it was proposed to change the language to that which became the law, among the ayes are the names of White, Smith of South Carolina, Livermore, Page, Huntington, Gerry, Ames, and Sherman, all of whom, as we have seen, were of opinion against the claim of an inherent power of removal in the President. All this, with a possible error as to one or two persons—

And by that I meant that you could not certainly determine from the reported debate precisely what their views were—with a possible error as to one or two persons, arising from the vagueness or contradictory character of their language, is in the record of the proceedings, obvious to any one who will undergo the labor of its examination.

So, Mr. President, if we are to find out what is now constitutional by what the gentlemen of the House of Representatives in the year 1789 thought in creating the Department of Foreign Affairs, I submit to my learned friend from Mississippi and to all other Senators, saying nothing now about tradition or history or acquiescence since, but just as it stood then as a historical fact, it is not correct to say that a majority of the members of the House of Representatives at that time admitted or voted that there did reside in the President of the United States the inherent constitutional power of removing any officer appointed by him and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate under the Constitution.

It is just and right to say that a long acquiescence in a particular view, whether erroneous or otherwise, as to the construction and meaning of a constitution or law, is to have great weight to those who are to decide it later in respect of what its true interpretation ought to be. Yet we find that after the establishment of those departments there was nothing which could justly be called acquiescence in any other sense than that nobody undertook to change these laws, which said that when the President of the United States should remove a head of a department the chief clerk should act until somebody else lawfully came in.

Therefore, the acquiescence was simply in non-repeal, while on the other hand, when the real spoils system—and I use the common phrase without intending any offense to anybody or anybody's feelings—when the real spoils system came in, twenty-five or thirty or forty years later, whatever the time may have been, there was a state of parties and conditions which led nobody to desire (that is, nobody who could effectuate anything by getting any votes of a majority, to make any change. But when the state of parties came to be such in one House or the other (certainly in this one; I do not know about the other), there was an opposition of a political character to a President of the United States in this body, and the tremendous danger to the public interests of an Executive being a king in this country, in respect of all the patronage and employments of the Government, came to be apparent. Then gentlemen of the highest intelligence and the greatest learning in law of both political parties came to consider the question and to remonstrate against the power, and to deny the proposition that in this land of liberty and law, as distinguished from liberty and government, there was inherent in the President of the United States, under our Constitution, the entire command and control of the whole body of persons who are employed to execute the law. And the various historic instances—which I shall not take your time, or that of my brother Senators, to go over again—which are so familiar to you all—the reports of committees in this body, inquiries in respect of patronage, &c.—took place. When it became apparent that this early action of Congress was to be made the precedent for this enormous control of patronage by a President of the United States, unrestricted by any law, there was, in one form or another, a continual protest by gentlemen most eminent, and in all parties, from time to time.

So I think it is safe to say that after twenty years of the existence of and obedience to a law which is contrary to the idea claimed by my friend from Mississippi, that the President had such an inherent power of removal, we can fairly on this question of acquiescence put in opposition twenty years of experience, under a law which did limit the power of removal as against a supposed acquiescence, with a constant protest when it came to be of consequence, for the twenty or thirty or forty or fifty years before.

Then we come back again to the question of what the Constitution really is. I had the honor to state the other day, which I shall not now repeat at large, the circumstance which no gentleman has yet referred to with any answer that I remember, that if this be true as to a civil officer it is also true as to a military officer; and that if the Senate of the United States now repeals this law as to a civil officer, if it be true to the principle which is supposed to be involved, that it is unconstitutional and therefore ought to be repealed, it also ought to add a provision repealing those sections of the Revised Statutes, so long the law in this country, acquiesced in by everybody, which prevent the President of the United States from removing a military or a naval officer in time of peace at his free will. For there is not in the Constitution, as I said before, any hint of a distinction between the power of the President in faithfully executing the laws, or as a part of the executive power, as applied to a military, a naval, or a civil officer. It is either one thing or the other as an entirety. The President of the United States, under our Constitution, either has the power of the Queen of Great Britain or the Emperor of Germany of holding in his hand and at his will the tenure of the office of every civil and military officer of the Government, or he has not, under the Constitution, any such power at all as to either of them. They can not be separated. They are not separated in the Constitution as to appointments to office in any single particular that I can imagine. Nobody has suggested that they can be separated.

If, then, on the principle of the unconstitutionality of the existing law, this bill is to pass, it ought to contain a provision repealing those sections of the present statutes which forbid the President of the United States to remove the General of the Armies of the United States and every officer down to a corporal at his free will and pleasure; and the same in the Navy. It is everything or it is nothing in a constitutional point of view. But I pass that now.

I come next to the question of expediency: What is best for the welfare of a country which is a country of law, as the Constitution says—which is a country where the law is to be executed, and not made, by the President? It is a country where the law, the will of Congress under the Constitution, is to be put in force everywhere under the superintendence of the President, or else it is a country where the law upon certain topics and in certain ways is to be executed by the President of the United States through such means and such agencies, from day to day, as he chooses to employ. That is exactly the law for the Queen of Great Britain, for the Emperor of Germany, and for every other kingly power, I suppose, in the world; but I think those who made the organic law for this country did not intend to repose in any chief magistrate any such power; they thought they ought not to do it; and I repeat what I stated the other day, that I believe (but I have not examined all their constitutions) there is not a State in this Union, and there never has been a State in this Union, and I think I can say with some safety there never will be a State in this Union, which confers upon its chief magistrate the unrestricted power of removal of the persons who have been employed under the law for the execution of the law. Perhaps there are exceptions. If there are, I do not know where they are to be found, and so I state it under reserve, for I have not examined all the State constitutions.

My friend from Massachusetts says that the autonomy of States is different from the autonomy of the United States under their respective constitutions. In form, so it is; it must be; but in substance have not the United States and each respective State the same autonomies for the preservation of liberty, the promotion of social progress by similar means and in similar ways? If in every one of the States it is thought unsafe that their modest and moderate executive should be intrusted with the kingly power to determine at all times who shall and who shall not execute the laws of those States, is it not a thousand times more important that a greater executive, with an infinitely wider reach of authority and of influence, should not be intrusted with the same power that the States deny to their executive and within their own narrow borders? I think there can be no denying that.

So I submit with great respect to my learned friend from Massachusetts that the philosophical analogy, that the analogy of public safety, that the preservation of liberty against executive power and executive corruption, make it more important on the question of policy that the President of the United States should not possess the entire jus disponendi of every official act and every official person in the United States than it is that the executive of any one State should not possess it. That is the way it seems to me.

Now, what is to be the effect of this proposed legislation? The measure proposed to be repealed was passed at a time when, by the constantly growing power of executive patronage over elections, over legislation, over public affairs, from the mere circumstance that the Executive, as the laws then stood, whether by the Constitution or otherwise, had this enormous power, there was a steady accumulation of abuses, as everybody knows, and whenever there was a change of administration, sometimes even in the same party, there was a wholesale sweep of men who were faithful to the performance of their duties in the offices to which they had been appointed, for the mere purpose of finding a place for the repayment of political services to the President, or to the party to which he belonged.

So it went on accumulating until Mr. Johnson came in under the circumstances we all so well understand, and then both Houses of Congress, acting under their oaths, believing that they were acting for the public good (and from my knowledge of it I can say so far as it goes, and it goes a good way, knowing that they were acting for the public good), passed this law of restraint. I am not going again into what change was made in 1869, which in my view is of no importance on the principle of the thing. President Johnson was impeached for a violation, not of this law, because this law only operates in a recess, and his removal of Mr. Stanton took place during a session of the Senate, but he was impeached for the unconstitutional attempt to remove the Secretary of War. Two-thirds of this body lacking one, two, or three, I do not remember what number, but in round numbers and substance two-thirds of this body, leaving, so far as it is possible for human nature to leave, the arena of politics, the arena of legislation, and taking a new and solemn oath as judges, held that that was an unconstitutional act and so voted. Johnson went by as everybody goes by. The law continued in force. It restrained him in a very large degree the moment it was passed, for he obeyed it in substance and in particular so far as I remember.

Grant came in, and then the same sort of appeal and stress about offices, and having the ear of the Executive, &c., led to a strong effort to repeal the act. It was modified. I am not going into how much it was modified, or how little. That is entirely apart from my present purpose; but there was so much left of it that at the next session of Congress, in December, 1869, General Grant in his message again said that the law was a great restraint upon him; that it impaired his capacity to have a better administration of the laws by the officers who were employed in the public service, &c., and he urged Congress, as he had a constitutional right to do, to repeal it. Congress did not choose to do so.

I am now speaking of the last, the modified law, what was left of the original act. His own political friends in possession of both Houses of Congress did not choose to do anything about that; and so the law has stood obeyed by all Presidents to this day.

That it has been a restraint and has produced a diminution of the evils which had been accumulating from the time of the system of changing officers as the mere consequence of political changes in the country is perfectly clear. It is a restraint now, notwithstanding the President of the United States makes great numbers of suspensions, and the passage of this bill, as it appears to me, is an invitation—it is more than an invitation, it is a recognition and approval of the idea that upon purely political grounds of opinion the President of the United States ought, as his predecessors did before the law went into effect, in 1867, to remove immediately everybody who does not agree with him or with somebody else who belongs to some of his parties, or with his party, from office and put in people who do.

Now, I think, as I said before, that this is taking a step twenty-five years backward in the progress of removing from pure political sport and fortune and prize and stakes to be played for the mere working operations of the Government. As I believe that ought not be so put in as the sport of politics, and believe that all these offices ought to be held by the men to whom they have been intrusted if they behave themselves and do their duty for the term for which they were appointed, and am perfectly willing to admit that the President of the United States may for every vacancy select a man of his own persuasion if he likes him better and thinks he will do the business as well, and he will fill out his term if there be a change as I trust and hope and believe there will be in a couple of years hence. Thus we shall between both parties have removed all these matters from the mere strife and spoil and contention of party affairs.

I am not able to speak any longer, Mr. President.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the Senator from Vermont through?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have said in substance all I wish to say.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I desire to make some observations on the point stated by the Senator from Vermont as to the question of fact on which there is a difference of opinion between us. I will first state the issue between us, so that the Senate may understand clearly the exact point in controversy between the Senator from Vermont and myself.

The contention on the part of the Senator from Vermont, as he announced a few days ago, was that the debate in 1789 and the bill as then passed left it ambiguous and equivocal as to what was the intention of that Congress in passing the bill so far as the question of the power of removal of officers by the President was concerned. That I understand to be his position. My position, on the contrary, is that the debate and the proceedings in the House of Representatives in the First Congress, in 1789, and the true meaning of the words as they were inserted in the act as passed, plainly and clearly show an intention on the part of that Congress to fix a congressional or legislative construction of the Constitution affirming the power of the President, derived from the Constitution itself, to remove civil officers, as that was the only matter involved.

Mr. President, it must be remembered that the debate upon this bill, namely, to create a Department of Foreign Affairs, occurred at the very first session of the Congress of the United States; the very first assembly of the legislators who were to act under and construe the Constitution. They had no precedent to go by; there had been no previous practice under the Constitution; it was their office and duty to initiate a practice in accordance with that true-meaning instrument. A very long and able debate occurred upon this question. In that debate various opinions were expressed. I remember, sir, that some of the members of Congress advocated this position, that it was a power vested by the Constitution in the President to remove officers. Others insisted that the power was vested by the Constitution in the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Others insisted that it was a casus omissus in the Constitution, and that it devolved on Congress to make a grant of power and regulate its exercise.

Men's minds upon this question had not been matured. Mr. Madison himself, who probably knew as much about the Constitution as any man who ever lived, as the Senator from Vermont admits, changed his views during the progress of the debate. Other members did the same thing. The debate was very able and very exhaustive. The question was new. It was the first time that it was raised under the Constitution. Men's opinions were in a formative process; they had no clear and well-defined views until the debate had proceeded for a considerable time.

After many days spent on this subject, and after the Committee of the Whole had inserted these words in the first clause of the act, "to be removable by the President;" after they had received the sanction of a majority of the House of Representatives; after this difference, to which I have alluded and to which the Senator from Vermont also alluded, in the opinions of members as to the true construction of the Constitution, had been fully developed; after there had been announced changes in opinion by members of the House, Mr. Benson of New York arose and spoke, as I shall read his speech and that of others from the annals of Congress, so as to be exactly accurate and correct:

Mr. Benson moved to amend the bill by altering the second clause, so as to imply the power of removal to be in the President. The clause enacted that there should be a chief clerk, to be appointed by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and employed as he thought proper, and who, in case of vacancy, shall have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the department; and the amendment proposed—that the chief clerk, whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy, shall during such vacancy have the charge and custody of all records, books, and papers appertaining to the department.

Mr. Benson declared that if he succeeded in this amendment he would move to strike out the words in the first clause—

Which had been inserted as I have stated—

"to be removable by the President," which appeared somewhat like a grant. Now, the mode he took would evade that point, and establish a legislative construction of the Constitution. He also hoped his amendment would succeed in reconciling both sides of the House to the discussion and quieting the minds of gentlemen.

Mr. Page expressed a desire of calling the yeas and nays on the question which had so long agitated them. He was apprehensive that, by shifting the ground in the manner now proposed, the journal would not declare truly the question which had been so long contested.

Mr. Lawrence viewed the clause as a legislative declaration; for which reason he should be well satisfied with it as it stood. He should be glad to meet the gentlemen on ground of accommodation; but he did not think it likely to be effected by the proposed alteration.

Mr. Madison admitted the objection made by the gentleman near him [Mr. Benson] to the words in the bill; they certainly may be construed to imply a legislative grant of the power. He wished everything like ambiguity expunged, and the sense of the House explicitly declared, and therefore seconded the motion. Gentlemen have all along proceeded on the idea that the Constitution vests the power in the President; and what arguments were brought forward respecting the convenience or inconvenience of such a disposition of the power were intended only to throw light upon what was meant by the compilers of the Constitution.

Now, as the words proposed by the gentleman from New York expressed to his mind the meaning of the Constitution, he should be in favor of them, and would agree to strike out those agreed to in committee.

Mr. SMITH, of South Carolina. I believe gentlemen are convinced of the impropriety of the clause carried in the committee; and though they are not willing to relinquish openly their principles, yet they will do it by agreeing to the amendment. Will they pretend to carry their point by a side blow, when they are defeated by fair argument, on due reflection? For my part, Mr. Speaker, I hold any declaration whatsoever an infringement on the Constitution; but at the same time, if it be done, I hold it more candid and manly to do it in direct terms than by an implication like the one proposed.

Then followed a speech by Mr. Sedgwick, and then another by Mr. Benson, and then Mr. Madison made this argument, which I will read:

Mr. Madison withdrew his second to the gentleman's motion for the present, and proposed to the gentlemen who thought the Constitution vested the power in the President and Senate, to try their opinion by moving to add, after the words "to be removable by the President," "by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." This motion, he thought, would give gentlemen a fair opportunity of trying the question and recording their opinions. He begged gentlemen in opposition would not consider the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Benson] as a dereliction of the principle hitherto contended for, because it had no other effect than varying the declaration which the majority were inclined to make.

Here is the statement I call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to, made by Mr. Madison himself as to what were the opinions of the majority of that body:

Because it had no other effect—

Said he—than varying the declaration which the majority were inclined to make.

And so the amendment of Mr. Benson was adopted on this explicit statement by the mover of the amendment of its object and purpose, concurred in and reiterated by Mr. Madison, and on the statement made by Mr. Smith opposing its adoption, because that was its object and purpose, all the speakers, those who opposed and those who favored the motion made by Mr. Benson, all agreeing that if it was adopted it would have the effect of declaring in a law the opinion of the First Congress that the power to remove civil officers was vested in the President of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him, I beg to suggest to him—I was not able quite to finish all I wished to say—that I wish he would examine the records of the votes at that time to see whether or not I was correct when I read my opinion in the impeachment case in stating that sundry gentlemen voted for this change who had definitely expressed their opinion that the Constitution did not inherently contain any such inalienable power on the part of the President.

Mr. GEORGE. I take that to be correct because it is stated by the Senator from Vermont, but I answer that it is shown all through this debate that members all along changed their views during the discussion, and among those who changed their views was Mr. Madison himself.

Here, then, we have the motion made avowedly by its author for the purpose of putting this construction upon the Constitution. Here was it sustained and seconded by Mr. Madison avowedly for the same purpose. Here it was opposed by Mr. Smith because that would be its effect. Here was no man on either side asserting that any other result would follow from the adoption of the amendment of Mr. Benson than the one suggested by himself and by Mr. Madison. With that the House of Representatives, by a vote of 30 to 18 or 19——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Thirty-one to 19 at last, I believe.

Mr. GEORGE. Thirty to 18 on the insertion of Mr. Benson's amendment. On the insertion of this clause, thus explained, thus defended, thus opposed, the vote was 30 to 18. And then on the same day, after Mr. Benson had succeeded in getting this amendment inserted in the second clause because it was not equivocal, because it was not ambiguous, because it plainly and clearly and explicitly declared the meaning of the Constitution to be that the power of removal was in the President by virtue of the Constitution, and that it was not in the competency of Congress to grant it to him—after that was done, then, by a vote of 31 to 19, the ambiguous clause was stricken from the bill. So the result of that discussion and of that action was to declare—and I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact as Mr. Madison himself had declared openly in the presence of all the members of the House—the sense of a majority of the House to be that the true meaning of the Constitution was that it vested in the President alone the power of removal.

So, then, Mr. President, it is not left to inference or argument to ascertain or to speculate about what was the meaning and the intention of Congress in inserting the amendment of Mr. Benson. He avowed its purpose; Mr. Madison avowed its purpose. Mr. Smith accepted the avowal and opposed it on that ground; and then Mr. Madison in the presence of the House stated that such was the opinion of a majority of the members of the House, and then immediately, in five minutes afterwards, was the vote of the House affirming the declaration of Mr. Benson and Mr. Madison and Mr. Smith. This would seem to settle the controversy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend will allow me to interrupt him a moment again, as I hope not to trespass any more on the time of the Senate, I wish to suggest that that would seem to me to be just as conclusive and no more so than if my friend having concluded, we were to take a vote now on the repeal of this law and the bill should pass by three to one, and then we were to find out day after to-morrow upon what ground we passed it, would anybody have a right to say that it passed upon the ground that a majority of the Senate believed the provision it repealed to be unconstitutional, or only a right to say it either must have passed upon that ground, or, believing it to be constitutional, that it was not a good law to have?

I intended to have called the attention of the Senator and of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to the act of 1820—the first act on the general subject of offices after the departments were created—the act of May 15, 1820, in which it was provided—

That from and after the passing of this act all district attorneys, collectors of customs, naval officers, and surveyors of the customs, navy agents, receivers of public moneys for lands, registers of the land offices, paymasters in the Army, the apothecary-general, the assistant apothecaries-general, and the commissary-general of purchases, to be appointed under the laws of the United States, shall be appointed for the term of four years, but shall be removable from office at pleasure.

Not saying that when removed by the President of the United States something should happen, but using language which was exactly in substance like the language in the bill as agreed upon in committee in the House of Representatives in 1789.

I also ask the Senator's attention now, because I do not wish to interrupt him without his consent, to the act of Congress of 1863, or whatever the date was, establishing the national banks and a Comptroller of Currency, and wherein Congress in creating the office of Comptroller of the Currency provided by law a limitation upon the President's power of removal, giving it to him, but requiring him to communicate his reasons for such removal to the Senate, which I intended if I had not broken down in my voice to have called the attention of my two friends to as having some bearing upon the question of constitutional construction.

I thank my friend from Mississippi for allowing me to interrupt him.

Mr. GEORGE. I had intended to allude to the act of 1820, referred to by the Senator from Vermont.

Now, Mr. President, having been interrupted by the Senator, to which I readily yielded, I repeat that, the question having been settled in this solemn manner by men a large number of whom had been members of the convention which framed the Constitution; men who had met for the first time under the Constitution to inaugurate the Government created by it; men of the highest learning, of the greatest talent, of the purest patriotism, without any party question being up—because the absence of all party feeling in this matter was alluded to frequently in the debate as a reason why that was an auspicious time to settle the meaning of the Constitution—now after all this I claim that it is clear that is settled by the proceedings I have set out, and also upon the authority of the positive statement of Mr. Madison himself that a majority of Congress agreed with him that the true meaning of the Constitution was that it had vested in the President alone the absolute power of removing civil officers of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make one suggestion to him at that point, which very likely he is about to state; but I think it should go with his very clear and strong statement? That is that of the members of the House of Representatives at that time who had been members of the convention which framed the Constitution: every one voted for this construction with a single exception. I think there were six or seven for the construction, and only one the other way.

Mr. GEORGE. I was not about to state that, because I was ignorant of the fact. I am very glad the Senator from Massachusetts has stated it.

Mr. HOAR. I have the list here.

Mr. GEORGE. I am very glad the Senator from Massachusetts has made the statement.

Then, Mr. President, look at the force of the words stricken out and the force of the words inserted, and see what they mean. In the first clause it has been provided that a Secretary of Foreign Affairs shall be appointed, "to be removable by the President." That was an equivocal expression. It was capable of the construction that Congress then and there granted to the President the power to remove him. It was liable to the objection made to it by Mr. Madison and Mr. Benson. And what were the words inserted in lieu of them? Are they equivocal? Is there any doubt about their meaning? Let us see:

That there should be a chief clerk, to be appointed by the Secretary of Foreign Affairs, and employed as he thought proper, and who, in case of vacancy, shall have the charge, &c., * * * whenever the said principal officer shall be removed from office by the President of the United States, or in any other case of vacancy.

It would result at once from reading that language that you might as well say that Congress had conferred on the President the power to make a vacancy in any other way than by removal, as to say that it conferred it in case of removal. The language scrupulously refers simply to an existing state of facts or a state of facts which might exist, without saying that the President is authorized or is empowered or is granted the privilege of doing it. If Congress had intended to confer upon the President the power to make the removal, the way was easy. It was the easiest thing in the world to say "in case of removal by the President, the power to do which is hereby granted." The language used assumes that the power already exists, and if it existed then without a legislative grant it existed under the Constitution itself, because no legislation had then taken place under the Constitution on that subject. There had been no practice, there had been no precedent. This was the beginning of the Government. It was the inauguration of the system under the Constitution of the United States.

Then again, Mr. President, this language thus put in the second section of the act creating the Department of Foreign Affairs, was repeated verbatim, and for the same express purpose, at the very same session of Congress, by the same men who had made the former declaration in the acts creating the Department of War and the Department of the Treasury.

Clear and conclusive as this is, it is true that there is something occurring in that same Congress which makes if possible plainer still that they intended to declare this construction.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of ex parte Hennen, which applies directly to the point made by him. These are the words of Mr. Justice Thompson, in deciding the matter of Duncan N. Hennen, January 7, 1839 (13 Peters, page 258):

The power of removal from office was a subject much disputed, and upon which a great diversity of opinion was entertained in the early history of this Government. This related, however, to the power of the President to remove officers appointed with the concurrence of the Senate; and the great question was, whether the removal was to be by the President alone, or with the concurrence of the Senate, both constituting the appointing power.

But it was very early adopted as the practical construction of the Constitution, that this power was vested in the President alone. And such would appear to have been the legislative construction of the Constitution.

This decision is directly on the point of what the debate of 1789 meant.

Mr. GEORGE. This case shows that the construction put upon the act of Congress by me has received the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States. I am glad the Senator from Texas has brought it to the attention of the Senate.

Now I want to call the attention of the Senate to another act passed by that very same Congress. Within a month after the passage of the act establishing the Department of Foreign Affairs, Congress came to consider and did pass a judiciary bill. Now let us note what provision is made about removals there, and compare it with the provision made in the three acts to which I have alluded creating the executive departments. In the 27th section of the judiciary act, passed on the 27th of September, 1789, I find the following language:

That a marshal shall be appointed * * * for the term of four years, but shall be removable from office at pleasure.

In creating the three Executive Departments the First Congress used the language to which I have called the attention of the Senate avowedly for the purpose of fixing a construction upon the Constitution of the United States. Having done that in three instances, when they came to enact the judiciary bill they changed the verbiage. In every other case the recognition is distinct that the removal is to be made by the President, and that he has the power to make the removal from the Constitution itself. When it comes to the marshal the enactment is that he shall hold for four years. If that stood alone it might have been concluded that Congress had undertaken to destroy or in some way impair or regulate the power of the President to make the removal before the expiration of the term fixed for the office. So it became necessary, in order to exclude that conclusion, to insert the words "but shall be removable from office at pleasure."

But, Mr. President, you will note that it does not say who shall make the removal, it does not say whether it shall be made by the President alone or whether it shall be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, as had been contended for by a portion of those who had argued against the construction of the Constitution maintained by Mr. Madison and sanctioned by that very Congress, but it merely declares, notwithstanding his appointment for four years, the marshal "shall be removable from office at pleasure." At the pleasure of whom? No name is given, but "at the pleasure of the President" was the construction put upon it by that Congress and by all succeeding Congresses and courts up to the present time.

How can you get the meaning and force of the words "of the President" after the word "pleasure," in language I have quoted, except upon the admitted, undenied, and undeniable proposition that the power of removal was in the President? Would the same men who had passed with so much care, and with a distinct avowal of the purpose of settling the Constitution, the first three acts recognizing the power in the President of his own will and pleasure to make removals—would that same body of men in less than a month after they had enacted these three great statutes in which they had put this construction on the Constitution have enacted this clause with any other meaning than the one I have stated? They said only "removable at pleasure," referring back to the first three acts to determine at whose pleasure the marshal is to be removed.

The Senator from Vermont said that there has been only silent acquiescence in this construction of the Constitution; that there has been no actual assertion that that was the true construction of the Constitution. In reply to that I say that from the time of the passage of these acts up to 1867 every single President, including George Washington down to Abraham Lincoln, exercised, actively, affirmatively, the power of removal, and he had no other sanction for this power except the Constitution of the United States. I affirm, and I asserted it in debate last winter, although the Senator from Vermont had stated the contrary, that there had not been one single statute ever enacted prior to 1867 which pretended to confer upon the President the power of removal. On the contrary, I assert that every single statute passed upon the subject recognized in distinct terms as an existing constitutional power the power of the President to make removals. I will allude to some of these statutes.

So that it shall not be understood that after these acts—the Senator only referred to one, but there were three, all to the same effect—after these great acts passed in July, August, and September, 1789, affirming this power of the President, that it may not be understood that the country, Congress, and everybody else went to sleep and acquiesced, in this dormant condition, in the exercise of this power, I will show that the belief and conviction that this power thus recognized in the three acts referred to was a living, active principle of administration all through the long period of history from 1789 to 1867.

I have already alluded to the judiciary act, which would be unmeaning, which would be insensible, which would actually be a disgrace to the men who passed it for its imperfection, if it were not upon the understanding and conviction that "removable at pleasure," without stating by whom, was well understood by everybody to mean "removable at the pleasure of the President of the United States."

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be through directly, and I would rather go on.

Mr. DOLPH. I merely rose to make a suggestion about a statute passed in 1862 that I suppose contained an authority to the President to remove an officer.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi declines to yield.

Mr. GEORGE. On the 2d of March, 1799, an act was passed on this subject in which it was provided:

That in case of the death, resignation, or removal from office of the Postmaster-General, all his duties shall be performed by his assistant.

In the case of death, resignation, or removal, without stating by whom removed or by whom to be removed, proceeding upon the idea as I have just stated it that nobody doubted or disputed the power of the President to remove. So on April 30, 1798, the very same provision with reference to the chief clerk succeeding to the duties of the office of the Secretary in case of removal or vacancy in the office was applied to the chief clerk of the Navy Department.

Now I come down to the act of 1820, to which the Senator from Vermont called my attention, and which he read. I shall not read all of it, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the provision on the subject of removal there. After enumerating the various officers to which the statute applied and fixing their term at four years, then we have this language:

But shall be removable from office at pleasure.

Without saying whose pleasure or by whom, meaning of course the pleasure of the President of the United States, as he had all along up to that time exercised that power and as he continued to exercise it without complaint of usurpation after the act passed.

Now the Senator from Vermont thinks that was conferring power on the President. Why, sir, it is a recognition, a plain recognition of the the power, and nothing else. If it conferred power, no person is named, even by implication, on whom it is conferred.

And here I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there never is in any of these statutes anything said about the removability of the officer, after these three first great statutes had been passed, except only in cases where a term of office was fixed in the statutes. In the First Congress, I have shown to the Senate, when they came to provide for the office of marshal they fixed his term at four years, and then to exclude the conclusion that Congress meant that he should hold that irrevocably, independent of the will of the President, they put in the words "subject to removal;" and so in this act of 1820 which fixed a term of four years for a long list of officers the same provision is made, simply and solely for the purpose of excluding the conclusion that from the words "hold their offices for the term of four years" Congress meant that they should not be removed during that term. By the language used Congress adopted and referred to the settled constitutional practice of the country, that the removal should be at the pleasure of the President without mentioning him.

So then, sir, up to the war—and I have not examined the legislation during the war—there was no statute passed by Congress on this subject that did not recognize the power of the President to make the removal as a power vested in him by the Constitution, and there is no statute that undertakes to confer the power on the President, every statute proceeding on the idea that the President already had the power.

I might close my argument here, being sustained by the First Congress, sustained by Mr. Madison, sustained by every act of Congress ever passed up to the year 1861, sustained by every President, including George Washington, from 1789 down to 1861, by the practice of the country, the settled, uniform, unbroken practice. And this settled, uniform and unbroken practice applied as well up to that time to military officers as it did to civil officers, for the first act that ever was passed which interfered with the power of the President to remove military officers, as far as I can learn, was in 1866.

But the Senator from Vermont says that it is conceded that the President can not exercise the power of removal as to military officers, and if the power is not good for them it is not good for civil officers. This is not a question for the Senate in reference to the power of the President over military officers. It may as well be argued that if he has the power over civil officers he has the power over military officers, as that if he has not the power over military officers he has not it over civil officers.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me to suggest that there is a very great distinction? The Constitution has a clause declaring in terms that Congress shall have power to make rules and regulations to govern the Army and Navy, and therefore an act of Congress relating to the military establishment is wholly different from the executive power of the President over civil officers.

Mr. GEORGE. That is one ground, but I do not want to argue that now. As the Senator from Texas has suggested, I was about to state that was a distinct power; but there is something else, too, in a military officer which does not apply to a civil officer, and which deserves consideration, and which, when that question comes up, if it ever does come up, it will be time enough to argue.

There is involved in the relation of a military officer to the Government of the United States the idea of a contract that is not involved in the idea of a civil officer. A civil officer is allowed to resign when he pleases. You can not force him to discharge the duties of his office. You can shoot a military officer if he does not discharge his duties as he ought to do. He can not resign without the approbation of the commander-in-chief. So there is something of the idea of a contract entered into by the United States with a military officer, which does not exist in the other case, and that is entitled to weight in considering that question.

I express no opinion about that now. That is not the question before the Senate. The question here is whether we shall repeal the statute passed in 1867, and amended in 1869, which destroyed the power of the President in reference to a civil officer, the power which he had exercised from the beginning of the Government down to 1867, recognized by every Congress, exercised by every President from the beginning down to that time as his just and lawful right; whether now, after this acquiescence for three-quarters of a century, undisputed by any act of Congress—it may have been disputed by certain individuals, disputed by certain great men; but undisputed in the official administration of the Government; undisputed in the legislative acts of Congress—we shall reverse all this? That is the question.

Now, sir, this power of the President is fortified, if anything is or can be fortified by precedents, by precedents established at the period in our history when political and party passions were asleep, when only patriotism, a desire to advance the welfare and the glory of this great nation, was the moving-spring to the action of statesmen. Whether a construction thus and under these circumstances, and by such men, deliberately adopted, deliberately reaffirmed through three-quarters of a century, deliberately and continuously acted upon by every President, including Washington and Abraham Lincoln—whether that construction is now at this day to be thrown aside and trampled under foot as wrong—I do not believe that the Senate will do this.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I might perhaps give my vote for the repeal of these sections of the Revised Statutes, as I shall, without saying anything upon the subject, and I would do so but for my desire to draw a distinction between the grounds of unconstitutionality, which will not govern my vote, and the grounds of expediency, which will, as by recurrence to the early debate in the famous Congress of 1789 it will be found that the double topic of constitutionality and of expediency or civil prudence governed now one and now another of the members of that body. My own view of the constitutional relation of the removal of officers is that the power is vested in the President, and that the Senate is not at all involved by the constitutional provision in any participation in removals.

The debate that has been referred to, and in which the Senator from Mississippi has been correct in his view, and the Senator from Vermont has accurately displayed the votes, took up a very great question in government. It was undoubtedly a very important difference in the frame work of this Constitution of ours and of this Government in its workings, whether by proper inferences in the silence of the terms of the Constitution there was laid the power of removal by the President or only the power of removal with the consent of the Senate. The inferences were powerfully presented that as no appointment could be made by the Constitution without the concurrence of the Senate, so in the silence of any cutting short of the office, if the conclusion was to be drawn as to where the regulative and administrative powers of appointment were to be lodged, the removal should require the same concurrence of the Senate; and as there were no express provisions whatever, it was not merely a question of interpretation as if it were a deed or a will, but to be interpreted in the aspect of its application to the unfolding and expanding interests of the great nation that was expected to fall under and to support this Government.

Therefore, as it has always seemed to me without reference to any controlling consideration of interpretation (which I think does not favor an inference by itself even that the Senate should participate in removals) on the larger scale of whether or not the Senate should be and should need to be in active and constant communication with the Executive for the welfare of the country in the unforeseen, the unexpected, but, nevertheless, the, perhaps, vital interests that might arise for the removal of officers, there is but one solution.

It will be readily seen, too, that if removals from office were to turn upon two concurrent and independent judgments, and upon those judgments under the political system of ours, varying in their estimates one from the other, the Executive from the Senate, as to what was prudent, what was right, what was judicious, and what would be injurious, we could have nothing established in this Government in that behalf but two powers that must constantly communicate, and might, in the nature of things, be constantly in oppugnation, and then the result must follow that the repugnance of the Senate must keep in office under the President a man that he desired to dispense with, and with whose action under him he could not accomplish his duty.

We can find in the British constitution an illustration of the impossibility of any such working repugnance. The Senator from Vermont has referred to the system of England and of Russia where this imperial power now sought to be continued or restored to the President is the possession of the Crown. But does not the Senator know, does not every Senator know, that when the limited monarchy had been reduced to the relation that the monarch must have a responsible ministry drawn from the House of Commons, the result has grown up that, though the Queen appoints in council by and with the consent and advice of that council, though the Queen stands vested with this hereditary traditional power, yet by the necessity that there can not be in the constant exercise of the executive duty of removal from office an opportunity of repugnance between the Queen and the responsible ministry, to-day in the working of the British constitution every removal and every appointment is made by the cabinet—a committee of the House of Commons. And so when the very extreme case was raised of what seemed an entertaining, but was, nevertheless, an important question, the bed-chamber question, the Ministry insisted that the Queen must be surrounded by officers of the appointment of the Ministry.

I cite this only as evidence that under whatever scheme of government, and by whatever official or titulary authority this power may be exercised, there never can be a good working in the constant increase of appointments and removals if two independent bodies are to exercise it. If it remains in the Queen in practical exertion it can not be in the Ministry, who are responsible for it.

We therefore recognize higher considerations, as it seems to me, than mere questions of interpretation; and by a great vote in the body first charged with the responsibility concerning this determination, whether rested wholly upon constitutional necessity that this power must be lodged in the President and exercised by him, and not curbed, or whether it rested in prudence that if it were now presently to be decided it would by Congress be vested in the action of the Executive, such was the result, the body deciding, as the Senator from Massachusetts suggests, against its own prerogative so far as the Senate was concerned. And as was stated while the Senator from Mississippi was addressing the Senate, by a suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts, of the seven members who were in the convention who discussed and voted upon this measure, six out of the seven held the power to be constitutionally in the President as I understand, and only one single member of the seven dissented from that view, but he concurred also in voting that it should be reposed in the Executive.

Now, Mr. President, having stated this view, I will briefly say that I do not consider it a just constitutional inference from this constitutional proposition, which I concur in, that in all laws in the constitution of office it shall not be competent, within the power of Congress, to affix a durable tenure on an office. In my judgment, that inference from the silence of the Constitution in terms and this constitutional rule which is educed by inference and by expediency, would transcend both the inference and the expediency if it was to be held that the two Houses of Congress (in whom is vested the whole legislative power, including the President's right of revision) had not the right to impress upon an office an indelible durability according to the will of the law-making power.

The whole subject in this point of view, it seems to me, swings entirely clear of the question whether you can invade the constitutional power of the President, or whether you can assert an unconstitutional power of the Senate in respect to appointments. If the interests of this community in vital points shall require that there shall be such a constitution of an office as that it shall last for five years or six years, and that the incumbent shall not be removed by any power, by the President, or by the President with the concurrence of the Senate, but by no power whatever, except by impeachment, under the Constitution, I can not hold that such an exercise of legislative power is unconstitutional by inferences drawn out of the appointing or the removing power. It belongs, certainly, in its substance, and in all its necessity, in the very bed of law-making authority.

The President in his appointments, the Senate in concurrence, the removals by the President, all are for the laws, that they, such as they are, shall not be either enlarged or disparaged by any executive power or by any mere senatorial authority.

That legislation eo nomine and in that purpose of restriction of the power of appointment or the power of removal by the President, would be unconstitutional, all agree, in regard to appointments; but that to provide for filling a fiscal place, so that the officer should stand as a mere custodian of the public fisc, as is an office existing in England that is unremovable except on impeachment, should be within the power of the government of this country, if, by their legislative authority, they chose to exert it, I do not doubt. In that point of view in the very careful examinations which I was obliged to make of the virtue of the tenure of office act in my former relations to the subject and in my consideration of it as a Senator, I have never been able, though looking at it from the side that I did, and under such bias as you may suppose might have affected me, to conclude that a law which should affix a certain degree of durability in tenure of an office was in and of itself unconstitutional. I have sought to draw attention to this matter that it may be seen that when I vote, as I shall, for the repeal of these clauses, I do not cover the proposition that the law-making power of this Government is precluded from giving a durable tenure to an office.

For the same reasons which induce me now, and I hope on all occasions, to avoid anything that would cripple the just faculties of the Constitution, however much we may fail to foresee all the scope and grasp that may need to be lodged in any one of its provision; for the same reasons which prevent me from undertaking to cripple the executive authority in respect to appointments and removals, I have an equal indisposition in advance by any authority of my vote to cripple the authority of the legislative power of the United States in respect to the durability of offices.

And now for the question of expediency. I think we shall all feel, if all will not confess, that the legislation of 1867, however patriotic, and, if you please, for my present purpose however constitutional, was a piece of legislation that was improvident. If the exigency required this legislation it was required in respect to the incumbent of the chief executive office and the views of public affairs which in the execution of his office he was supposed to, and, if you please, was expected to pursue. It was a very vigorous piece of legislation. In my judgment, it placed the executive power in a straight-jacket. In vinculis was the exercise of his duties in regard to appointment to and removal from office. No more remarkable instance of the possibility of such a constraint can be imagined than that of the inability of the President of the United States to remove a member of his own Cabinet. Is not the President imprisoned if his Cabinet are to be his masters by the will of the Senate? And there you see that no imaginable prudence or civil exigency could induce legislation at that time except by some occasion arising in the particular character and conduct of the incumbent. I pass no judgment one way or the other upon the views of the President and his policy, or the exercise of this legislative power; my only point is that it was exercised and with power so as to paralyze in a great degree the function of the President and that all agree is lodged by the Constitution in that great magistrate.

We have now by the repeal of that measure and the substitution of the present statute the enactment as it stands. The latter may perhaps be called a relic of what was left. The Senator from Vermont announces in his judgment that these two measures are in principle alike. In my judgment no two could be more different. The gist, the force of the former measure was to put the President of the United States with no power of removal, not only except by the concurrence of the Senate, but no power in the recess or ad interim, no power except on the principle of cause and not discretion, cause provable, ascertainable, measurable, ponderable, and a removal placed him under the responsibility of an accusation and an accountability to the judgment of this body whether his action had been sincere and lawful in morals and political duty at least.

But now this vigorous restraint is removed, and all that is left is that in the case of officers having a fixed term, the President has the power of suspension in his discretion. His power of removal never was anything but the power of removal in his discretion. For caprice, for injury to the public service he was always amenable, as every officer in this Government is amenable to some judgment at law. He was amenable to impeachment. So the discretion in the power of removal is the very measure and outline of the power of the President concerning the change of officers.

What then remains? Why, this removal is called a suspension, which is not a constitutional power, lawful if you please when it may be accorded by the law-making authority, and there is left no real substance that either constrains the President, as we all can see in looking back upon what has been done under some previous Administrations, as well as more conspicuously under the present Administration. It no longer involves accusation; it no longer covers accountability of reasons and amenability to the judgment of this body concerning them, and it now seems to me as really only an entanglement and confusion concerning what should be right and plain of the power and the responsibility of the President and of the power of the Senate and its right to call him to accountability under that constitutional power.

As I should vote for repealing the scheme of the statute of 1867, if it was on the statute-book now, on the grounds that would be insisted upon in reference to its interference with executive authority, I shall vote for the repeal here, although robbed of those constraints, because in the working between the two authorities of the Government—the Senate and the President—there must necessarily be an imperfect ability on our part to supervise the matter of suspension, and it is to the President an embarrassment only in the form and manner in which he executes his power. When, therefore, we consider all the essential element of constraint over the Executive, which was the product of ad hominem legislation, I find nothing that would justify it in this matter of appointments and the Senate's constitutional right in regard to appointments that should keep that measure of suspension in existence.

Suspension from office is, in my judgment, under any system of government, not a desirable working or recognized form of authority. I am satisfied with the power of removal and responsibility of removal; and I do think that this manipulation of offices which perhaps has never been used in the sense in which I now suggest, that of suspension and restoration, may be a power and a faculty which may be wielded to the public detriment. If a man can be suspended because he resists in his action a certain purpose of the President, and can be restored when he yields to that impression, you have a working power lodged in executive authority which in my judgment can not be usefully vested anywhere.

There is, however, some repugnance on my part to the repeal of section 1769, which does not seem to me to be absolutely or perhaps essentially in its main force and feature one connected with appointment or with the question of removal. This section, as the Senate will remember, relates to the condition in which, under the admitted interpretation of the Constitution, the President may have the power from one period of incumbency to another to keep in office an appointee who has never been accepted by the Senate, and has been absolutely rejected. I suppose it will be agreed that the clause, which in the public interest allows the President to fill up vacancies occurring in the recess till the end of the next session of the Senate, is a provision for a public occasion which ought not to be overlooked, and should be, as it was, provided for. Controversy arose whether that meant vacancies which actually occurred as for the first time during a recess, and the interpretation, and I think the correct interpretation, was that any vacancy which happened to subsist or persist in the recess was to be filled. Then there comes this situation, and this section of the statute only refers to that constitutional power of appointment from occurrences of vacancies in a recess as interpreted in our constitutional jurisprudence.

The meaning of that was in the Constitution that a President should fill without the concurrence of the Senate, only for that occasion, and when in the relation between the Senate and the President in regard to the appointment of a man to office the Senate shall have rejected him as unsuitable for appointment, that on the adjournment of Congress there should be an opportunity of immediately filling up the place with the same rejected officer and that is to continue during the next session of the Senate, and thus step by step there should be a resolute purpose of the President of the United States that under a liberal interpretation of constitutional authority for vacancies occurring in recess he should take to himself from that mere circumstance a power of keeping in place from time to time against the rejection of the Senate, is a perversion of constitutional authority that ought to be curbed in some way or other.

If I correctly view these matters constitutionally, I understand that a permanent system of that kind on the part of any President of the United States (and no occasion has arisen in our history to make an imputation of that kind), if it should occur, would be plainly a matter for impeachment; but as we all know this subject is one that if it be constitutional on the part of Congress to curb any perverse or dangerous tendency on the part of the Executive, I am not sure that section 1769 ought to be repealed, which simply deals with the question of the office, and provides that when the President comes in that relation to the Senate that he does not and will not fill the place by the concurrence of the Senate it shall be vacant. When by rejection the Senate has expressed its judgment, this section expresses the effect of that exercise of the constitutional function of this body.

I am not at all sure that section 1769 ought to be repealed, which provides that when the office shall be left in this condition it shall pass out and shall not need to be filled. If I could separate the vote on that section from the others I might vote to retain it. Unquestionably it is treated as if it were necessarily in substance and in its logic on a footing with the other sections named. It seems to me to rest upon a separate proposition. I make the reservation that by that section now being repealed, if it should receive my vote on the bill, as that covers all without the extrication of that section from them, it is not to be treated as a conclusion of any votes in this body that it is not within the power of legislation to prevent an excess of Presidential usurpation by some other means than those of impeachment.

Mr. HOAR. I had desired to address the Senate very briefly in answer to the Senator from Vermont, but if there be no other Senator desiring to discuss this question so that we can have a vote to-night I will forego that opportunity. If any other Senator desires to speak to the bill I will move an executive session. [A pause.] I am informed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] that there will probably be some further debate on the bill. I therefore move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, I retaining the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, December 17, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. WILSON, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the remainder of the week, on account of sickness in his family.

HARTFORD A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. BUCK. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the House Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9859) to amend sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, and making Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry in place of Middletown.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That paragraph 3 of section 2533 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America is hereby amended so that said paragraph shall read as follows:

"Third. The district of Hartford; to comprise the waters and shores of the towns of Saybrook, Clinton, Westbrook, Old Saybrook, Essex, Chester, Haddam, East Haddam, Middletown, Cromwell, Chatham, Portland, Wethersfield, Rocky Hill, Glastonbury, Hartford, East Hartford, Windsor, Windsor Locks, East Windsor, South Windsor, Suffield, and Enfield, as bounded on the 1st day of January, 1886; in which Hartford shall be the port of entry, and Saybrook, Clinton, Westbrook, Old Saybrook, Essex, Chester, Haddam, East Haddam, Middletown, Chatham, Portland, Cromwell, Rocky Hill, Wethersfield, Glastonbury, and East Hartford, ports of delivery."

SEC. 2. That paragraph 3 of section 2534 of the Revised Statutes of the United States of America is hereby amended so that said paragraph shall read as follows:

"Third. In the district of Hartford a collector, who shall reside at Hartford."

The report (by Mr. O'FERRALL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill H. R. 8350, being a bill to make Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, a port of entry, beg leave to report the accompanying substitute for said bill, and recommend its passage.

Middletown, a city situated on the right bank of the Connecticut River, in the State of Connecticut, was made a port of entry by the act of March 2, 1799, when most of the importations of foreign merchandise coming to the people who lived in the valley of the Connecticut River were consigned to that place.

The territory for which Middletown was then made a port of entry included the town of Hartford, which is also situated on the right bank of the river, and is about 16 miles above the former place.

Since 1799 the consignments of imported merchandise at Hartford have greatly increased, while the consignments at Middletown have been reduced, so that very little business is now being done at the latter place in the way of importations.

Between July 1, 1885, and April 30, 1886 (ten months), there were received at Hartford three hundred and forty "immediate transportation" entries, representing an appraised value of $802,458. The assessed duties on these entries was $321,334.37; amount of duties paid by Hartford merchants during said ten months was $251,866.55, and the duty on merchandise which was in bond (duty not yet paid) at Hartford on June 1, 1886, was nearly $100,000. During the past twelve months duties on merchandise coming to Middletown have amounted to only about $500.

By these figures it will be seen that since 1799 Hartford has become the real commercial center for the customs district of Middletown, and your committee are of the opinion that for the convenience of the business community in this district the change proposed by the bill should be made. The Government already owns a large and commodious building at Hartford in which are accommodations for the collector and his assistants.

The change will not increase expenditures in the collection of the revenue, or otherwise; on the contrary, your committee can see no reason why the expense of collecting the duties in this customs district will not be considerably reduced from what it is likely to be in the future if the custom-house and its officers are to be kept in one place, while the larger part of business is in another place, 16 miles away, and being done in a branch office.

There was no objection, and the House Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCK moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. MEARS.

Mr. CROXTON. I ask, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed on him.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Let the bill and report be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is, directed to pay to John W. Mears the sum of $200, being amount of fine improperly imposed upon and collected from him and which was turned into the Treasury of the United States.

The report (by Mr. TRIGG) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5477) to restore to John W. Mears a fine improperly imposed upon him, respectfully report:

The claimant was master of the schooner Briton M. Tilton, of Onancock, Va. On his return from James River to Chincoteague Bay, Virginia, on the evening of March 22, 1884, he ran his schooner into Wachapreague Inlet to land some of the men who had gone to Norfolk with him. He anchored at least a mile above the anchorage for vessels, where the channel is not more than a hundred yards wide. He went ashore in the afternoon, expecting to return to the schooner by sunset, and omitted to tell the crew, who were new men, to place the lights in position. Claimant was detained on shore, and the crew, thinking the anchorage was not on a navigable stream, failed to place the lights upon the schooner, as required by Revised Statutes, section 4233. The schooner was without a light for a few hours in the early part of the night and before the return of claimant on board. While in this condition a small revenue-cutter (drawing 2 feet 6 inches of water), which had been detained in the bay above by the tide, passed by, and the schooner was reported for not having lights, and the fine of $200, provided by section 4234 Revised Statutes, was imposed upon claimant, and he was compelled to pay the same, and it was covered into the Treasury before he obtained judicial action in the premises.

George Toy, the collector at that point, in a letter of October 27, 1884, to the Secretary of the Treasury, says, "I am satisfied it was not the intention of Mr. Mears to violate the law in the premises;" and he recommends that the fine be remitted.

Your committee are of opinion that the fine should have been remitted, and they therefore recommend that the bill (H. R. 5477) which they have had under consideration do pass.

There was no objection, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CROXTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS TO DISABLED PERSONS, NAVY OR MARINE CORPS.

On motion of Mr. BURROWS, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4756 and section 4757 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and the same are hereby, amended by inserting the words "or as an appointed petty officer, or both," after the words "as an enlisted person" in the former section, and after the words "as an enlisted man" in the latter section.

The report (by Mr. ELDREDGE) was read, as follows:

This bill has been once reported from the Committee on Pensions favorably, and the same is now in Committee of the Whole. This being identical with the House bill, the committee recommend its passage, and in addition to the report of this committee already made upon the House bill hereby adopt as a part of this report Senate Report No. 452.

Section 4756 provides for the payment of a pension out of the naval pension-fund to persons who "served as an enlisted person in the Navy or Marine Corps," &c., and section 4757 provides for aid from that fund to "every disabled person who has served in the Navy or Marine Corps as an enlisted man," &c. This bill is designed to cover the cases of those who actually rendered the same service as appointed petty officers, although not actually enlisted.

Your committee are in receipt of the following letter from the Navy Department in regard to this bill, recommending it to the favorable consideration of Congress:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, April 6, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to Senate bill No. 1526, and to recommend it to the favorable consideration of the Committee on Pensions of the United States Senate.

Under existing laws enlisted persons performing certain duties are entitled to service pensions when they become disabled, while persons performing the same duties under appointments are deprived the benefits of such service.

This bill has my heartiest commendation, as it will not only afford justice to a large class of very deserving persons, but will have the tendency to induce men of experience to remain in the service, which will be of great advantage, particularly in view of the contemplated increase in the number and efficiency of vessels of war.

I would earnestly invite the early consideration of the bill.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. J. I. MITCHELL,
Chairman of the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

The following letter also shows the necessity for this action, and the inequalities of the present law:

UNITED STATES NAVAL HOSPITAL, Norfolk, Va., April 1, 1886.

SIR: Senate bill 1526, referred to the Committee on Pensions, is one in which I with other unfortunates take a very keen interest. Should its provisions become law a long-delayed justice would be done the "appointed petty officers" in the Navy, apothecaries and pay yeomen, who, owing to the vascillating policy of the Navy Department in changing their status at frequent intervals, are entirely debarred from all benefits for long service.

I have served as an apothecary in the Navy a great many years, before, during, and since the late war, and yet have no claim now that I have grown old. There are many others similarly situated and to whom the passage of the above bill, 1526, would afford relief.

For myself and others, I most respectfully ask your favorable consideration and support when the bill is before you for action.

I have the honor to be, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. S. BARRY,
Apothecary, United States Navy.

The amendment proposed in this bill will cover but a comparatively small number of cases, but it will save your committee the trouble of considering special bills in their behalf, and as it seems to be in the line of previous legislation, as well as but an act of simple justice to old servants of the Government, we report back the bill with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURROWS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF CERTAIN OFFICERS IN THE NAVY.

On motion of Mr. WISE, by unanimous consent, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 830) for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Vice-Admiral Stephen C. Rowan and Rear-Admiral John L. Worden may, after forty years' service, be retired from active service by the President, upon their own application, with the highest pay of the grade to which they belong.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WISE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JAMES M. HAGAR.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 7507) for the relief of James M. Hagar, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, directed to pay, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to James M. Hogar, managing owner of the ship Saint James, of Richmond, Me., the sum of $1,325, that being the amount illegally exacted from said ship by the United States consul at Bremerhaven and covered into the Treasury, which sum said James M. Hogar is entitled to have refunded to him, as appears by statements of the Secretary of State and Fifth Auditor of the Treasury.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendments:

Strike out the name "Hogar" wherever it occurs, and insert "Hagar;" also Strike out the sum proposed by the bill and insert "$1,112.78;" also
To amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of James M. Hagar."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DINGLEY. This is unanimously reported by the Committee on Claims, and is in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. The report of the Committee on Claims will show the whole facts.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I would like to have the report read.

The report (by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri) was read, as follows:

That it appears by communications from the State Department and Treasury Department, and from the petition of the claimant, that in the month of August, 1871, the American ship Saint James, of which James M. Hagar, of Richmond, Me., was managing owner, arrived at Bremerhaven, Germany, and that immediately on arrival several seamen deserted, whereupon the United States consul at that port, without giving notice to the captain of the vessel, and without proper investigation into the facts, exacted three months' extra wages of the vessel, claiming to act under section 4600 of the Revised Statutes, repealed by the shipping act of 1884, amounting to $1,112.78 in gold, or $1,325 in American currency and exchange, in which latter currency said James M. Hagar paid the exaction. The master of the vessel paid the amount, under protest, in order to obtain his clearance papers, and at once appealed to the American minister at Berlin, Mr. Bancroft, who caused the case to be investigated, and subsequently reported to the State Department that the exaction was illegal, and that the consul, who had required the payment of the same without warrant of law, should be removed.

The State Department, after further investigation, affirmed the decision of Minister Bancroft, and removed the consul by abolishing the office. The consul, in the mean time, finding that he had got into trouble by his course, forwarded the sum exacted of the vessel, amounting to $1,112.78 in coin (worth at that time $1,325 in American currency), and it was covered into the Treasury in 1871. The illegal conduct of the consul is further shown by this course, because, if he had acted under the law (now repealed) by which he attempted to justify his course, he should have paid two-thirds of the sum to the seamen (who evidently received nothing), and only one-third of the amount should have been paid into the Treasury.

It was not until the return of the ship to the United States, some time after the transaction, that all the facts became known to the managing owner, when he applied to the Treasury Department to have the amount illegally exacted returned to him. He was informed that this would require action by Congress, as the amount had been covered into the Treasury. Subsequently application was made to Congress, but up to this time no action has been had.

Your committee believe that it is clear the claimant should have refunded to him the sum illegally exacted from him and actually covered into the Treasury in coin in 1871, and therefore report back the bill favorably, with an amendment striking out the words "thirteen hundred and twenty-five dollars," and inserting instead, "eleven hundred and twelve dollars and seventy-eight cents." We also recommend amending the bill by striking out the name "Hogar" wherever it occurs in the bill and title, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Hagar."

There being no objection, the amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended to conform to the amendments adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

VICKSBURG AND MERIDIAN RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected, and put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to examine and adjust the account with the Vicksburg and Meridian, formerly the Southern, Railroad Company of Mississippi, for internal-revenue tax, and to refund to the said company the amount found by him to have been collected from said company as tax on its bonded debt for the years 1865 and 1866; and a sufficient sum, not to exceed $6,025.35, is hereby appropriated for that purpose, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to hear an explanation of the bill or the reading of the report subject to objection.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the gentleman from Mississippi will be permitted to make a brief explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. BARKSDALE. A verbal explanation, Mr. Speaker, of the bill will economize the time of the House and save the reading of quite a lengthy report.

As will be observed by the bill, it does not authorize the payment of any money from the Treasury until the accounts of the railroad company have been examined and adjusted by the Secretary of the Treasury, as he is required to do. The facts of the case are as follows: The tax thus authorized to be refunded, in the event he shall find it has been unjustly exacted from the company, was a tax illegally levied under the act of June 30, 1864. According to judicial interpretation, and I have that in my hand as set forth in the report of the committee, it was the intent of the law to levy the tax in the event that profits were derived by the railroad company from its business operations.

Where there was a net profit on the business, the tax was to be collected, but if there was no profit, or net earnings, then, by the terms of the law, no tax was to be levied.

It seems, however, that the Internal Revenue Department construed the law to require the collection of the tax without reference to this condition; and the head of that Department did collect it, though it was shown that the road so far from doing a profitable business, was in fact doing a very losing business. In 1877 the Internal Revenue Department brought suit against the company for taxes which had accrued the preceding years; obtained judgment, and the money was paid over. On the trial of the case, however, the railroad company offered to offset the judgment obtained against them to the amount of $6,025.35, the sum which had been illegally collected. The court refused to allow the offset upon the trial upon the technical ground that it was barred by the statute of limitations. That fact is shown by the report, two reports I may say, for there have been two favorable reports on this very subject, one to the Forty-seventh Congress and one to the Forty-ninth; and precisely the same question was presented in the case of the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company. There, also, a tax was illegally collected, as in this case of the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company, which was refunded by an act of Congress February 19, 1879.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I simply ask, not that this money be paid over unconditionally to the company, but that the Secretary of the Treasury be instructed to examine the accounts and adjust them and pay over the money he finds to be due upon the conditions stated. They are all set forth in the report of the committee, or in the reports, for I will repeat that there have been two reports upon this subject—one to the Forty-seventh and one to the present Congress.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. This bill limits the amount to be refunded?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Yes, to the amount $6,025.35, in the event it shall be found due.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand this is for the refund of an income tax which was levied upon the earnings of the company.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Yes, upon the earnings of the road. The road, however, was far from deriving a profit upon its business—was, in fact, doing a losing business.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. When was this paid?

Mr. BARKSDALE. In 1865 and 1866.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Were they doing a losing business then?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Yes, sir; and that fact is fully substantiated by the report of the committee.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But how could the tax have been levied? Were they not compelled to make a return under oath as to the income of the road?

Mr. BARKSDALE. They were not, so far as I am aware.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No officer of the road?

Mr. BARKSDALE. I think not.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Private individuals were, and I was under the impression that corporations were also required to make such returns.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am not sure, but I think not. At any rate the report of the managers of the road shows that it was doing a losing business at that time.

Mr. LANHAM. I will state to the gentleman from Iowa it will be left to the Secretary of the Treasury anyway. There is no appropriation in the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does the bill leave it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury as to the amount to be allowed, or whether any amount shall be allowed?

Mr. BARKSDALE. The amount is limited.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does it leave it discretionary with the Secretary of the Treasury whether any amount shall be allowed?

Mr. BARKSDALE. It requires that he shall examine and adjust the account.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LUCINDA BARRETT.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 356), and that the House do now consider the same.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Lucinda Barrett, widow of Thomas S. Barrett, deceased, late a private in Company M of the Sixth Regiment Illinois Cavalry.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS IN ALABAMA.

Mr. MARTIN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 32) to amend an act entitled "An act to exclude the public lands in Alabama from the operation of the laws relating to mineral lands," approved March 3, 1883, be taken from the House Calendar and considered by the House at this time.

The bill was read in part.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa (interrupting the reading). I think there is too much in that bill to allow us to pass it now without investigation.

Mr. MARTIN. I hope the gentleman will not object until he gives me an opportunity of explaining the bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I have no objection to hearing a statement from the gentleman, subject to my right to object.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, prior to the year 1879 all the lands in the State of Alabama were subject to homestead and pre-emption entry. At that time the lands in ten counties of the State were withdrawn from homestead and pre-emption entry and were classed as mineral lands, and could only be taken up by paying at the rate of $10 an acre for the same. Shortly after that there was a modification made, by the terms of which, upon any one making it appear to the General Land Office that the lands were not mineral lands, they could be entered for homesteads as theretofore.

In the year 1882, I think it was, the Secretary of the Interior directed the withholding of all patents. In that way a great wrong was about being done to those who had occupied the lands, some of them as much as ten or fifteen years. In order to remedy that, bills were introduced, one in the Senate of the United States by General MORGAN, our Senator, and another in the House by the Representative of the seventh district [Mr. FORNEY], providing against anything of that kind. I think this same bill, to which I refer, was the one which provided that all of the lands in the State of Alabama should be exposed to public sale, and that after the public sale had been made, then the lands should again be the subject of homestead and pre-emption entry.

Under that law, in last December, if I mistake not, the President of the United States caused the publication of a proclamation offering all these lands for sale. In January last the people of Alabama, becoming apprised of the fact that the lands of the State would, under that sale, fall into the hands of syndicates, and that instead of being taken up as homes for the people they would be held and the people would be kept out of those lands, caused representations to be made by myself and others to the President of the United States through the Secretary of the Interior setting forth all of these facts; and in deference to the wishes of the people of Alabama the President caused his proclamation to be revoked and the lands to be withdrawn from sale. Now, the object of this bill is simply to allow the people of Alabama to pre-empt and enter lands for homesteads. All the lands under the provisions of the bill are held for homesteads alone.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. In what quantities?

Mr. MARTIN. In quantities not to exceed 160 acres—I believe the same as everywhere else.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does it require actual occupation?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir. It requires proofs of actual occupation. It contains everything that is required to protect the public interest.

Mr. HOLMAN. In the confusion I could not hear distinctly the whole of the explanation of the gentleman from Alabama. I wish to ask him in what respect does this bill change the existing law? As the law now stands, in the State of Alabama lands are subject to be taken under the pre-emption law, under the homestead law, and by private entry after lands have been offered for sale. There are those three modes in which lands may be acquired.

Mr. MARTIN. Not now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; now.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to his satisfaction. This is the same bill which we passed in the Forty-eighth Congress, and which the gentleman approved and amended.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill introduced by Mr. HEWITT?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill was exactly right. The object of it was to cut off the last two modes of disposing of those lands—by pre-emption and by sale.

Mr. OATES. It does that.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN. The objection is withdrawn, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOLMAN. While I do not make any motion, I suggest that the other five Southern States, Louisiana, Florida, Arkansas, Georgia, and Mississippi, be included in the provisions of the bill, and I trust the gentlemen representing those States will not object.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. MARTIN] a question with reference to this bill. If I understand it correctly, the first provision is designed to wipe out in Alabama the mineral-land law and make mineral and coal lands procurable under the homestead law?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN EATON. That was done by the act of 1883.

Mr. NELSON. So that mineral and coal lands in that State can be obtained in homestead lots of 160 acres. That is the provision in the first part of the bill. The other part of it is designed to legalize a lot of such entries that have been made in the past. Is not that so?

Mr. MARTIN. The object is to put the people of Alabama upon the same footing in reference to the public lands as the people of Minnesota or of any other State in the Union.

Mr. NELSON. There is no other State in which mineral lands and coal lands can be obtained under the homestead laws, and in my opinion that provision is the vicious part of this bill, though I make no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. VAN EATON. By the act of 1883 it is provided that in the State of Alabama "all public lands, whether mineral or otherwise, shall be subject to disposal only as agricultural lands." That act further provides that "all lands heretofore reported to the General Land Office as containing coal and iron, shall first be offered at public sale." Now, the object of this bill is simply to correct that provision.

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman will read the first part of this bill, he will see that it allows mineral lands to be entered under the homestead law.

Mr. VAN EATON. Of course it does. Congress has already placed the mineral lands of Alabama in that position and made them subject to sale as agricultural lands, but the act of 1883 contains a provision that they must first be offered at public sale, and the Committee on Public Lands, having the fear that, when so offered, they would be bought in large quantities, have brought in this bill, and in their report say this:

> There are, therefore, but three amendments proposed by this bill: 1. It repeals that clause which requires the public lands to be offered at public sale; 2. It confines hereafter the disposal of public lands in Alabama alone to the homestead laws; 3. It confirms bona fide pre-emption entries to the same extent and under the same restrictions" that the act of 1883 confirmed homestead entries theretofore made.

That is to say, all these lands have been made by Congress subject to entry as agricultural lands, but under the act of 1883 they must first be offered for sale, and with the object of preventing the evils that might arise when they were so offered at public sale it is proposed to confine them solely to homestead entries.

Mr. OATES. All the best mineral lands in Alabama are already taken up. Those that are now denominated "mineral lands" are really lands which have only a small portion of mineral, the great bulk of them being agricultural. It has been thought best, therefore, to let poor people take them up in homesteads of 160 acres, and receive whatever benefit may arise from the sale of the small quantity of minerals which the lands contain.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What objection can there be, then, to requiring actual occupancy for at least five years before the patent issues?

Mr. VAN EATON. That is the homestead law.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No; it is not.

Mr. OATES. This bill provides for the occupation of the land.

Mr. NELSON. The only question is, as to the policy of allowing mineral lands to be entered as homestead lands.

Mr. VAN EATON. I will ask the gentleman whether is it better to allow poor people to take up these mineral lands under the homestead law or to allow the public lands to be bought up in bulk by syndicates?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me call my friend's attention to the fact that when those lands were offered for sale many members of the House went to the recent Secretary of the Interior and pleaded with him not to permit them to be bought up for purposes of speculation, and is it not much better that those lands should be entered as homesteads by actual settlers than that they should be bought in large quantities and held for speculation?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would much rather see them held by actual settlers.

Mr. BRUMM. Would not the principal result of this bill be to allow people to enter these lands as homesteads, not really for the purpose of settling there and making homes, but for the purpose of getting the title from the Government for nothing, and then selling the lands as mineral lands to the highest bidder? The only difference is that as the law now stands the Government would get the actual value of these lands as mineral lands; but under the system here proposed speculators would be enabled to make entries by fraud under the homestead system, getting the lands for nothing and thus cheating the Government to that extent.

Mr. VAN EATON. Let me answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM]. As was stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] there are no mineral lands left in this part of the country that are supposed to be worth anything; all the mineral lands have been taken up.

Mr. BRUMM. Then there is no use in passing the bill.

Mr. VAN EATON. These lands happened formerly to be classed as mineral lands. All that we now want to do is to correct the effect of the act of 1883. Already, by the action of Congress, these lands have been made subject to entry as agricultural lands only; but it was provided that they must first be offered for sale. Fearing that if so offered, the lands would be bought for speculation, we wish to repeal or correct that provision of the law, simply making these lands subject to homestead entry.

In further reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I will say there is no possible chance that there should be any more swindling under the homestead law in respect to these lands than anywhere else.

Mr. OATES. This bill is better guarded than the general law.

Mr. VAN EATON. Yes, this proposed enactment is better guarded than the general law.

Mr. BRUMM. I prefer that the bill should not be passed in this hurried way; and I think I must object for the present.

Mr. VAN EATON. I shall be very sorry if the gentleman feels it his duty to object. He will allow me to say that the Committee on Public Lands examined this bill very fully.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Has the committee reported unanimously?

Mr. VAN EATON. The Committee on Public Lands examined the question very carefully, and this is a unanimous report. These lands are about to be sold; and fearing they would get into the hands of speculators, we hurried to bring in this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] object?

Mr. VAN EATON. I hope not.

Mr. McADOO. Do the timber-culture and pre-emption laws apply to these lands?

Mr. VAN EATON. No, sir.

Mr. BRUMM. How many acres are involved in this?

Mr. VAN EATON. About 1,000,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the bill be extended to all of the five States suggested it would embrace a great deal more than 1,000,000 acres.

Mr. VAN EATON. I hope the bill will not be incumbered with that provision. This relief is designed especially for the people of Alabama; and I trust we shall let them have it.

Mr. RYAN. I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi whether this will confirm any entries of lands in Alabama which have been reported to the Department as fraudulent?

Mr. VAN EATON. No, sir; not one.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has not finished the reading of the bill.

The reading of the bill was resumed and concluded.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I desire to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROWELL. I desire to ask why this bill proposes to require actual residence of only two years on the homestead, instead of five years.

Mr. VAN EATON. That is the same commutation clause which is in all the homestead laws; only, in this case, additional guards are provided in reference to proof.

Mr. ROWELL. In this bill you withdraw any right to commute, and provide for only two years' residence. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order. We are losing too much time from the appropriation bill.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 118) relative to certain papers in the State Department by error; when the Speaker signed the same.

AMERICAN FISHING VESSELS IN CANADIAN WATERS.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to make a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 9, 1886.

Mr. DINGLEY submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

"Resolved, That —— additional copies of the President's message relative to the denial by the Canadian authorities of commercial privileges to fishing vessels of the United States, with the accompanying correspondence, be printed for the use of the House."

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the House resolution of December 9, 1886, providing for the printing of additional copies of the President's message relative to the rights of American fishermen in British North American waters, having fully considered the same, recommend that 4,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the House, at an estimated cost of $335, and that the resolution as amended by the insertion of the words "four thousand" in line 1 be passed.

The question being taken on the amendment reported by the committee to insert before the words "additional copies" the words "four thousand," it was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. FARQUHAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIE S. HOWARD.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ Willie S. Howard as a page in the subcommittee-room of the Committee on Appropriations during the residue of the present session, the said Willie S. Howard to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the same compensation as now received by pages of the House.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask for the present consideration of the resolution.

There was no objection; and the resolution was adopted.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

R. H. SINGLETON, LATE CLERK LIBRARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. SPOONER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the father of R. H. Singleton, deceased, late an employé of the House, for the benefit of his orphan children, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the expenses attending his last illness and funeral; said expenses not to exceed $250.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. SPOONER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN AIGERY.

Mr. SPOONER also, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back, with an amendment, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow or legal representatives of John Aigery, late a laborer of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to his salary for six months; also the necessary expenses of his late illness and funeral, not to exceed the sum of $250.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out the words "or legal representatives."

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. SPOONER moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to dispense with the hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will not interpose an objection if the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPHS] is permitted to make one report from the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not object to that.

ADDITIONAL ASSOCIATE JUSTICE, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. JOSEPHS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Territories, reported back the bill (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on the Territories, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAINT PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. NELSON, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. 10056) granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad Company the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALBION S. KEITH.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 1085) for the relief of Albion S. Keith; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move that the morning hour for the call of committees be dispensed with for to-day.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like also to test the sense of the House on dispensing with the next hour. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] I will make the motion to do so, as that is my privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can make the motion to go into the committee, which will test the sense of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; and those who desire the morning hour can vote in the negative.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has the morning hour for the consideration of bills been entered upon?

The SPEAKER. It has not. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to go into the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DINGLEY. That would take away the hour.

The SPEAKER. Those that want the hour can vote for the motion to go into committee. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania to dispense with the second hour.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 80, noes 95.

So the motion was disagreed to.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills begins at seven minutes past 1, and the call rests with the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SKINNER. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to further consider the bill reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs yesterday.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes; and the pending amendment will be reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, Where the lands allotted are only valuable for grazing purposes an additional allotment of such grazing lands in quantities as above provided shall be made to each individual.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The House was dividing on that amendment when the point of no quorum was made.

Mr. SKINNER. It appears the amendment was defeated, whereas such is not the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum was made, and tellers will be appointed——

Mr. PERKINS. I hope that will not be insisted upon, but that the vote will be taken over again.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not object to that, if I am permitted to make a brief statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. My objection simply is that this amendment allows double the quantity of land where it is arid land, fit only for grazing purposes.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think this opens a door very wide for fraud under an improper construction of what is the meaning of the term "arid lands." I believe there is but little land unfit for agriculture upon which good grass may not be grown, or at least a sufficiency for cattle-grazing to a certain extent.

With that statement I am willing to test the sense of the committee by a rising vote instead of by tellers.

Mr. SKINNER. I am willing that the vote may be taken in that way.

The question was taken; the committee divided, and there were—ayes 53, noes 21; so (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

Sections 3, 4, 5, and 6 of the bill were read.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from North Carolina has some amendments to this section, section 6.

Mr. SKINNER. There are two amendments already proposed to that section by the committee: first strike out all after the word "void," in line 17 of section 6, down to and including the words "provided further" in line 23.

The language stricken out here is that portion of the section which provides that these patents when issued shall override the patents authorized to be issued to the tribes or bands. It is entirely superfluous, and this amendment is the natural sequence of striking out that portion of the first section of the bill relating to this subject.

Mr. PERKINS. There is no necessity for it in consequence of the amendment to the first section.

Mr. SKINNER. No, sir; the first section being amended this language is simply surplusage.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman from North Carolina what is the object of striking out all after the word "Congress," in the forty-third line of page 9, providing that the money arising from the sale of these lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States, and made payable only to the Indian or Indian tribe from whom such purchase was made under authority of Congress after the expiration of twenty-five years from the purchase of such land.

Mr. SKINNER. The object of striking out that portion of the section to which the gentleman from Ohio refers is because each purchase, as made, ought to be submitted to Congress and ratified by Congress; and it was thought by the committee that a provision for the taking care of the money in each individual instance could be made by Congress and applied to each purchase better than by undertaking to do it generally in one bill. For instance, one tribe might have its lands set apart in severalty and sell the lands, which would be qualified to have the money at once. Their condition might be such as to justify Congress in paying the money over without delay, while another tribe might not be in such condition for five years, and another for twenty-five years. Hence we thought it better to leave to Congress the question of dealing with each individual case arising under the operation of the law.

Mr. ROGERS. That is a good provision.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question with reference to a portion of the language on page 8, where provision is made that the United States will hold the land thus allotted for a period of twenty-five years, at the expiration of which period it will "convey the same by patent to said Indian or his heirs in fee, discharged of any trusts and free of any charge or incumbrance whatever." Now, this provision is an express stipulation with the tribes that at the end of the twenty-five years a patent shall issue. I think in many instances, in fact I am certain, judging from the past history of these tribes, that it will be absolutely fatal to the Indians to have these patents issued and lands acquired in absolute fee. I suggest, therefore, whether it is not safer to provide in lieu of the language used, "Unless Congress——"

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Or the President.

Mr. HOLMAN. "Shall, for the benefit of the Indian or Indians entitled to any such patents, extend the period."

Mr. SKINNER. I am perfectly willing, though I am of opinion that if an Indian, no matter how wild he may be, after the United States has offered so many inducements for education, is not competent to take charge of his land in that period, then no other period will avail him, even if you extend it to five hundred years.

Mr. PERKINS. I will suggest to the gentleman from Indiana, instead of the language he uses, or instead of requiring the formal action of Congress, whether it would not be sufficient that these patents should issue in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to that; or place it in the discretion of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The first vote is on the amendment of the committee striking out the lines indicated in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to offer first a substitute for the lines which I presume will be stricken out, and to which I presume there will be no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that this applies to the second amendment. The question will be taken on the first amendment.

The first amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps it would be better to let the vote be taken on striking out before I move to amend.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendent proposed by the committee, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

Amend section 6 by striking out all after the word "Congress" in line 43 down to and including the word "necessary" in line 59.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the words proposed to be stricken out be read.

The Clerk read, as follows:

And the principal of all sums agreed to be paid by the United States as the purchase price of any portion of any such reservation shall be payable only to the Indians, or Indian tribe, from whom such purchase was made by express authority of Congress, after the expiration of twenty-five years from the purchase of said lands; but the same shall, in the mean time, be placed in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the tribe or tribes of Indians entitled thereto; and in the mean time, and until such principal sum shall be paid over to or expended for the benefit of said Indians, the United States shall pay interest annually upon said principal sums at the rate of 5 per centum per annum, which interest shall be paid to the Secretary of the Interior for the use and benefit of such Indian tribes, and shall be used for the purpose of educating and preparing them for self-support, and applied to their support and maintenance, as may be necessary,

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to inquire if the portion of the section which has been read shall be stricken out, will it then be in order to move to add to the section?

The CHAIRMAN. It will be.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to oppose the amendment for the purpose of having the matter more thoroughly explained. I want to ask the gentleman having charge of this bill what is proposed in lieu of the provision which it is recommended shall be stricken out. This proposes that the money derived from these sales shall be placed in the Treasury to the credit of the tribes after the expiration of twenty-five years.

Mr. SKINNER. It is proposed that that shall be left to future legislation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why not provide for it now?

Mr. PERKINS. Because the conditions of the tribes are different.

A period of twenty-five years which might be advisable for one tribe might not be advisable for another. It was the sense of the committee that it was best not to fix by an arbitrary provision the period of time.

Mr. SPRINGER. It seems to me that it would be as well to consider and settle this matter now as to leave the question of the disposition of the funds arising from the sale of these lands to Congress on each particular occasion as it arises. I do not see why there should not be uniformity, perfect uniformity, in regard to all these tribes—uniformity as to the time and uniformity as to the rate of interest—so that when a deposit is made to the credit of any tribe it will be known of all people what are the conditions upon which that deposit is made. If you leave this for settlement by Congress in each particular case hereafter there will be as many different rules on this subject as there are tribes in the country. Often it would be impossible to have the matter arranged between the time for the settlement with the tribe and the time when an act of Congress could be passed applicable to the particular fund.

I think the provision as it stands is a good one, and that the circumstances of the Indians are such that they can all be placed under one general rule on this subject. If any amendment is to be made to this part of the section I would suggest that the provision stand as it is, except that the rate of interest be reduced from 5 to 4 per cent. It seems to me the rate of interest proposed in the bill is very large.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It ought not to be over 3 per cent.

Mr. SPRINGER. The rate proposed in the bill certainly seems to me very large. I would prefer that a fixed rate be established now, so that all the tribes will get the same rate of interest and that they will know when they are making negotiations under the provisions of this bill just how much interest they are to receive from year to year from the money proceeds arising from the sale of lands.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois offer an amendment making the rate of interest 3 per cent.

Mr. SKINNER. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that if the matter is arranged as he desires, we might deal with some tribe in such a way that their bed would be so short they could not lie in it and their covering so narrow that they could not cover themselves with it. The Miamis and Peorias are as qualified now to take all the money coming to them, right in cash, as any white man in the United States. The Arapahoes, on the other hand, are not qualified and may not be qualified in twenty-five years to do so. Hence we can not make a general law to fit all these cases. And we can not tell what rate of interest will be right ten years from now—whether we will have to pay 10 per cent. or whether we can get all the money we want for 1 per cent. We cannot make a general law to fit all cases.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am not convinced by the argument of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. SKINNER] that this provision should be stricken from the bill. It seems to me that Congress should establish the policy that these funds should not be paid to the tribes in any case; that the funds should always be placed in the Treasury of the United States, and that they only shall receive interest upon them for educational purposes.

Mr. SKINNER. You would have them kept wards time out of mind?

Mr. SPRINGER. I would have them kept wards until some remote period in the future when the Congress then assembled might determine whether they were in a condition to be placed in an entirely independent position. But I know of no Indian tribe now in this broad land that should receive the proceeds of the sales of their lands to be the prey of speculators and designing persons who will rob the Indians of their funds.

Let the Government hold on to these funds, appropriate the interest from year to year for educational purposes, and then the Indians will get the highest benefit possible from the proceeds of the sales of their lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend consider the fact that many years must elapse before those lands will be sold? They are not going to be sold next year or the year after, or for several years to come. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a vote upon the amendment striking out the provision.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, their Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the joint resolution (H. Res. 220) authorizing and directing the payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1886.

ALLOTMENT OF LANDS TO INDIANS IN SEVERALTY.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend the bill, line 10, page 8, by inserting after the words "United States will" the words "in the discretion of the President."

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman had better put that in the form of a proviso: "Provided, however, That the President of the United States may prolong the period."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is better; it is more express.

Mr. SPRINGER. That the President may, in his discretion, extend the period.

Mr. PERKINS. That is the way I have it.

Mr. SKINNER. That is right.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is proposed to strike out, in line 10, the word "will," and to insert the words "may, in the discretion of the President;" making the clause read:

"In case of his decease, of his heirs according to the laws of the State or Territory where such land is located, and that at the expiration of said period the United States may, in the discretion of the President, convey the same by patent to said Indian, or his heirs as aforesaid, in fee, discharged of said trust and free of all charge or incumbrance whatsoever."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is likely to create some confusion. I suggest to the gentleman that after the word "whatsoever" he insert the words: "Provided, That the President of the United States may, in his discretion, extend the period."

Mr. SKINNER. There is no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PERKINS] to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. PERKINS. I will accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana.

A MEMBER. Let the amendment in the proposed form be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, after the word "whatsoever," insert the words "Provided, That the President of the United States, in his discretion, may extend the period."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to section 2 for the purpose of making a change, to which I think there will be no objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to amend in line 14, page 6, by striking out the word "five" and inserting "one." One year is long enough. The bill as it stands allows five years.

Mr. SKINNER. I suggest to the gentleman that he make it two years. The committee will have no objection to that change.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to hear the reasons in favor of this amendment. It seems to me it makes the time very short.

Mr. SPRINGER. The time proposed is two years.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I am aware of that.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Five years would be too long.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Why too long? That is what I want to know.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN, as follows:

In line 43, after the word "Congress" insert:

Provided, however, That all lands adapted to agriculture, with or without irrigation, so sold or released to the United States by any Indian tribe, shall be held by the United States for the sole purpose of securing homes to actual settlers, and shall be disposed of by the United States to actual and bona fide settlers only, in tracts not exceeding 160 acres to any one person, on such terms as Congress shall prescribe, subject to grants which Congress may make in aid of education.

Mr. SKINNER. The committee have not authorized me to speak for them in reference to this amendment, but individually I have no objection to it. I think it ought to be adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read section 7 of the bill.

The amendment recommended by the Committee on Indian Affairs to insert, after the word "act," in line 11, the words "or under any law or treaty," was agreed to.

Mr. ROGERS. I move to amend by adding to the pending section the provision which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter, in the employment of Indian police or of other employés in the public service among any of the Indian tribes or bands affected by this act, and where Indians can perform the duties required, those Indians who have availed themselves of the provisions of this act and become citizens of the United States shall be preferred.

Mr. SKINNER. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read sections 8 and 9.

The following amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs was read:

After the word "Osages," in the third line of the section last read, amend by inserting "Miamis and Peorias and Sacs and Foxes."

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out this section; and I desire to make a statement in regard to the operation of this bill upon the tribes excepted by the pending section. I think that the tribes occupying the Indian Territory—that is to say, the tribes mentioned in this section and those included in the amendment just read—should not be excepted from the provisions of this bill, but should be included in it. There are in that Territory about seventy-five thousand Indians, I believe.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. About sixty-two thousand.

Mr. SPRINGER. I mean in the whole Territory.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. In the whole Territory there are about sixty-two thousand.

Mr. SPRINGER. I accept the gentleman's correction. It makes the case all the stronger for my argument. Those sixty-two thousand Indians have lands larger in area than the whole State of Missouri—70,000 square miles. The time has passed when those lands can be valuable to the Indians for hunting purposes. They are valuable for agricultural purposes only—for grazing and other farming operations. Under existing circumstances those lands are practically useless to the Government of the United States and to the Indian tribes themselves. Some portions of those lands have already been leased—illegally, as I maintain, and as the Attorney-General of the United States has decided—to cattle syndicates, and rentals are being paid for the use of those lands by such syndicates. The syndicates taking the leases from the Indians turn about and sublet the lands for rentals far in advance of what the Indians receive. In this way immense profits are realized by syndicates from these lands, which are used for grazing purposes.

I see no reason why the provisions for the holding of lands in severalty should not be applied to these Indian tribes. In fact, the tribes in question are in a better condition for receiving their lands in severalty than are any other tribes in the United States. They are now ripe for this reform. I suggest, therefore, to the gentleman in charge of this bill that, in the interest of the Indians themselves, this whole section be struck out, and the provisions of the bill applied to the Indian nations occupying the Indian Territory, so that these Indians, who are better prepared for the proposed change than any other Indians, may be permitted to avail themselves of the provisions of the bill. For these reasons I have moved to strike out the whole section.

Mr. SKINNER. I have not time to answer fully all that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] has said, because the hour for the consideration of this matter has nearly expired. I can only say that the lands of Indians in the Indian Territory and of the Seneca Indians in New York are held by a different title from the lands of other Indians of this country. I quote from a letter written to the committee by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

The exemption of the Seneca Reservation is right and proper, because the United States has no title or interest of any kind in the lands of said reservation, which, when the original title is extinguished, will become invested in fee in the Ogden Land Company, or its successors.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill is bottomed upon the consent of the Indians in every case, as I understand.

Mr. SKINNER. Let us have a vote first on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well; I withdraw my amendment for a moment, in order that the amendment proposed by the committee may be voted on.

The question being taken, the amendment proposed by the Committee on Indian Affairs was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will modify my motion so as to strike out "Creeks, Choctaws, Cherokees, and Seminoles," and leave in "Osages." They are the five civilized tribes.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish unnecessarily to detain the committee, but I do want to say emphatically that no greater outrage could be put upon any people than to include the five civilized tribes in this bill.

Several MEMBERS. We will vote it down.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. It would be a gross outrage if it were permitted to be done.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why so?

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I have not time to go into the discussion now, but it would be an outrage perpetrated upon these civilized tribes.

Mr. SPRINGER'S amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to detain the committee for any length of time. It is proposed in this bill, Mr. Chairman, to appropriate $100,000 to carry out that which is contemplated by the second section. Now, I wish to say to my friend from North Carolina that it will be found to be impracticable. The usual survey of public lands into sections and quarter sections is not adapted to the purpose of making allotments in severalty to these Indians. They must be made upon a different principle, for these Indian lands require irrigation, and you must take into consideration water facilities in dividing them up.

Now, Mr. Chairman, on that account it has been suggested to me to move as an amendment to this bill the one prepared by the Interior Department, which is known as the Indian commission bill. That bill is in perfect harmony with this bill, and would make it practicable. I do not think it is practicable without it.

Inasmuch, however, as the further discussion of that measure might imperil this one, which I regard as an important one, I have consented to yield that it may be postponed to another day. Large portions of the reservations have been surveyed in the usual way, and they will not be as valuable, in most instances. I do not feel justified in making the motion to add that bill without the consent of the gentleman having charge of the pending proposition, although I know it would make it practicable.

Mr. SKINNER. We have not time, and I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will not insist upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next amendment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tribe of Indians until the consent of a majority of the male members twenty-one years of age shall be first had and obtained.

Mr. SKINNER. I move to amend the amendment so as to strike out the words "the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tribes of Indians," and insert in lieu thereof the words "nothing in this act shall be construed as authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to abolish any reservation."

Mr. SPRINGER. That is all right.

Mr. SKINNER. There can be no objection to that.

Mr. WELLBORN. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to; and the amendment of the committee as amended was adopted.

Mr. SKINNER. I move by unanimous consent the sections be renumbered so as to conform to the amendments which have been adopted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. SKINNER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. SKINNER. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move, by unanimous consent, the hour be considered as having expired when this bill has been passed.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The amendments were concurred in, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SKINNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay that motion on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills, and pending that motion I yield to the gentleman from Missouri, who desires to ask consent of the House to take up and consider the urgent deficiency bill providing for the continuance of the public printing.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] desires to ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the urgent deficiency appropriation bill reported on yesterday; is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and consider the same in the House.

There was no objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the objects hereinafter expressed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, namely:

PUBLIC PRINTING AND BINDING.

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $85,000.

DISTINCTIVE PAPER FOR UNITED STATES SECURITIES.

For paper, including transportation, salaries of register, two counters, one captain of the watch, four watchmen, one laborer, and expenses of officer detailed from the Treasury as superintendent, and necessary expenses, $17,000.

RECOINAGE OF SILVER COINS.

For recoinage of silver coins in the Treasury, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, $5,000.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is the occasion for this deficiency?

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, it will be remembered, perhaps, that in the last sundry civil appropriation bill the appropriation for the support of the printing department was allotted, first, to the six months of the fiscal year, second, to the third quarter, and lastly to the fourth quarter.

The expenditures up to the present moment indicate very clearly that before the first day of January, when the next allotment will be available, this sum of $85,000 will be required, inasmuch as the Public Printer cannot draw upon that appropriation set apart for the third and fourth quarters. I will say further to my friend from Maine, that the occasion of the deficiency is simply the expenditure of the money appropriated for the first six months.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I thought I heard some provision there for watchmen and other employés.

Mr. BURNES. No, sir; the appropriation is for the general ordinary purposes of the Public Printer.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Are they to take the place of some that have been discharged?

Mr. BURNES. No, sir.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then is it an increase of the force?

Mr. BURNES. No, sir. I will state to the gentleman that this appropriation is made necessary for the general purposes of the office. The salary list is largely diminished, and expenses are being curtailed. As to the item of $17,000, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing can do a certain amount of work only; and the amount now remaining at the disposal of the Secretary for that work is not sufficient to meet the requirements of the Treasurer for the silver certificates; hence this $17,000 have been asked for, and is recommended by the Secretary for the purpose of insuring the continuance of the work by procuring distinctive paper needed for the silver certificates.

This paper must be provided in advance, as the capacity of the bureau is limited, and the work must be continuous in order to meet the requirements of the Treasurer and the demand for silver certificates.

The remaining item, $5,000, is for the loss sustained in recoining the subsidiary coin into dimes. It is the difference between the nominal value according to count and the value after recoinage. This recoinage ought to go on for the public convenience, and the appropriation is exhausted. These, I believe, are the three items covered by the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say a word. The last two items of this bill are evidently proper, and the first item is also proper for the reason stated by the gentleman from Missouri. As to the first item, however, I want to say that the amount appropriated for the current year for public printing is $2,000,000. That is increased by certain other amounts, for instance the pay of employés who are absent under the fifteen-days' leave, as the law was amended, and by the sale of certain waste-paper, &c. Now, according to the statement of the Public Printer, there remains $103,000 unexpended for December, and he says——

Mr. BURNES. Not quite that.

Mr. CANNON. Well, in round numbers.

Mr. BURNES. One hundred and three thousand dollars, less $30,000, which he is compelled to hold for the specific purpose of paying the printers who are entitled to leave of absence.

Mr. CANNON. But the two millions of dollars are increased by that amount, and he says he must have $85,000 to continue the work. The committee in charge of the preparation of this bill propounded a number of queries to the Public Printer, from the answers to which it appears that when he took possession of the office there was no inventory made of the material on hand; and as to what was on hand, or has been purchased out of the appropriations for the first six months of the year, or whether he has certain kinds of material on hand sufficient to run the office into and beyond the next six months, the committee has no information and we do not know.

Mr. RANDALL. Nevertheless the Public Printer encroached upon the six months' million.

Mr. CANNON. Of course he encroached upon the six months 'allotment. There has been such an amount of the six months' allotment expended that he must have $85,000 for printing or the office stops, as I understand. Whether it was encroached upon, in fact, I do not know, considering the amount of material that was purchased and the amount now on hand.

Mr. RANDALL. But he should not have expended any money on the purchase of materials out of that million which would embarrass him in the paying for the printing.

Mr. CANNON. That, no doubt, is true, provided he could do the printing required for the amount allotted.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to go along safely in my criticism.

Mr. BURNES. This is not the time to review the action of the Public Printer. This House will perhaps have occasion to review his action and his attempts at reform before the session expires. I think the Public Printer was entirely frank and entirely sincere in his statements to the committee; and I understood my esteemed colleague at the time as being entirely satisfied with his statements made.

Mr. CANNON. I am not now finding fault with them.

Mr. BURNES. He did not come into the office at the beginning of the fiscal year. The former incumbent remained until some time in September; and whether the fault of this deficiency belongs to the present Public Printer or to his predecessor is not now worthy of consideration; or at least, it need not now be considered. It is sufficient to say, however, that the present Public Printer is confident that in the future he can do all this public printing for the appropriations made—$2,000,000—instead of $2,400,000, which heretofore has been expended, I believe, for that purpose. But be that as it may——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. He says he can do that provided you give him an entirely new outfit of the office—new type, new boilers, &c.

Mr. BURNES. We will not go into that now. We will give you a chance before the session ends to contrast the work of the present Public Printer with that of his predecessor.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It should be understood he is to do all that with an "if."

Mr. RANDALL. There is no "if" in the other case where the money was spent.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. There is an "if" here. He says he can do this if he has the office all reorganized, with new type, new boilers, &c.

Mr. CANNON. Does my friend from Missouri want to be understood as claiming that $1,000,000 for the remainder of the year can do $2,000,000 worth of public printing which Congress has ordered or may order in the future?

Mr. BURNES. I would have the House understand that unless there is some extraordinary and unexpected accumulation of work, unless there is something that has never occurred before in that office, the Public Printer is confident he will be able during the next six months to do the work for the million remaining, and not only that but he will be able to do the work from year to year for $2,000,000.

Mr. CANNON. And keep up with the work Congress has ordered?

Mr. RANDALL. And do as much work as the last Public Printer. That is as I understand him.

Mr. BURNES. That he will do as much work as ever has been done for $400,000 less money annually.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Provided you give him a practically new office, new type, and new machinery. He is to do it with a great advantage which Mr. Rounds did not have.

Mr. BURNES. All right; we will come to that in proper time.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It was the gentleman from Missouri who started this discussion.

Mr. BURNES. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It was my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] who started it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER announced that the question on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, had been decided in the affirmative.

The committee accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Support and medical treatment of destitute patients: For the support and medical treatment of eighty-five medical and surgical patients who are destitute, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the Providence Hospital by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $17,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee will notice there is an increase of $2,000 in this item for the Providence Hospital. An examination of the report of the committee accompanying this bill will show that that hospital has for four or five years had a number of patients in excess of the number under the contract, which is seventy-five. An examination shows that this year there will in all probability be an average daily of ninety-five patients in the hospital instead of seventy-five. The hospital has never charged anything for the excess, nor has it ever refused any patient because the number was in excess of the contract.

The committee recommended that this advantage should not be taken of the hospital, which arises in part from the fact that there are no salaries to be paid. The service is a service of charity. The committee have not gone up to the maximum of the patients there, but have deemed it wise, just and fair to increase the number by ten, which is half way up to the average of ninety-five. I thought it due to the committee to make this statement.

The Clerk read as follows:

Publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and confederate armies, as follows: For continuing the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, to be distributed as required by act of March 3, 1885, $36,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, in connection with that paragraph, I suggested to the Committee on Appropriations the propriety of including the civil records of the Confederate States as well as the military. The civil as well as the military records of the confederate government are in the hands of the United States, and I call attention to the subject now so that members may consider it with reference to future action. There is no estimate presented from the Department for the publication of the civil records.

The Clerk read as follows:

For out-door relief and incidental expenses, $15,000; in all, $1,650,556. And hereafter the detailed statement of the expenses of the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be reported direct to Congress in the annual report of the Board of Managers. But all of the expenditures of the said home, including the expenses of the Board of Managers, shall be audited by the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, in the same manner and as fully as other expenditures of the several Departments of the Government are by law required to be audited: Provided, further, That no person shall be eligible to or hold any position or employment in the government or management of any home who is interested in or connected with, directly or indirectly, any railroad, brewery, mercantile house, manufactory, dram-shop, or distillery in the State where such home is located.

Mr. ATKINSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend that paragraph by striking out, in lines 1727 and 1728, the words "fifteen thousand dollars" and inserting instead "two millions of dollars."

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to reserve the right to object.

Mr. ATKINSON. Does the gentleman make a point of order against this amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I do not say that the point of order will lie against it; but I wish to examine it and see.

Mr. ATKINSON. No point of order can be made against the amendment.

In addition to what I had the honor to present in my remarks heretofore made, I wish to say that the purpose of this increased appropriation is to remove from the alms-houses the nine thousand soldiers that the Commissioner of Pensions reports are now being supported as paupers in this country. Under existing pension laws this seems impossible. Besides, I believe it to be sufficient to keep a still greater number of poor and disabled soldiers from becoming paupers. The money will be expended by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, who are expressly empowered by existing law to make such expenditures.

This Board of Managers is composed of the President of the United States, the Chief Justice, and the Secretary of War, who are members ex officiis. To these are added nine other gentlemen of high character, who have been selected by Congress, including among them General John C. Black, Commissioner of Pensions. General William B. Franklin is the president of the Board of Managers, and General George B. McClellan was a member of the board until his death.

My colleague on this floor, General JAMES S. NEGLEY, General Martin S. McMahon, of New York, and General John A. Martin, governor of Kansas, are also members of this board.

Surely no one will doubt the ability of these gentlemen to distribute relief to disabled volunteer soldiers.

Their high character is a guarantee that this money will be properly and judiciously expended, while the fact that the Commissioner of Pensions is a member of the Board of Managers will insure harmonious action with the Pension Office and co-operation also, so far as that would be warranted by existing law.

They can avail themselves of the aid of the Grand Army of the Republic, which has already given material assistance to the Pension Office in its investigations. The posts of this organization are found almost everywhere; all are engaged in charitable work, and they would supply through their charity committees full reports of the poor and disabled soldiers in their respective localities.

The importance of out-door relief, for which this appropriation is asked, can not be exaggerated. I have recently been informed that while the capacity of the soldiers' home at Hampton is equal to the proper entertainment of twelve hundred men, there are now there twenty-two hundred, some of whom are stowed away in attics, over the boiler houses, and at other improper places, and the pressure for admission shows no abatement. I have also been informed that out-door relief has been given to a very limited extent, because of lack of means, to soldiers who reside at their own homes in the cities of Dayton, Ohio, and Augusta, Me., branches of the home being located at those cities.

Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is imperatively demanded. It will be expended with propriety, and the resources of the nation are ample to meet the cost. Under these circumstances I feel justified in pressing for the adoption of the amendment.

[At the end of five minutes and before the conclusion of Mr. ATKINSON'S remarks the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCCOMAS. Mr. Chairman, if I am recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] to finish his remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, before that is done I would like to ask gentlemen on that side how much time they desire for the discussion of this matter.

Mr. CANNON. I think the discussion had better run on for a while without any limit being fixed. The subject is a very important one.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not propose to restrict the discussion at all, but I thought we might come to some satisfactory understanding as to the time that would be consumed.

Mr. CANNON. Probably we can, a little further on.

Mr. MCCOMAS. We can judge much better after two or three speeches have been made.

Mr. ATKINSON. I expected, Mr. Chairman, to be governed by the rules, and I have not consulted my colleagues on this side of the House as to the time that should be taken for the discussion of this question; but I favor the suggestion that the discussion be allowed to run on without limit at present.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the Chair will be obliged to recognize one gentleman for five minutes on either side; but if an agreement can be arrived at a different order may be observed.

Mr. ATKINSON. I will ask my colleague [Mr. RANDALL] to make a suggestion as to the time.

Mr. RANDALL. Gentlemen with whom I have just conferred seem to desire that the discussion may run on for a little while without any limit being fixed, and I am quite content to conform my action here to the wishes of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. This debate is proceeding under the five-minute rule.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to disturb that rule at all.

Mr. MCCOMAS. If I am recognized, I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], so that he may conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] is recognized.

Mr. MCCOMAS. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON then concluded his remarks as printed above, and yielded the remainder of his time to Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present this question from the standpoint of economy rather than that of mere sentiment. It is proposed to take $2,000,000 this year and appropriate it for the purpose of what is called in this bill (and what seems to have been the term adopted heretofore in these appropriations) "out-door relief" to the disabled soldiers of the country. The per-capita cost of the support of these soldiers, as shown by the reports, is about $138 a year. It is believed that if this fund were administered in the way proposed by the bill and the amendment, it would go much farther, and that $100 a year per capita would be sufficient. That would enable the directors of these institutions, or this board, to protect from the ravages of famine twenty thousand veteran soldiers. Of that number, nine thousand are already objects of relief in the charitable institutions of the country, living in the poor-houses—a stigma, in my judgment, upon the character of the American people.

It is proposed to double this number—to make an appropriation large enough to administer relief to twenty thousand. I submit that, aside from any sentiment which may be involved here, it is a matter of absolute economy. We do not appropriate any money through the Pension Office simply to relieve the necessitous soldiers; we require that he shall be not only disabled but his disability shall have resulted from his service in the Army or in the Navy, and we require that that fact shall be established by evidence. Experience teaches that the proof now required of applicants is scarcely obtainable at this long distance from the close of the war.

While this proof is being made these men are going to the poor-house. While this proof is being made the head of the Pension Department, Mr. Black, reports that in this great country of ours, so proud and so rich, 9,000 of the men who marched and fought to save the Union have gone "over the hill to the poor-house." The statement is a startling and humiliating one.

This proposition would relieve the Pension Office very much from the demand made upon it, and would distribute by a hand more equal in its beneficence this bounty to the soldiers of the country. While Congress refuses to make an appropriation through the pension laws for the support of men whose disability did not arise directly from their military service, this is a line of legislation which looks not only to justice but, in my judgment, to actual economy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'DONNELL. If I can be recognized I yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do not put this matter upon the ground simply of sentiment; I put it upon the ground of economy, and upon the ground that while the pension laws remain as they are, this bounty of the Government will reach a class of individuals who can not be reached by the provisions of the pension laws—a class as meritorious as those covered by the laws.

I may be permitted to say one word, Mr. Chairman, upon the attitude of the Government toward these men. I know it has been said by a high official of the Government (whose administration I do not desire to criticise) that no other nation of the world has been so generous, so liberal toward its soldiers as has the Government of the United States. I take issue with that public statement. The nations that have been especially pointed out in that official report were Great Britain, Germany, and France. Now I do not deny that the pension-roll of this country, taken as a simple, isolated fact, may appear to demonstrate the truth of that official utterance; but when you come to look behind the figures and ascertain the actual facts the discrepancy becomes very significant. The question is not how much money do we distribute through the Pension Bureau. The question is, how much relief is given by these Governments, respectively, to the men who have upheld their honor upon the battlefield, and how many men do we neglect? When you can find in a poor-house of Germany a soldier who carried his musket in the campaigns of the great war with France, who fought for the honor of Fatherland at Sedan and Paris, the illustration will be a pertinent one. When you can find in a poor-house a French soldier who followed the eagles of France at Waterloo or in support of the ambition of the Second Empire, or who stood between the overthrow of the French army and the advance of the Germans in the late war, you will have a fitting parallel. When you can find in a British poor-house a soldier of Balaklava, of Inkerman, of Sebastopol, or even of the Egyptian war, you will have an analogous case. I say nothing of the kind can be found. Either upon the rolls of the standing armies or in the soldiers' homes, or upon rolls of pensioners of those foreign countries their disabled soldiers are carefully protected from the necessity of taking refuge in the poor-houses.

Yet this proud Republic, saved by the valor of these soldiers of our nation, refuses to appropriate money to save them from the disgrace and suffering of finding a home in the poor-house, because, forsooth, they cannot prove that their disabled and indigent condition has arisen directly from their service in the war. Their children are in asylums supported by charity, and are being educated, in too many cases, to lives of vice and sorrow.

These soldiers made this country all that it is worth; they put into the Treasury this surplus about which we are quarreling; they made the bonds of this Government worth something more than brown paper; they extended the area of this nation across the continent, and built up the improvements of which we are to-day proud. A nation like ours can not discharge its debt to these men by letting them go to the poor-houses of the country. The country owes it to its own honor that these men be taken from the almshouses. It owes it to its own honor among the nations. It owes it to the dead of the war. It can pay a small installment of its debt if we agree to this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this amendment for several reasons. I call the attention of the House to the requisites for admission to the soldiers' home or for outside relief, stating before I do so that under the organic act soldiers who were disabled in the line of duty can be admitted to the soldiers' home or may receive outside relief.

Admission is regulated by section 4832 of the Revised Statutes, as follows:

The following persons only shall be entitled to the benefits of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, and may be admitted thereto upon the recommendation of three of the Board of Managers, namely: All officers and soldiers who served in the late war for the suppression of the rebellion, and the volunteer soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and of the Mexican war, and not provided for by existing laws, who have been or may be disabled by wounds received, or sickness contracted in the line of duty; and such of these as have neither wife, child, nor parent dependent upon them, on becoming inmates of this home, or receiving relief therefrom, shall assign thereto their pensions, when required by the Board of Managers, during the time they shall remain therein or receive its benefits.

Section 4833 authorized outside relief, and is as follows:

The managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteers are authorized to aid persons who are entitled to its benefits by out-door relief in such manner and to such extent as they may deem proper; but such relief shall not exceed the average cost of maintaining an inmate of the home.

The class for admission was enlarged by the following provision, to be found in the act of July 5, 1884:

That all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion, and the volunteer soldiers of the war of 1812, and of the Mexican war, who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living, shall be admitted into the home for disabled volunteer soldiers, provided such disability was not incurred in the service against the United States.

It will be observed that all those soldiers who are, from any cause, disabled—through age or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning their living, are entitled to admission under one section of the statute, and under an additional section are entitled to outside relief. This is the rule; and such relief is being extended under the amended law to a portion of those who are entitled to the benefits of this act.

I have before me the report of the Board of Managers of this institution, not for this year, but for last year; the report for this year is not yet printed. In this document I find, upon hasty examination, some very interesting things. I believe that about 80 per cent., perhaps more than that, of the persons receiving relief, either outside relief or in the soldiers' home, are also receiving pensions, and that less than 20 per cent. of those receiving relief through the homes are not receiving pensions.

I am not here to say that anybody is receiving relief improperly. I presume such is not the case. I have no doubt that in the main the relief is proper. Yet this system of extending relief works unequally. The returns of persons receiving relief during the last year illustrate with singular force the unequal action of the system. The soldiers from the State of Illinois cared for by the home for the year ending the 30th of June, 1885, numbered 1,082; those of Ohio, 2,121, double the number from Illinois. The soldiers of New York numbered 2,564; Indiana, 911; Pennsylvania, 1,929; Wisconsin, 640; Massachusetts, 1,010, and so on.

It can be seen, with only equal claims, the State of Ohio has people who receive this outside relief, as well as relief in the soldiers' homes, far more than the State of Illinois. Now, what I wish, Mr. Chairman, is that this law shall be enforced; so that if there be soldiers entitled to outside relief proximity to a soldiers' home should not make any difference. You can see with the great soldiers' home in Ohio, where relief is given inside and outside, and with the other branch homes—I say you can see at once a far greater proportion would receive inside the homes the relief provided where they live contiguous to such homes.

I do not know whether you can provide for all the people entitled to relief under this law, but I do know it is in our power to make appropriations to provide for every honorably discharged soldier who served in the late war, and for every sailor; for every one who served in the war of 1812, and the Mexican war, who may be disabled by disease or otherwise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. I will take the floor, and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I say even-handed justice and fair play require all shall be treated alike; hence I shall vote for the amendment. But I would state frankly that, in my opinion, when the next year shall close, if the $2,000,000 is given, it will be found insufficient. But I am willing, nevertheless, to try the experiment and appropriate that much for relief as far as it will go. So long as this law is upon the statute-book, and so long as I have the honor to serve in Congress, I shall insist, with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the amount shall be sufficient to relieve all, and not only a favored few—not those who receive pensions only—not those who by vigilance, living near by the homes, get outside relief, but the thousands of people who are not so fortunately situated, but equally deserving, equally worthy, equally meritorious, and equally entitled to relief.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, this amendment involves now two millions of expenditure. It has been stated it is to meet what the Commissioner of Pensions states to be the necessities of nine thousand disabled soldiers now in almshouses. It goes further, because, on the calculation of $100 expense for each soldier, it gives, as the gentleman from Ohio stated, relief to twenty thousand. I have never heard the estimate of this class of soldiers to be provided for in this manner can possibly be under one hundred thousand. I have heard it stated as high as one hundred and fifty thousand; but if it be one hundred thousand, the minimum, it will ultimately involve an annual expenditure, in addition to the pension laws, of ten millions of money.

The amendment in fact seeks to accomplish what the board of managers have not asked, because the Committee on Appropriations recommend the full amount estimated by that board. But it goes further, and proposes to accomplish what was sought in the bill passed by the Senate, and which, I think, is now on the Speaker's table of this House, looking to this benefit. And it increases the amount to $2,000,000 without any of the safeguards being thrown around it, such as that proposed legislation would give. In other words, the effect of this amendment is to make the managers a law unto themselves, and put them in the distribution of this amount of money beyond the law and beyond the action of Congress.

I confess to have a strong disposition to take care of all disabled soldiers. This, however, changes the practice of the Government, and, while it does not establish, as it were, a service-roll, it certainly does establish what I may characterize as a disability-roll, because it establishes what now is not provided for by the pension law, that is, that parties who served in the Army and have since been disabled by causes remote from their service, and entirely disconnected from the service, shall be made pensioners to the extent of $100 per annum.

Mr. ATKINSON. The amount to be expended is not defined in the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. And that is one of the objections I have to it. It can not exceed $140 for each soldier.

Mr. ATKINSON. It can not exceed the amount expended for the maintenance of any soldier at a soldier's home.

Mr. RANDALL. That is about $138.

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes; that is right.

Mr. RANDALL. Somewhere about $140; and if you make your calculation on that basis, then more money is required—one-third more than I have stated.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The law provides now for this class.

Mr. RANDALL. But, in fact, it establishes a new roll of pensioners.

Mr. CANNON. But is it not already established? Is it not established now, and does not this tend to give to all what only the favored few now receive?

Mr. RANDALL. In that very connection let me say that the original act creating this corporation provided that those soldiers who had been disabled in the line of duty—I will not enumerate the other requirements for admission—should be admitted; and section 4834 of the Revised Statutes then provides that these men shall be entitled to this out-door relief. The act of some years later—I do not remember the exact date—changed the qualifications for admission or the character of disability under which the man should be laboring to entitle him to admission to the home, so that he can go there now whether he has been disabled in the line of duty or not. Is not that correct?

Mr. ATKINSON. That is the law, as I understand it.

Mr. RANDALL. Moreover, while the original act of incorporation permitted the assignment of pensions on the part of the person entering the homes, a subsequent act has taken from that admission all of that condition of assignment of pensions. For instance, a man can go into the home who was a soldier, whether he was disabled in the line of duty or not, and still keep intact his pension without regard to the one hundred and forty dollars he costs the Government, and get his living there.

I confess, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to see the law so changed that those soldiers who do not now receive a pension at all should at least have the preference in regard to this relief.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That is correct; I think so, too.

Mr. ATKINSON. It was expected, let me state to my colleague, that this would be the result of the increased appropriation provided by my amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I fear not. I will go with the gentleman in that direction most heartily. But I do not believe this would accomplish it.

But following out what I was going on to say a moment since: That change of the law as to admissions into the homes from admission on account of disability in the line of service to an admission on account of disability, without requiring that it should be contracted in the line of duty, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] whether he thinks, legally, that out-door relief clause of section 4834 is continued in force by this new character of admission?

Mr. CANNON. I think that would be a proper construction of it.

Mr. ATKINSON. I will answer that question if my colleague will permit me.

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. ATKINSON. While the act of 1884 increased the number that might be relieved, it deprived the managers of the homes of no power that they previously had to provide out-door relief.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes; as to the assignment of pensions, for instance.

Mr. ATKINSON. I beg pardon of my colleague; I misunderstood his question.

But as to admissions, I believe the right to give out-door relief extends to those who are entitled to admission under the act of 1884 as well as under the act of 1866.

Mr. RANDALL. And also the act of 1873?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, these acts of 1866 and 1873 provided the machinery of the law, and the act of 1884 opened the door wide to admissions. Now do you say that the original act of incorporation of the homes, for it is a corporation, whether by that subsequent legislation there followed also a power of out-door relief to people outside of the Home on the same qualifications as applies towards those in the homes?

Mr. ATKINSON. Yes, sir; under the act of 1884; I have no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. ATKINSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If I may be recognized hereafter, I will take the floor now and yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there is anybody here who does not want to do full and exact justice to the soldiers, and soften the pillow of their declining years, but is it not better for us when we enter upon this change of policy, when in effect we make a new roll of pensioners, to do it by a separate and distinct act, such as that resting now upon the Speaker's table, instead of this way on an appropriation bill?

Mr. REED, of Maine. It not only rests there, but probably will rest there.

Mr. ATKINSON. That is exactly what the trouble is. I am afraid we will not have such pension legislation, I will state to my colleague; and therefore I am endeavoring to secure the incorporation of this provision into the present appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Again, Mr. Chairman, as far as I know of their report the managers of these homes do not recommend this change of the law. Do they?

Mr. ATKINSON. Not that I know of; but it is recommended by the body of the soldiers and also by the people.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I would rather take the recommendation of the body of the soldiers. I do not know if the effect of this out-door relief might not be to reduce in fact the number of inmates in the several homes.

Mr. ATKINSON. I have no doubt it will. There are at Hampton twenty-two hundred where there should be but twelve hundred; among them are men of family who should be at home enjoying the comforts of association with their wives and children.

Mr. RANDALL. And many of them drawing large pensions, as I showed. There are more than six hundred inmates in these homes that are drawing large pensions, $24 a month and upwards, as I am told by the Representative of the Dayton district. Now when we are making this amendment or bringing about this new action, enacting this new beneficiary law, why not give the preference in some way to those that draw no pensions? I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it would be necessary if we are to appropriate so large a sum for out-door relief to provide at the same time proper machinery for affording the relief. Simply to authorize the managers of the soldiers' homes to extend relief in such manner as they may think best, it seems to me, would be a very loose way of spending money. Besides, I do not understand whether it is contemplated by this amendment to extend the relief to soldiers all over the country or only to those who gather around the homes or live in reach of them.

Mr. ATKINSON. It is intended to extend relief to all volunteer soldiers who are entitled under existing law to admission to the soldiers' homes. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. By what machinery and in what way?

Mr. ATKINSON. I will answer the gentleman's question. As was stated by my colleague, this organization known as the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is a corporation, and the Board of Managers by the act of incorporation have power granted to them to make rules and regulations for the purpose of performing the duties that are enjoined upon them or expected of them in that law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That would amount practically to a new order of pensions to be granted, temporarily, perhaps, by the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home instead of through the Pension Office. At any rate, before this is done the necessary machinery for carrying the plan out and for securing the proper responsibility which the expenditure of so much money imposes ought to be carefully provided. How is the board to find out who is and who is not entitled to relief? If this system of aid is to reach over the whole country somebody must ascertain the facts about each case. How is this to be done, and who is to do it? The Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes are not Government officers. Who is to audit their accounts? Who is to say how much is to be applied here and how much somewhere else? Who is to give bond, or is none to be required? Surely it can not be intended to appropriate so large a sum to be expended without responsibility. The amendment I propose to offer relates first to the admission of soldiers to the homes. It is a regulation now, I believe, to give the preference to those not drawing pensions.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is not so.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It ought to be so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. WARNER, of Ohio.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I offer an amendment which will give preference in the admission of soldiers to the national homes to those not drawing pensions, and limits aid to those not receiving pensions in excess of $20 a month. It seems to me that aid, if such aid is to be given, should be limited to those not drawing large pensions. The limit I have fixed is certainly high enough. I can not see that equity lies in granting to one man for a given disability a given pension, and then to another man for a like disability not only the same pension but in addition shelter, clothing, subsistence, care, medical treatment, and everything else at a soldiers' home. Why should not the soldier when he enters the home while in the home surrender his pension unless required in whole or part for the support of his family? A widow's pension is $12 a month. Up to the limit of a widow's pension his family might be allowed his pension, but there is no justice and no equality in giving only a pension to one, and to another for the same disability giving a pension and full support besides at a home; and surely if the proposed amendment to allow this outside aid to be given is to pass, it should be limited to those not drawing pensions, or pensions insufficient to support them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso:

"Provided, That in the admission of ex-volunteer soldiers and sailors preference shall be given to those who are not drawing pensions, and no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the support or care of any one drawing a pension of over $20 a month."

Mr. GOFF. Does the gentleman intend that as an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. PETERS. I had intended to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON], but as an amendment has now been offered, I believe a third would not be in order.

I desire to say a word in relation to the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The principle of extending out-door relief has been established by law, and, therefore, the question is not before us as to whether this out-door relief shall be granted. The act as it is at present provides that out-door relief may be granted by the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes. It therefore is simply a question of policy as to the amount that shall be granted, and nothing more. The amount allowed in the original bill is $15,000. The amount proposed by the amendment is $2,000,000.

Now, we must do either one of two things. We must either erect more soldiers' homes or we must increase the amount provided for out-door relief; or else we must ignore the needs and wants of the soldiers entirely.

I am not in favor of increasing the number of soldiers' homes when we can afford relief, as I think we can, in a much more economical manner. To increase the number of soldiers' homes would necessitate a large expenditure in the purchase of land and in the erection of buildings, and also an additional expenditure annually for the management and control of the homes. The proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] avoids all this outlay. This fund can be distributed by the present officials without any additional cost, so that every dollar that may be appropriated for this out-door relief can go directly to those for whose benefit it is intended. I think that is an important point to be taken into consideration. If we are to determine what policy we will pursue, and if we must take one or the other course, must either increase the number of our soldiers' homes or increase the amount to be given for out-door relief, then certainly, as was suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, the most economical method will be to increase the amount for out-door relief.

There is one other point to which I desire to call attention in connection with this question, a suggestion which I intended to embody in an amendment. I believe that the relief to be extended under the provisions of this law does not go far enough. It goes only to soldiers who have been honorably discharged, but it should go also to the widows and orphans of those soldiers who, if living, would be entitled to this relief, and it has been my intention to offer an amendment providing that in deserving cases the Board of Managers might extend such relief to the widows and orphans of those who, if living, would themselves be entitled to it.

Mr. ROWELL was recognized, and yielded to Mr. PETERS.

Mr. PETERS. It is a well known fact, Mr. Chairman, that to-day many of the widows and orphans of soldiers of the United States are in the poor-houses in different parts of the country, and if, as has been said, it is a disgrace to this country that the soldier, after he has become disabled and disqualified for making a living, must seek refuge in a charitable institution, then I say it is a still greater disgrace that the widows of soldiers who died in the line of duty, or who have since died in consequence of wounds or disabilities received in the service, must go "over the hill to the poor-house" to spend there the remainder of their days. The relief provided in this bill does not go far enough. It ought to be extended so as to take in all necessitous and deserving cases of such widows and orphans.

I yield the remaining time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted that whatever relief ought to be extended to soldiers because of the fact that they were soldiers, ought to be extended by the United States instead of by the several States. It is very true that many of the States of the Union have, at their own expense, established soldiers' homes, or are establishing such homes, because of the neglect of the United States to make provision for the care of the soldiers.

It is true that nearly every Grand Army post in the United States has upon its hands some disabled soldier or soldiers to be cared for. Now, it is the experience of everybody extending relief that out-door relief is not only the cheapest, but the best that can be resorted to. Many a man is made self-supporting by a little assistance in the hard portion of the year, and is thus kept out of the poor-house. It seems to me that this limited sum of money might well be appropriated by unanimous consent, so that we might try the experiment of reaching out, through the various Grand Army posts, to find these men who are struggling to keep their heads above water and to support their little families, and thus save hundreds and thousands of them from the disgrace of going into town or county poor-houses. It is comparatively a little matter. We can try the experiment through this Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Homes, and at least make a start toward doing justice to that large class of gallant men who have served their country, but whose names do not appear upon the pension-rolls.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that it is safe to adopt this amendment unrestricted. In this bill we find $15,000 appropriated to be used in the discretion of the officers of the soldiers' homes under such circumstances as may seem to them to warrant its expenditure for the benefit of such destitute soldiers as they may designate who are not now sufficiently provided for. What does this amendment propose? It proposes to strike out that appropriation of $15,000 and insert $2,000,000. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has already told the House that this means not simply an increase from $15,000 to $2,000,000 but that ultimately it will probably take $10,000,000 or more to meet the demand. My candid opinion, considering that this appropriation is for only one year, is that $50,000,000 will not meet the ultimate demands of this legislation. I have just talked with one of the managers of the soldiers' homes, who tells me this is almost sure to destroy the homes or their efficiency.

If there is necessity for an increase of pensions, why do we not like men come up and increase them by statute? Why do we propose to throw open the doors of the Treasury and give a discretionary power with reference to the disbursement of this money to certain officers without any law regulating or fixing that discretion or responsibility, except their own will, these officers being virtually independent of the Government.

What class of soldiers needs the relief here proposed? Name the class; and if the necessity appears, let us increase their pensions under the law, and let the country generally know what is being done and how it is being done. But this is a proposition to give a large discretionary power to the officers I have described in the disbursement of millions of dollars of the public funds. You do not know, and I do not know, how the money will be expended. No law fixes or controls the expenditure; no statute has been enacted regulating it; and the gentleman who proposes the amendment has not devised any machinery by which responsibility shall be fixed or the expenditure controlled. I insist that this is neither a fair nor a manly way to legislate. How are the managers of the homes to know who needs it most? You supply them with no power to take evidence; no officers to investigate; no machinery to properly manage the expenditure of this vast sum.

As I have already said, if the pensions now paid are not sufficient we should make them so. There is no disposition in this House to stint the pensioner. There has been no disposition of that kind manifested during the eight years I have been here; and I suppose the member who has had longest experience in the House will give similar testimony. The country is liberal; Congress is liberal, and liberal to such a degree that even the assembly of former soldiers of this Government at their last meeting, held in California, looked strongly, as I understand, toward calling a halt in reference to uncalled-for pensions and bounties.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman allow me to make a correction?

Mr. MCMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The national encampment at California refused to indorse the eight-dollar service-pension bill, because for five successive years they had found it impossible to get that relief which their committee had prayed for at the hands of Congress.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Did the assembly of soldiers in California call for this legislation? If so, point out the resolution making the demand. It never did. This is conceived crudely here, and in the crudest state sought to be thrust upon the country.

Mr. REED, of Maine. They called for the equivalent of it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then let us adopt "the equivalent," if necessary, instead of it. This proposed legislation would open the door in the disbursement of this fund to all kinds of favoritism that can be conceived. Why, sir, if a soldier makes application and does not get the amount that he wants (and there is no provision fixing the amount to which he shall be entitled) he can complain nowhere; he can appeal to no tribunal to right any injustice done, because there is to be lodged with these officers a discretion which no statute will control.

I insist that this is not the right kind of legislation. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] says that "the equivalent" of this legislation has been asked for. I have never known the soldiers of this country to ask for the appropriation of $2,000,000, or what will ultimately be more than $10,000,000, without any statute to control the expenditure, without any bond being given by the officers who are to make the disbursement, and without any regulation of the discretion which they are to exercise. If such a law were passed we should have complaints from all parts of the country from men who would feel that their applications had been rejected for some insufficient reason, perhaps on account of politics, and the door would be open to all sorts of favoritism and partiality.

Why, suppose this money is drawn by the officers intrusted with it and deposited with the banks; they, in case of failure, would not, according to our decision, be liable on the bonds executed as required by law as Government depositories, and security for reimbursement would have to come from some other source. I would do justice to every maimed or disabled soldier, but we at the same time should see that proper safeguards are thrown around all expenditures of the people's money.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally; and, Mr. Townshend having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr.

McCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap; and

A bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 4) to permit the owners of certain vessels, and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon, to sue the United States; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, the first question that should engage our attention in discussing this matter is as to the sufficiency of the existing law to authorize the disbursement of this fund. The law on this subject will be found in section 10 of the act of March 10, 1866, providing for the organization of the soldiers' home:

And be it further enacted, That the managers of the asylum—

Which was then the name of the soldiers' home—

shall have power and authority to aid persons who are entitled to its benefits by out-door relief in such manner and to such extent as they may deem proper; provided such relief shall not exceed the average cost of maintaining an inmate of the asylum.

That statute is still in force, though the institution is no longer called the "asylum," the name having been changed to "The National Soldiers' Home." It will be observed that the section just read gives to the Board of Managers plenary power to administer this fund "in such manner and to such extent as they may deem proper."

The next question is, who are entitled to be the beneficiaries of out-door relief? This question is answered in the quotation already made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] from the act of July 5, 1884:

SEC. 5. That all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who served in the war of the rebellion, and the volunteer soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812 and the Mexican war, who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and, by reason of such disability, are incapable of earning their living, shall be admitted into the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; provided such disability was not incurred in the service against the United States.

There we have designated the classes who are entitled to admission; and every person entitled to admission to the National Soldiers' Home is, if not admitted, entitled to out-door relief. Thus far we have solid ground under our feet.

The next question is, are there any persons not already cared for, for whom provision ought to be made by this or some other measure? It happened to be my fortune, Mr. Chairman, in the Forty-eighth Congress, to be one of the investigating committee of five who visited and investigated all the soldiers' homes. We spent nearly two months in the performance of that duty. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. STEELE] and myself are, I think, the only members of that committee who now occupy seats on this floor. We then found it to be universally true that the capacity of these homes was entirely inadequate to give accommodation to those entitled to the relief provided by law. Since that time a branch of the Home has been opened at Leavenworth; but we find it still the fact, that at every one of these branches of the National Soldiers' Home, the applications of those entitled under the law to be admitted are vastly in excess of the accommodations for their admission. Taking as correct the statement of the Commissioner of Pensions (though I do not know how he collected his statistics) there are about nine thousand of these veterans who not only can not be admitted to the National Soldiers' Home, but who are actually the inmates of poor-houses in different parts of the country.

Now, I do not say, Mr. Chairman, that it would be wise to initiate all at once such an extensive experiment as is contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but I do think, if we have proper machinery—and proper machinery we have in the Board of Managers of National Soldiers' Homes—for the administration of this fund, that it is a move in the right direction to afford this relief at the homes of the beneficiaries rather than to congregate and aggregate them in great numbers in these vast caravansaries, where they are now collected.

At the Dayton Soldiers' Home there are about five thousand, and in others a less number, but everywhere crowded to excess. The investigating committee found the chief difficulty of the management in these homes was in the great number brought together, and it was, I believe, the universal opinion of all connected with the management of the homes from the chairman of the board down through the various officers, that if some system could be adopted to prevent these large aggregations at the homes at a few points, it would be to the advantage of the beneficiaries mentally, morally, and physically. Now, this amendment contemplates an effort in that direction, to administer this aid at the fireside of the beneficiary, where he can be surrounded by the mental, moral, and social influences of the family and the neighborhood rather than to separate him from his home with all its humanizing and elevating tendencies.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If nobody on the other side wishes to speak, I will proceed.

Mr. BRAGG. It really seems to me, sir, it is almost impossible to consider any question touching the soldier, or his interests, or any matter connected with him and expect it to be considered and dealt with on fair business principles. The moment the name of soldier is heard in legislation, and there is a prospect of giving some soldier some money, everybody seems to struggle with his fellow to see who shall be at the front shouting, "More money for soldiers!" [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, in a business point of view, and looking at it as a business man would look at it, that no man who draws a pension should be received in a soldiers' home; because the law fixing pensions gave a pension for the purpose of helping support and care for the disabled soldier who had been in the service of his country. Now, if the Government, instead of giving him a pension, says, I will take care of you; and he says, I prefer to be taken care of entirely by you rather than receive the partial pension you promised, and he goes to a home and is fed, and clothed, and lives there, and is put to no expense whatever, I say that is more than the Government contracted. They have provided for him in full, and such a man should receive no pension, which was only designed to be given to help take care of him. There is no need to help to take care of him when the master makes provision and takes care of him. And that remark I make touching the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio on my left.

Now in regard to the amendment touching outside relief. In a business point of view, this amendment becomes absolutely ridiculous, when you consider it, and still I expect this House will vote for it. Why ridiculous? Gentlemen talk about out-door relief. It is easy to say the bounty of the Government should be distributed alike and fairly to the soldiers entitled to the favor of the Government. That is easy to say, but not easy to do. Here is an appropriation of millions of money to be given to the managers of soldiers' homes, to be distributed for out-door relief. Where is the agency by which the managers of soldiers' homes are to go into each ward, each township, each county, where the soldiers may be, and find out who needs out-door relief? Unless there is some one to make the investigation and find who needs the relief, $100,000,000 would not go through six months in this country. There is no machinery to do it. If we distribute two millions of money, some gentlemen say "Send to the Grand Army posts." Are we going to make whoever shall be elected commander of a Grand Army post, scattered as these posts are all over this country, a disbursing officer of the United States, and place thousands and tens of thousands of money in his hands without his being bonded? What guarantee can we have he will properly distribute that fund? None whatever.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I think we are all agreed that a soldier who has served his country and has become disabled not by any fault of his own, ought not to go to the poor-house. Being agreed, then, upon the result to be attained, the thing that we are to consider now is the means by which we are to arrive at that result.

Legislation, I am sorry to say, is not always as logical as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] or the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG], else I am afraid a great deal that is done in this world would not be done at all.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] suggests that we shall pass the pension bill, which has already been passed by the other branch of Congress and sent to this body. We all of us, looking each other in the face, know that that can not be done. I will not stir party feeling by saying why—and this brings me to remark that among the methods of preventing something being done which men are not ready to face in opposition, is the flank movement of proposing to do it in some other way. We all know that legislation is a matter to be accomplished when it can be accomplished; not in ideal fashion, but as we can get it done. Now, then, is this a fair and reasonable opportunity?

This is a proposition to confer, on behalf of the nation, benefits upon men in regard to whose merits we are all agreed, and its purpose is to give them such relief in their necessities that they may be kept out of the poor-house. We already by one method have sought to accomplish this, and that is by the reception of such men in the soldiers' homes.

This relief is extended by this very body of commissioners. Has there been any favoritism about that? Have not these managers performed that duty faithfully and well; and will not the performance of that very duty give to them the facilities to know the condition of men who ought to receive the out-door relief proposed by this amendment?

It is also to be said, and should be remembered, that if there are irregularities, such as the admission of men who receive large pensions, here is an opportunity for the adjustment of a system which will effectually prevent such irregularities.

That being the case I should therefore object to such amendments as have been offered to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I should be willing to trust the out-door relief to the same hands to which we have intrusted the management and care of the soldiers' homes, and thus far with the approbation of the people of this entire country.

It is true that a system has got to be established; but who shall establish it? Gentlemen here on the floor of Congress, with such observations as they have made on this subject showing how they will do it? Or skilled men who have the means of information and the leisure?

Nor is it proposed to give them charge of a very large sum of money—only $2,000,000. With that amount they can feel their way to a broader expenditure perhaps; and if that broader expenditure is needed there is no man here who will stand up squarely in opposition to it, whether the amount be two millions or five millions of dollars.

Now, then, we all want to accomplish this object. Shall we try to delude ourselves and others by talking about other methods of accomplishing it which we know cannot be reached? In other words, here is a result we want; here is a method against which not even a plausible objection has been urged, a method within the law, in harmony with the statutes, consonant with common sense. Then let us adopt that method, and not endeavor to defeat the result we want to reach by a flank movement.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, the amount of increase proposed by the amendment would certainly make this a very grave matter; but independently of that I think there is something even of more weight connected with the proposed legislation, and it is that this is a proposition to enter upon the field of general relief to the disabled and needy soldiers of the Government. I believe, therefore, that it is a matter that should have more consideration than it can have here, and that when that field is entered upon it ought to be entered upon very carefully; and not only entered upon carefully, but that the provisions of such a law should be so drawn that it can be administered in such a way as to do justice to all soldiers.

I believe if $2,000,000, as it is now proposed in this amendment, were placed in the hands of the managers of the soldiers' homes, that those who can reach the homes might have the benefit of the expenditure, but that those who are not within easy reach of the homes would never receive the benefit of it, or if they did it would be by a system of most expensive administration. Agents would have to be appointed and sent out, men of character and integrity, to look into these cases and ascertain the conditions of each case.

There is no proposition here to administer this relief in any way except by the managers themselves; and certainly if that was done by them or their agents it would be done in a very expensive way, and the money would likely be wasted, if not taken by the managers themselves. For, as I understand this amendment, there is no proposition that a disbursing officer holding two millions of dollars should give even a bond. These suggestions, it seems to me, are enough to show that this legislation is certainly illy considered and ought not to be adopted in its present form.

I am in entire sympathy with the proposition of giving relief to the soldiers that are disabled where they are required to depend upon their labor for their support. I believe in that proposition, but I believe in giving it to them according to well-established and tried rules, in a way that the Government has practiced for many years, and not in undertaking to place $2,000,000 or any other great sum of money in the hands of men to be administered without any rules at all to govern either the manner of its administration or the persons to whom it shall be given.

Mr. STEELE. Why has not the gentleman called up the bill (S. 1886) which came to the House in June?

Mr. MATSON. Just as soon as I can, whenever I get the opportunity, I will do so. My colleague [Mr. STEELE] has had the same opportunity as I have had.

Mr. STEELE. I am not at the head of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, as the gentleman is.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] this question: Has he not endeavored for several years to liberalize the pension laws in this direction, and been defeated or at least failed to accomplish that purpose?

Mr. MATSON. I have already said I believe in the proposition that there should be legislation looking in the direction of giving relief to soldiers who are disabled and dependent on their daily labor. Why have I failed in getting that legislation?

Mr. ATKINSON. I did not censure you. I presume you did the best you could.

Mr. MATSON. The failure of that legislation is not my responsibility, but the responsibility of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] and of other members of this House.

Mr. STEELE. Is my colleague in favor of the passage of the bill (S. 1886)?

Mr. MATSON. I have always insisted that that should be done and still insist; but when it is done it should be done in a business-like way.

Mr. GOFF rose.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like now to have a limit put to the debate. It will be recollected I made a suggestion of that sort at the opening of the debate, and it was said we had better leave it to run a little. I think the time has now come when both sides will assent to the limitation of the time. I ask that further debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to twenty minutes, to be equally divided between the two sides.

Mr. ATKINSON. I suggest an hour. There are several gentlemen who have not yet spoken who desire to be heard.

Mr. RANDALL. If we extend the debate for an hour we will carry this bill over to Saturday, for which a special notice has been given.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the time for debate be limited to twenty minutes? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I understood that objection was made unless the time was extended to an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair put the question whether there was any objection to the time for debate being limited to twenty minutes, and no objection was made until after the Chair made the announcement.

Mr. ATKINSON. I understood that my suggestion of an hour amounted to an objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of further considering the sundry civil appropriation; and pending that motion I move that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in twenty minutes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I move to amend by making the time forty minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to be quite reasonable in this matter, and will say thirty minutes.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That will be enough.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Very well.

The question having been taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL as modified, that debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be limited to thirty minutes, it was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 220) authorizing and directing payment of the salaries of the officers and employés of Congress for the month of December, 1886.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto is limited to thirty minutes, fifteen minutes of which will be occupied on each side. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is recognized.

Mr. GOFF. The gentlemen who oppose this amendment seem to do so and to base their objections exclusively on the idea that there would be no legislation or no rules in accordance with which this money would be expended and by which the parties intended to be benefited could avail themselves of this legislation. I insist that that is a mistake. I say that under existing law there is ample provision and ample security for the expenditure of this money. Section 4332 of the Revised Statutes provides how the disabled soldiers of the country can enter these homes, and it is expressly stipulated that it shall be by virtue of the order of three members of the board.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] are mistaken when they say that this money would be expended in sending agents all over the country to find out who these soldiers might be. On the contrary, on representations made to the board when by three members of that board approved, the intended recipient is entitled to admission to the home; and it is easy to send a draft for the amount to the soldier in monthly installments and not send agents all over the country.

And the amount is limited by the legislation itself to a hundred and odd thousand dollars a year. Therefore there is no danger of the money being misappropriated. It is not a case, then, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] suggests, of the mere discretion of the managers of the soldiers' homes or their governors. They are bound by this law. They are directed as to the class of soldiers who may be admitted—not all those who are disabled on account of injuries received in the service or in the line of duty, as was originally provided, but those who, subsequent to leaving the service, may have incurred disabilities in the ordinary avocations of life, and who to-day, on account of age or disease, are unable to earn a living. That is the character of disability that the soldiers' homes are required to consider when admission is granted to those homes. Therefore this talk about the want of legislative provisions to insure the proper expenditure of this money has no force or effect, when you look at the provisions which surround those homes; nor is it complimentary to the men who control the homes and direct their expenditures.

The President of the United States will give his attention to this matter, as under the law he is obliged to do, and we are to presume at least that the President of the United States, as the head of this board, like the king, can do no wrong. When the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] says that this expenditure is enormous, I would like him to answer this question: If it be ascertained that it will take some two millions of dollars to render proper aid to the nine thousand soldiers that the Commissioner of Pensions reports are to-day in the almshouses of the country, being unable to obtain admission to the soldiers' homes, and who do not appear upon the pension-rolls, will the gentleman still rise in his place in this House and say that such expenditure is enormous?

Mr. MCMILLIN. I say that the appropriation of two millions of dollars without any statute governing its expenditure is enormous. It is an enormous expenditure to be made without legislative supervision.

Mr. GOFF. Will you answer my question? That is an evasion of it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I did not understand the gentleman's remark.

Mr. HEPBURN was recognized.

Mr. ATKINSON. I reserve the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize the right of the gentleman to reserve time.

Mr. ATKINSON. I thought, Mr. Chairman, that my right to control the time would be recognized, inasmuch as I had presented the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for five minutes; but he can not now reserve any time.

Mr. ATKINSON. I yield to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and he is now upon the floor. Later, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] for five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Pensions has sought to ascertain the number of discharged soldiers who are now in the different poor-houses throughout the United States. He has received responses from 1,242 of the 2,581 counties in the United States, and he finds that there are 9,178 inmates of poor-houses who were honorably discharged soldiers of the Union Army. The purpose of this amendment is to enable the properly constituted officers to relieve that class of men. There is no new legislation in this proposed amendment. The law imposes upon certain officers the duty of caring for these men. It is a duty that is already recognized by the laws of the United States, but it has been the will of Congress heretofore to withhold from the hands of those officers the means whereby this duty could be performed, and the purpose of the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON] is to remedy this failure and to give them proper means to discharge this duty which is imposed upon them by law.

The obligation to care for those men was recognized more than a decade ago. It is just as incumbent upon this Congress, in my humble judgment, to make this needed appropriation to carry out this pledge as it is to provide for the administration of any other branch of the Government; and there is just as much of offense in withholding this necessary appropriation as there would be in withholding the salary of the President of the United States. I hope the House will not be deluded by the talk of gentlemen about providing for the performance of this duty in some other way. There is no better way to do it than this, and no better time than now. The law prescribes the mode and manner of these expenditures, and it imposes the responsibility upon officers of the Government. It says how the payments shall be made; it points out the class of persons to whom they are to be made, and it fixes a limit to the amount. There is no new legislation necessary. All we are required to do is simply to give the properly constituted officers the means of executing a duty. I believe we ought to do it.

Gentlemen who have talked about their willingness "upon all proper occasions" to extend the necessary aid to the soldiers ought not so to talk in the presence of this House. We know how absolutely insincere all that kind of talk is. We know——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly quite evident to all of us that some additional relief ought to be furnished to the class of persons contemplated by this provision. But I doubt the propriety of the plan proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I do not see how under his proposition the relief is to be afforded to those who are designed to be its beneficiaries. There is no soldiers' home in Pennsylvania or Iowa or Kentucky or Michigan; and I do not see how persons living in those States are to receive the benefits of this provision. If an application is made for relief in those States, to whom shall it be made? To the Board of Managers. Where are they? Scattered through nine different States. How will they ascertain whether the applicant comes within the class of disability contemplated by the statute? How can they make the necessary examination? How shall the money be distributed—upon what plan and through what agencies?

But there is one objection, Mr. Chairman, which strikes me as more forcible than all others. I fear there are now in these homes thousands who are dissatisfied with that place of residence, and who, if this provision be adopted, will immediately go outside to live among friends and relatives and take the benefit of this legislation. If that should be the result it would destroy the whole policy of our soldiers' homes.

I am decidedly in favor of increasing the number of soldiers' homes. There is now pending in this House a bill for the erection of one of these homes on the Pacific slope. At the last session we enlarged three different homes to the extent of an appropriation of $50,000 for each. These homes ought to be enlarged or their number increased, so that all honorably-discharged soldiers who are now found in almshouses should be taken care of under the policy of our soldiers'-home legislation.

What kind of relief is this out-door relief to be? The object in view at the time this clause was enacted in the statute was evidently to provide temporary relief—nothing more. Last year the board of managers expended $16,000 in that direction; and they found it very troublesome indeed to handle that small amount in that way. The principal part of it was expended at Leavenworth, because of the fact that there was then in course of erection a soldiers' home at that place. The board of managers say that at the other homes, already established and in running order, they can not and will not carry out the idea of distributing local aid in adjoining counties or adjoining States. Mr. Chairman, the scheme here proposed is impracticable; it will be found impossible to execute it satisfactorily. How will the board of managers be able to inquire into the details of each particular case? If $15,000, the sum contemplated by this bill, be thought an insufficient amount for spanning over the present emergency, make any reasonable addition to the sum——

Mr. STEELE. It ought not to require much investigation to take out of the poor-houses 9,000 soldiers who are there now.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. What will be done with them? In the gentleman's own State there is no soldiers' home. Suppose in the infirmary of his own county there are soldiers——

Mr. STEELE. The fact of there being no soldiers' home there is one reason I am in favor of extending this relief at the homes of the soldiers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. How will the money be distributed?

Mr. STEELE. By the Board of Managers, in such manner as they think proper.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. See what a corps of agents will be required.

Mr. STEELE. There ought not to be objection to employing the number of agents that may be necessary to get those nine thousand soldiers out of the poor-houses.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio. But what is to prevent the thousands who are already residing in these homes from going out and taking the benefit of this relief while residing with their friends or relatives? And will not the policy of the soldiers'-home law be in that way defeated?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ATKINSON rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON. I reserve my time until gentlemen on the other side have been heard.

The CHAIRMAN. There are ten minutes remaining for gentlemen on the right, and five minutes for gentlemen on the left.

Mr. ATKINSON. I yield two minutes to my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN]. I have other engagements that make it impossible for me to give him more time.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. It seems to me rather unfair that I should be limited in this way, after I succeeded in getting the additional ten minutes, so that I might occupy five. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time is being counted against the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman last on the floor [Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio] thinks there will be great difficulty in the adoption of proper methods for the distribution of this money if appropriated. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has just told us that after inquiry it has been ascertained that five thousand soldiers of the Republic are in the poor-houses and not more than half the country has been gone over to find this number.

It would take $500,000 of money to get this number out of the poor-house. It is admitted there must be about five thousand more distributed over the country, not known, and that would absorb $500,000 more, and thus a million of the money proposed by the amendment will have been taken to get the soldiers out of the poor-houses! Certainly little machinery of the law would be required to do that!

But suppose a little legislation is required to make the appropriation available, why not enact such laws as are needed? We are here for that purpose. But I contend no additional legislation is needed. It would require no more investigation to entitle the soldier to out-door relief than is required to admit him to the soldiers' home. The gentlemen on the other side all complain that it would be hazardous to place the matter of expenditure of so much money in the Board of Managers of the Soldiers' Home. Why more hazardous than in the hands of the Commissioner of Pensions?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired; he had only two minutes of time remaining.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Do I understand I am cheated out of three minutes? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I only wish to add to what has been said, and in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], that there is in this proposition complete analogy to the existing laws in most of the States relating to the distribution of funds of this character. The soldiers and sailors orphans' homes, the State soldiers' homes, and the poor-houses and other charitable institutions, all have systems of "out-door relief." Why not this fund? That is all I wish to say. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON].

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, only a word in closing. The chief objection urged to this amendment is not the direction of its object, but the mode of its administration. It is alleged that there is no machinery for its administration—no means of ascertaining who are these beneficiaries. I think there is little force in that objection. The same machinery which will determine whether or not a soldier is entitled to enter a soldiers' home will also determine whether he is entitled to out-door relief, because they are identical as to the class of persons.

It is said by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] that there must be an examination of these applicants for out-door relief. The Pension Office has examiners throughout the United States, and if the Board of Managers of the National Soldiers' Homes see fit to adopt them as their agents to examine these veterans you will have all the machinery necessary—you will have an application to be passed on by them on affidavits and filed precisely as in the case of an application for admission to a soldiers' home—then an examination to be had through examiners of the Pension Office. I see no reason why under this provision the Board of Managers can not administer $2,000,000 as well as the Commissioner of Pensions can administer $75,000,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the question before the committee is the expenditure of $2,000,000 for out-door relief to disabled soldiers. The more I reflect over the matter, the more I am convinced it would be far better to expend this money in the erection of two more homes wherein these soldiers can be taken care of. Two million dollars would, in all probability, with the liberality of citizens of States who always stand ready to give land for such objects, construct five, and perhaps six homes, with a capacity each for fifteen hundred inmates, thus increasing the membership of these homes to about nine thousand.

How is this fund used at the present? It is used for the purpose of meeting the expense of management, and the expenditure necessary to maintain soldiers whom it is dangerous to remove from these homes, and, further, to pay for the support of soldiers during their transit from the place where they may be to the homes where they are to be taken.

I agree with gentlemen who have spoken on this subject with regard to the Board of Managers, because I have in common with them the most perfect, the most absolute confidence in each and all of them; but I doubt if there is a single manager of these homes who would feel justified in undertaking the distribution or administration of this $2,000,000 without any plan, or any method, or any system.

It would be totally and entirely, in my judgment, impossible, under existing laws, to be properly expended.

Under the law, the managers are in fact a corporation; and in answer to a letter addressed by me to the Second Auditor of the Treasury, he states that under a decision of the Second Comptroller they have not a proper audit of their accounts even. This is his language in a letter bearing date December 6, addressed to me:

Under this decision—

alluding to a decision made in 1883 by the then Second Comptroller, as follows:

While the corporation known as the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers is a trustee, and while its acts are in many respects similar in their effects to those performed by disbursing officers, its functions are in some particulars entirely different from those of an ordinary disbursing officer, inasmuch as the money placed in the custody of the latter remains the sole and exclusive property of the United States and is still part of the funds of the Treasury; whereas when money is lawfully placed in the custody of the home, in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., 359-360), the legal title vests in that corporation for the time being, and until Congress shall otherwise direct. (Digest of Decisions of Second Comptroller, vol. 2, section 722.)

In reference to that decision the Second Auditor says:

Under this decision, which has not been revoked or modified, the auditing of the national home accounts has been of a somewhat perfunctory nature. If vouchers, duly certified and receipted, are furnished for disbursements made at the various "branches" of the home, and if the computations are correct, the accounts have been passed to the Second Comptroller for his action thereon, without objection.

This very statement shows us the absolute necessity of throwing around all legislation of this character, providing for the expenditure of money for out-door relief, every safeguard that does not now exist; and if this system, if this mode of expenditure, is entered upon in preference to the erection of five or six homes with the $2,000,000, which will accommodate nine thousand more inmates, then it ought to be accompanied by such legislation as will insure the safe disbursement of the money, and not seek to throw the responsibility for the expenditure of so large a sum upon gentlemen who do not wish to assume such authority.

Mr. STEELE. That is all the more reason why they should be intrusted with its expenditure.

Mr. RANDALL. We have no right to require it of them. They are volunteers. They are not officers of the Government in any sense of the word. They are not officers receiving a dollar of emolument. They do this duty as a gratuity and for the love they bear the soldiers of the country.

Mr. STEELE. They account for every cent they expend.

Mr. RANDALL. I have just read—the gentleman did not listen to me—that they do not account for every cent in manner as other public money is accounted for by the Government officers; nor are their accounts, as stated by the Second Auditor, more than a mere perfunctory statement.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, but you can amend the bill in this particular, and they will then be accounting officers.

Mr. RANDALL. You do not propose to do that, but to blindly appropriate $2,000,000 without any legislative provision guarding it.

I ask for a vote upon the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will withdraw my amendment for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. STEELE. I renew the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio withdrew his amendment at my suggestion, so that a vote could be first taken on the main question; then, if the appropriation is voted in, this might follow.

Mr. STEELE. I withdraw the amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. ATKINSON, the committee divided; and there were—ayes 93, noes 113.

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. ATKINSON demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. GROSVENOR and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 101, noes 117.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that amendment and offer another, to come in after the word "audited," in line 1738.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in the admission of ex-volunteer soldiers or sailors to national homes preference shall be given to those not drawing pensions; and no one shall be admitted to a home who is drawing a pension exceeding $12 a month unless he surrenders while in the home all in excess of that sum.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I raise the point of order upon that amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I suppose the amendment is subject to the point of order; but I think it is a most proper thing to put into this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For payment of United States district attorneys and their assistants, $255,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 1827 and 1828 strike out the words "and their assistants."

Mr. REED, of Maine. Why is that proposed?

Mr. RANDALL. Because they are provided for in the next paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For fees of clerks, $175,000: Provided, That hereafter no part of the appropriations made for the payment of fees for United States marshals or clerks shall be used to pay the fees of United States marshals or clerks upon any writ or bench warrant for the arrest of any person or persons who may be indicted by any United States grand jury, or against whom an information may be filed, where such person or persons is or are under a recognizance taken by or before any United States commissioner, or other officer authorized by law to take such recognizance, requiring the appearance of such person or persons before the court in which such indictment is found or information is filed, and when such recognizance has not been forfeited or said defendant is not in default, unless the court in which such indictment or information is pending orders a warrant to issue; nor shall any part of any money appropriated be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any attorney, clerk, or marshal for attendance in court except for days when business is actually transacted in court, and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672, and 2013 of the Revised Statutes, which fact shall be certified in the approval of their accounts: And provided further, That when one person holds the offices of both the district and circuit clerk, his compensation shall not exceed $4,000 per annum, or exceed that rate for any time less than a year.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, and Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, made the point of order against the last proviso of the paragraph.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like to make the point of order against the other proviso. The point of order I propose covers all after the word "provided," in line 1833.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to understand what points of order are raised. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] raises the point of order on the proviso from line 1833 to line 1856, ending with the words "approval of their accounts." What was the point of order of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. STEWART]?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I make the point of order on the last proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS]?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. My point of order applies to the remainder of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. Then it is the same as the point of order made by the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to state that there are three changes in this paragraph. The first is that the word "hereafter" is inserted so as to make it permanent. The next is the insertion of the word "attorney" when used lower down in connection with clerks and marshals. And, then, the latter proviso is new legislation. But I want to say with these exceptions the paragraph is existing law. It was suggested by my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], whom I see in front. It does not appear to me that the clause is subject to the point of order, except that the word "hereafter" may be.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think the word "hereafter" would cover more than the present appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is so intended.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I want to know what it covers?

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Maine will not compel Congress to be continuing this provision from year to year. I think he will see it is preferable to make it permanent.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania recalls to my mind the discussion in which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] participated, and I think I agreed with him at the time.

Mr. RANDALL. You voted with him. I admit that the word "hereafter" is new legislation and makes the proviso subject to the point of order. But I think the legislation should be made permanent, as both the Senate and the House have agreed to it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I withdraw my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the other point of order insisted upon—that which applies to the last proviso?

Mr. RANDALL. That is new legislation. Does the gentleman from Vermont insist on the point of order?

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being insisted upon, the last proviso will be considered as ruled out.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For fees of United States commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as United States commissioners, $50,000. And hereafter the whole of the compensation and fees paid a commissioner, and to which he may be entitled, for services in the examination of criminal charges, shall not exceed $800 per annum or exceed that rate for any time less than a year.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. I make the point of order on that paragraph, because of the word "hereafter."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the word "hereafter" makes the clause beginning in line 1863 new legislation and obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer as an amendment to the paragraph what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to commissioners that reside in cities of 150,000 inhabitants and upwards.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will understand the Chair. The Chair has ruled out the last sentence of the pending paragraph under the point of order. The gentleman's amendment is treating it as if still there. There is no such limitation in the existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. I propose to amend the paragraph by adding to it the words which I have sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania propose to substitute the word "hereby" for the word "hereafter?"

Mr. RANDALL. No, sir; I want to keep in what has been ruled out, with the limitation I have sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the clause, with the addition proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

And hereafter the whole of the compensation and fees paid a commissioner, and to which he may be entitled for services in the examination of criminal charges, shall not exceed $800 per annum, or exceed that rate for any time less than a year: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to commissioners that reside in cities of 150,000 inhabitants and upwards.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is open to the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that is obnoxious to the same point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will leave out the word "hereafter."

Mr. REED, of Maine. It will still be open to the point of order. I think the paragraph is subject to grave animadversion.

Mr. RANDALL. There have been gross abuses in some of the districts. The original paragraph would have affected some districts where there have not been any abuses alleged. This draws the line so to prevent its operating against commissioners against whom no objection has been raised. It affects only those who have been charged with a system of extortion.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I am afraid it will be found that the wording of this paragraph carries out some not very enlarged views of the First Comptroller, which it is scarcely worth the while of the House to do.

Mr. RANDALL. I am carrying out an attempt to remedy one of the most vicious practices that attaches to the administration of justice in the United States.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What is it?

Mr. RANDALL. The arrest of people by one commissioner and then their rearrest by another commissioner.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is nothing in this that touches that. Under this provision you can re-arrest them $800 worth.

Mr. RANDALL. I will give the figures. While the average cost of a commissioner of a district is about $7,700, there are districts such as the following: Northern district of Alabama, $23,500; middle and southern district of Alabama, $26,532; northern district of Georgia, $19,100; northern district of New York, $28,421; western district of North Carolina, $35,100; eastern district of Tennessee, $18,745; middle district of Tennessee, $16,850.

And this is done by a system of procedure which may perhaps be permitted by the law, but it is done merely to annoy citizens and secure fees.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that if such a thing is done it ought to be prohibited and stopped. It is infamous. But here is a proposition to limit all United States commissioners outside of cities having 150,000 inhabitants to $800 a year. Now that is not a sequiter from the abuse at all.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this subject should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to insert in this connection a letter from the First Comptroller, and a statement which appears in the report of the Committee on Appropriations touching this matter, so that gentlemen may see exactly who is affected by this provision.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I for one should like to know, because if it is going on by consent and if there is any abuse which can be remedied it ought to be remedied.

The following are the letter and statement:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, FIRST COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 13, 1886.

SIR: As indicating, to some extent, the importance of the legislation that your committee has proposed in connection with the appropriation for fees of United States commissioners in the sundry civil bill, I beg to call attention to the following official figures, which show the amount of money already used in the districts enumerated below to pay witness fees for the fiscal year 1886; and I estimate that a further sum of at least $40,000 is needed to supply deficiencies in the witness appropriation for that year. These districts are those in which the peculiar modes obtain whereby commissioners swell their fees to an amount exceeding $800 a year, and by reason of which a heavy expense is entailed on the whole class of judiciary appropriations. If the demands for witness money were equal throughout the United States in the various judicial districts, there would be $7,746.47 for each district with the appropriation at its present size:

Northern District of Alabama	$23,500 00
Middle and Southern District of Alabama	26,532 43
Northern District of Georgia	19,100 00
Northern District of New York	28,421 61
Western District of North Carolina	35,100 00
Eastern District of Tennessee	18,745 00
Middle District of Tennessee	16,850 00

M. J. DURHAM, Comptroller.

Utah Territory—William McKay, Salt Lake City.

Mr. RANDALL. What limit does the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] propose so as to prevent these unwarranted arrests.

Mr. REED, of Maine. My objection is this: Under the proposition there would be two difficulties:

First. When a commissioner has earned his $800 he will stop, and another one will go on to earn the same sum; therefore, the same abuses which now exist or are said to exist from the piling up of fees will continue.

Second. There is a provision that the commissioner shall not have either his $800 or any aliquot part of that sum in excess of the limit. If he should happen in the first quarter to do more than two hundred dollars' worth of work, the Treasury could not pay him until he got through the year, so as to see whether he exceeded the $800 or not.

You not only limit the commissioner to the $800 a year, but, under certain circumstances, you refuse to pay him for his first quarter's work until the whole year is completed.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, modify it. State the limit to which you are willing to go.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not see any sense in any limitation if you have a good commissioner. The United States commissioner is, to a certain extent, a judicial officer. He performs judicial functions, and it is for the advantage of every district that some commissioner in it should have enough work to learn to do his work thoroughly well. I know that in my own district the work was in the hands of a son of Mr. Justice Clifford, who performed it well because he had enough of it to do to make it an object. Since his time it has been in the hands of another commissioner, who has had enough work, so that he could learn to do it thoroughly and become familiar with the somewhat difficult forms of United States practice. But if you limit a man to $800 a year, or to any particular sum, you are going to destroy the efficiency of a class of officers who are very much needed in the administration of justice so far as the commissioners administer it.

Mr. RANDALL. I can make the gentleman's mind easy on the subject of Maine.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, I have no uneasiness on that subject. When I make these personal allusions I make them simply to show that I know something of what I am talking about.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, the gentleman picked out an individual, and I want to satisfy him.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I am not aware that there is anybody in my State or in my section who is in the slightest degree affected by this provision.

Mr. RANDALL. I can assure the gentleman there is not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I did not suppose there was. But the observations I have made are true, and they are inconsistent with assent to this proposition. Now, I submit to the gentleman that he ought to be able to propose some amendment which would reach the difficulties with which he wishes to deal. This proposition certainly does not reach the case at all.

Mr. RANDALL. I think it does.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If I had any disposition beyond a desire to arrive at what is just and reasonable in the matter, I could cut this proposition off on the point of order; but I want the committee to see not only that it is obnoxious to the point of order, but that it is wrong in itself. The matter should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. RANDALL. Of course, if the gentleman makes the point of order, I can not resist it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman from Iowa will insist on the point of order if I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

No part of this appropriation shall be expended in the payment of more than $800 per annum to any commissioner for services in the examination of criminal charges, or at that rate for any time less than a year. But the provision shall not apply to commissioners in cities of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants.

Mr. LYMAN. I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think it is obnoxious to the point of changing the existing law.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It does not only change the right of the commissioner, but he has to go through the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is all.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Well, I hope that we shall not pass any such legislation as that. What an absurdity! The United States does not pay its debts, but we deliberately propose to send the parties to the Court of Claims!

Mr. RANDALL. This only applies to criminal proceedings before commissioners, not to civil proceedings.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to suggest an additional amendment, to insert after the word "dollars," in line 1863——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman, as the Chair understands, is moving an amendment to language which has already gone out on a point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana has not yet been voted on?

The CHAIRMAN. It has not.

Mr. SPRINGER. This can be moved as an amendment to that, if germane.

The CHAIRMAN. It is impossible for the Chair to determine whether it is germane until he hears it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will read the amendment, and the Chair can then decide whether it is germane.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman from Kentucky propose his amendment as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I will offer it as an amendment to that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana has been held to be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. It simply limits the expenditure.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to move my proposition as an amendment to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is permissible. The gentleman will please send up his amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would like to read it myself, because I doubt whether my writing will be legible to any one else:

Provided, That no part of any money hereby appropriated shall be used to pay any fees to United States commissioners, marshals, or clerks for any warrant issued or arrest made, or other fees, in prosecutions under the internal-revenue laws, unless the prosecution has been approved by the attorney of the United States and the collector of internal revenue in the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed or that the prosecution is by indictment.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will insert "and" instead of the word "provided" that will be all right as an amendment to my amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is simply to attempt to remedy some of the evils——

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is this proposition offered as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. As an addition.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then we are to have this in addition to the Court of Claims amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; some more of the same kind, only still better. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am not at all wedded to this amendment in its present form. If gentlemen think it does not sufficiently cover the evil at which it is aimed, I am perfectly willing to withdraw it. I submit it merely in the nature of a suggestion.

Several MEMBERS. Do not withdraw it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the two propositions taken together may be read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The evil complained of is that there are unnecessary prosecutions, and that prosecutions are, in some instances, instituted for improper purposes; the evil in this respect growing, in the main, out of alleged offenses against the internal-revenue laws. Now, if we require that these prosecutions shall be approved by the United States district attorney and the collector of internal revenue of the district where the offense is alleged to have been committed, though this provision may not be a complete protection against the evils which the amendment seeks to remedy, it would certainly furnish some protection against unnecessary and trivial prosecutions.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then, under this amendment, the marshal, before he makes an arrest, must hunt up, not only the commissioner, but the district attorney and the collector of internal revenue.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Not necessarily.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does not the gentleman from Kentucky think this is giving the "moonshiner" rather more chance than he ought to have. I agree that he ought to be hunted fairly——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I did not catch the remark of the gentleman.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that the "moonshiner" should be hunted fairly, and according to proper legal rules, but I do not want the case loaded too much against the Government. [Laughter].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know that "the gentleman from Kentucky" said anything about the "moonshiner," or whether he should be hunted fairly or otherwise. That is altogether a figment of the very vivid imagination of my friend from Maine. The sole object of the amendment—and I think the object is proper, whether the accused be a "moonshiner" or anybody else—is that trivial prosecutions, arbitrarily and unnecessarily instituted in the name of the United States, may be so far as possible avoided. They can not be altogether prevented, but they can be diminished. Whether this or some other provision which may be suggested will best accomplish that object I do not pretend to say. I am not at all wedded to this proposition.

In my part of the country—it may seem strange to the gentleman from Maine—we have no "moonshiners." If he will come and pay me a visit I will show him the place where the liquor which has given some celebrity to the State of Kentucky is made. Not that a gentleman coming from Maine would ever drink it, but the odor of it is pleasant. [Laughter.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is rather a sad fate that the gentleman predicts for me. [Laughter.] But I want to suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that while he may desire that frivolous prosecutions shall be prevented, he ought not to require of the United States officials, in pursuit of men guilty of crime against the law, too many things. Now, according to his amendment it would be necessary to find a commissioner and get a warrant first, would it not? It would be necessary to find a collector of internal revenue and get his sanction. It would be necessary to find a district attorney and get his sanction also. This is certainly extending every facility to an alleged criminal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Maine seems to forget that in the pursuit of a criminal—and he is only an alleged criminal until he is convicted—necessary preliminary steps are always taken. It can not commence until certain preliminaries required by the law are completed. Now it requires, in the first place, an affidavit, by regulation, and the approval of certain officers appointed by the law.

I attempt by this amendment to make what are now mere regulations of the department, in certain cases, matters of law instead of regulation. The person who sets a prosecution on foot, and who may institute it by simple affidavit, the animus of which may or may not spring from a desire to vindicate the law, or from other reasons, is, if this amendment be adopted, required to do something more. He must obtain, first, the issuance of the warrant; and he must further obtain as a part of the necessary prescribed precedents to the pursuit of the alleged criminal by the officer of the law upon his affidavit, the approval of the district attorney and the approval of the collector of internal revenue.

Mr. SPRINGER. One word in reference to the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky. It is precisely in accordance with the instructions of the Attorney-General; and orders to this effect were issued by Attorney-General Brewster, which orders are now operative upon all marshals and district attorneys throughout the United States.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Then why is it necessary to enact a new law?

Mr. SPRINGER. To make it permanent and compulsory.

I say this is done now all over the country in pursuance of an order of a Republican Attorney-General. It is the practice to-day; and instead of this being in the interest of criminals, no prosecution under the internal-revenue law can be begun except upon authority of the district attorney and the collector of internal revenue.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky will not remedy the evils that gentlemen speak of.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not say that prosecutions are not begun without this; but these are the orders of this Department now, though they are often practically violated for the purpose of making fees; and the amendment of the gentleman will prevent them from getting the fees when they disregard it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Prosecutions are often commenced in a contrary way, much to the detriment of the public service and the embarrassment of the people.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on the amendment as amended.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for the reading of the amendment as amended.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I desire to offer a mere verbal amendment, which will correct what is evidently an inaccuracy in the amendment. I propose the insertion after the word "year" of the words:

And more than one month.

The pay of a United States commissioner is $5 per day. If he has but one or two cases in a year it leaves his compensation at between two and three dollars. Now, I would propose to make it not less than a year or more than one month; and that gives him the proportion of the amount he ought to receive.

The matter is very plain. A United States commissioner is paid $5 a day. This says he shall not be paid at a rate exceeding $800 a year, or at that rate for any time less than a year. Now, if he has but two or three cases he receives his $5, and the proportion for the remainder of the time that the $800 bears to a year. My amendment says that the pay shall be for a period not more than one month; so it will give him his proportion. It does not increase the amount at all.

Mr. RANDALL. I am inclined to think, if I understand the amendment, that the gentleman is correct about it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. It gives $5 up to a month, and beyond that he gets under the rate per annum.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I must make the point of order upon that. It changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Maine on the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. It does; but it is simply a limitation.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It changes the law unless the commissioner has the right to go to the Court of Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has nothing to do with that. It is a limitation upon the expenditure of this $50,000.

Mr. REED, of Maine. And the Chair rules that that is all the effect?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not see it has any other effect.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If it has no other effect it is not obnoxious to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask one question as to the effect of the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE]: Whether or not under that amendment the approval of the prosecution by the collector and district attorney is necessary to be had prior to the prosecution, or whether the payment can be had for the prosecution when the approval is had subsequent to the rendition of the service?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary question.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to have the amendment again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. TAULBEE. I desire to amend the amendment by inserting the word "first."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand there is no objection to my amendment. I suggest that a vote be taken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is my amendment in order now?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move to amend by inserting the word "first," preceding the word "approved," so that it will read "first approved."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the proposed amendment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I would like to have the House understand the amendment now before it. The first, or the Court of Claims amendment, is open to one or two objections. First, it limits, so far as this bill is concerned, each commissioner to the compensation of $800 per annum. If he expects to get his pay under this bill he has got to quit work when he has done $800 worth of work. In addition to that, if during the first quarter he should happen to do more than $200 worth he can not receive pay until the end of the year. You not only stop his emoluments but you stop the payment of them.

Then, in addition to that, if he goes on and performs the work that is given him to do, instead of collecting his compensation in the regular way, he will be obliged to go to the Court of Claims in order to collect it; because it is admitted on all hands that this amendment can not prevent a commissioner from earning $2,000 or $3,000 a year, and it can not prevent him from collecting it. It only hands him over to the tender mercies of the First Comptroller, and to the perhaps tenderer mercies of the Court of Claims, instead of paying him in the regular way.

We deliberately by enactment determine we will not pay the commissioner unless he brings a suit against the United States. This is an excellent specimen of nine-penny repudiation; and yet I suppose it will pass under the head of economy. The other amendment—which, not coming from a moonshining district, I shall not characterize as such—provides that it shall be absolutely necessary to have the approval of the internal revenue collector and of the district attorney, while no provision whatever is made for their absence. I submit that this amendment, taken altogether, has rather more charms than ought to soothe even our Democratic brethren. I do not think we ought to get up here and deliberately refuse to make payment of the debts of the Government except through litigation. And if we have any objection to the payment of the present set of fees, why would it not be a good plan to meet that objection, instead of sending men to the Court of Claims? We have got some officials of this Government to-day who are absolutely refusing payments which have received the sanction of the Supreme Court of the United States. This ought not to have the encouragement and example of this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the gentleman from Maine misapprehends the effect of going into the Court of Claims upon such a proposition. The Supreme Court has uniformly held where Congress has appropriated a less sum than an annual appropriation already fixed by law, without indicating any intention of making it in full compensation for the services rendered, the officer may go into the Court of Claims and recover the difference between the sum actually paid and the salary or compensation. But where it is apparent on the face of the law that it was the intention of Congress to make the sum appropriated the full compensation the officer can not recover against the Government. That has been the uniform current of decisions. Therefore, it was sought in the last session to incorporate on the consular and diplomatic bill the words "in full compensation," those words having been inserted by the Senate. And here the language indicates the exact sum to be paid, beyond which Congress does not intend payment to be made. So that it is possible on the authority of the decision of the Supreme Court that in a case like this recovery can be had of $800.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, my attention has been called to the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], which speaks of the "attorney of the United States." I would suggest that it be changed so as to read: "The district attorney of the United States," that being the technical term.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It would be more binding if you got the Attorney-General's approval. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER].

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not recognize the right of the gentleman to accept it.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. SPRINGER, and it was rejected—ayes 57, noes 59.

The amendment as amended was then agreed to—ayes 88, noes 67.

The Clerk read as follows:

For other miscellaneous expenses authorized by the Attorney-General, including the employment of janitors and watchmen in rooms or buildings rented for the use of courts, interpreters, experts, and stenographers; of furnishing and collecting evidence where the United States is or may be a party in interest, and moving of records, $214,400.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to modify the language of that paragraph by striking out in line 1886 the words "other miscellaneous expenses," and inserting "payment of such miscellaneous expenses as may be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the paragraph headed "public printing and binding."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that it is getting late——

Mr. RANDALL. Five minutes will probably suffice to complete the reading. Then, if there is to be debate on this paragraph, well and good; but if not, I shall ask that we may get this bill out of committee before we adjourn.

The Clerk completed the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. RANDALL. In obedience to the law of last year, the committee have recommended the itemizing of the appropriations for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Hydrographic Office, the Signal Service, and the Geological Survey. These are all the changes that have been made, and they are in obedience to law. I now move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendments, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the amendments, and on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion for a second. I want to ask unanimous consent—— [Cries of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"]

The motion of Mr. RANDALL was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 28 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. GORMAN. I present the memorial of a large number of citizens of the United States in relation to the centennial celebration of the adoption of the Federal Constitution and the world's exposition to celebrate the discovery of the continent of America by Columbus.

This memorial is signed by a very large number of citizens of the United States, and contains also the proceedings of a convention recently held in the city of Washington on that subject. It is an interesting matter, and I ask unanimous consent that the memorial may be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the special committee on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the memorial and proceedings presented by him be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. What is the nature of the memorial?

Mr. GORMAN. It is a memorial, with the proceedings of a convention held in this city, in relation to the proposed exposition to commemorate the centennial of the adoption of the Federal Constitution and of the discovery of the American continent.

The memorial with the accompanying proceedings was referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution of the United States, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 13, 1886.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, a committee appointed by a convention assembled at Washington on Tuesday, December 7, for the purpose of considering the subject of a centennial celebration of the adoption of the Federal Constitution, and of a world's exposition, in celebration of the discovery of the continent of America by Columbus, respectfully submit to the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled the proceedings of the body they represent, and the accompanying memorial.

The convention, which was composed of delegates from twenty-four States and Territories, was organized by the choice of the Hon. William Claflin, of Massachusetts, as president; Hon. A. A. Ames, of Minnesota, Hon. E. John Ellis, of Louisiana, Hon. Amor Smith, jr., of Ohio, Charles D. Fisher, esq., of Maryland, A. R. Little, esq., of Pennsylvania, and Hon. A. P. Williams, of California, as vice-presidents; and Alex. D. Anderson, esq., as secretary, and adopted the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That a committee, to consist of fifteen members, five of whom shall be a quorum, be appointed by the chair, whose duty it shall be to prepare and present to Congress a memorial of this convention, with the signatures of its members appended, urging upon that body:

"1. To take action for such a celebration in 1889, at Washington, of the one hundredth anniversary of the establishment of constitutional republican government in America, as may be deemed appropriate to the grandeur of the occasion and worthy the dignity of the nation, and that the republics of the world be invited by the President of the United States to participate therein, and that all other nations be invited to be present as guests. It is suggested that the celebration should extend over several days, and include addresses by some of the foremost men of each republic.

"2. Necessary appropriations for the proposed extension of the National Museum and such other buildings as may be required to enable the officers of that institution to carry more fully into effect, on a comprehensive scale, all the objects for which it was founded.

"3. Necessary appropriation for a suitable building or buildings on some public reservation in Washington, to constitute a part of the Patent Office, in which to exhibit working models in actual operation of such useful inventions by American inventors in general use, patented by the United States, as may be selected by the Commissioner of Patents.

"4. To allot the requisite space on some public reservation in Washington for the erection of, and suitable surroundings for, a building or buildings of sufficient capacity for a national and international expositon of the arts and industries, products and manufactures, of the several States and Territories of the United States and of all the nations of the world, to be held in 1892 in commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the Western hemisphere by Columbus.

"5. To provide for the appointment of a board of Government directors, who shall have authority to cause or permit the erection of such exposition buildings, upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, whenever sufficient funds therefor shall be provided for the purposes, and not before.

"6. To provide that the Government directors appoint a secretary and treasurer, the secretary to give to each subscriber to the exposition fund a receipt for the amount subscribed and paid by him, which shall entitle the holder to a pro rata amount of any net proceeds accruing from said exposition, not to exceed the amount contributed by him. If any surplus remains after the reimbursement of subscribers, the same to remain subject to disposition by Congress. The treasurer to receive into the treasury all contributions and all proceeds of the exposition, and to pay out the same only on drafts authorized by the said Government directors.

"7. To make all necessary provision for the operations of said exposition.

"8. To cause the erection of a statue to Columbus on the exposition grounds."

The committee appointed to prepare and present this memorial respectfully ask, therefore, that, in addition to the things generally set forth in said resolutions, specific provision be made by Congress for the following:

First. The appointment of a board of location to consist of five members, who shall have the authority and whose duty it shall be, subject to the subsequent approval by Congress within three months from the passage of such act, to select the requisite space on the public reservations within the city of Washington for the purpose named in the fourth of said resolutions; and this committee suggests as proper officers to compose such board: the Secretary of the Interior, the president of the board of District commissioners, the engineer in charge of public buildings and grounds, and one member of each House of Congress, to be named by the presiding officer thereof respectively.

Second. The appointment of a board of twenty-one Government directors to perform the duties named in the fifth and sixth of said resolutions; and this committee suggests that in the construction of this board seven be appointed by the President of the United States, seven by the President of the Senate, and seven by the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Third. The appointment of an advisory commission of one from each State and Territory to be named by the governor thereof.

Your memorialists further say that the object of asking the appointment of directors by the Government to receive and disburse all moneys in connection with the proposed exposition is to guarantee to the nations, States, and individuals, whose liberality is relied on to insure the success of the undertaking, that the financial part of it will be under the control of the Government of the United States.

Respectfully submitted.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2839) for the relief of the Church of the Ascension, in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2982) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of streets by a railway for the purpose of transporting material to fill about the base of the Washington Monument, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3760) to enlarge the jurisdiction of the probate courts in Wyoming Territory, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EASTPORT, ME.

Mr. MAHONE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2901) to provide for the erection of a public building at Eastport, Me., to report it with an amendment.

Mr. HALE. This is a bill which I introduced on the second day of the session. I asked for its immediate consideration at that time, but objection being made it went to the committee which has investigated the subject and made this report. As the building and the town itself was nearly all burned down, and it is a very important port and an important custom-house, I ask that the Senate consider the bill now. I presume there will be no objection to it.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public auction, in the town of Eastport, Me., to the highest bidder, after thirty days' notice in all of the newspapers published in the town of Eastport, the land and premises known as the United States custom-house and post-office, on Washington and Water streets in said town of Eastport, Me.; the time and place of said sale in said town to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at a date not later than sixty days after the passage of this act, with power to reject any or all bids, and to readvertise the said property in like manner as often as may be necessary to secure the value thereof, and the cost to be paid from the proceeds of sale of said property.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest the purchase-money of the said property received by him, so far as the same may go, in the purchase or acquisition by condemnation of a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable and commodious fire-proof building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, custom-house, and other Government offices, at the town of Eastport, in the State of Maine. The cost of said building, including site, approaches, and heating apparatus, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the sum of $100,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Maine shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine why the lot the Government now owns should be sold and a new lot purchased?

Mr. HALE. The old lot is very small, to begin with, and it is situated on the wrong side of the street, away from the water. Eastport is a seaport. The Treasury Department has investigated the matter itself by its agents and prepared this bill. In conference with the citizens of the town they decided that it would be much more convenient for the business of the office to purchase a new site on the opposite side of the street and next to the sea, where vessels could approach and where it would be more convenient in every way. It is for that purpose that the change is suggested.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey the United States custom-house and post-office property at Eastport, in the State of Maine, lately destroyed by fire, the proceeds thereof to be invested in the purchase of a new site for and to provide for the erection of a new public building at that place."

RELATIONS WITH MEXICO.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas the close proximity of Mexico to this country, the increasing commerce between the two countries, and the common interests of the two republics in many respects make it most desirable that there should exist between them the closest ties of friendship: Therefore,

Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, whose duty it shall be to visit such places along the frontier as they may deem proper, and also the City of Mexico, with the approval of the Mexican Government, in order to inquire into and report upon any disturbances that may have occurred between citizens of the two countries; and if any disturbances have occurred to inquire and report the cause thereof. That said committee may send for persons and papers, employ a stenographer, and such other persons as may be necessary for the proper accomplishment of the object and purposes of said inquiry. That said committee may sit during the recess of Congress.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask that the resolution be printed, and lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN VESSELS IN BRITISH WATERS.

Mr. FRYE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That such evidence, papers, and documents as may be deemed necessary by the Committee on Foreign Relations be printed for the use of said committee in its investigation of the fisheries question under the resolution of the Senate adopted on the 24th day of July, 1886, under the direction of said committee.

THE TRADE-DOLLAR.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, the morning business is closed and the Calendar is in order.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 199) Order of Business 1885. I think that with a word of explanation there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill, and that it may be passed without debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the Calendar, the Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, this bill was reported a few days ago from the Finance Committee. It is a compromise between the different views which have been heretofore held in regard to this question.

The bill proposes to redeem all the trade-dollars which may be presented at the Treasury of the United States between the passage of the bill and the 1st day of July, 1887, which are not defaced, mutilated or stamped.

It proposes to regard the trade-dollars thus redeemed as silver bullion at its bullion value, and that value is to be deducted from the Treasury purchases of $2,000,000 per month, but during no month is more than $500,000 to be so deducted.

Two views have been held by various members of the Senate and of the Committee on Finance. Nearly all have agreed, however, that the trade-dollar should be redeemed; that for the Government to continue to refuse to take its own coin is little else than robbery of its own citizens. Some have held that it should be redeemed at its face value and reissued, and not counted as a part of the $2,000,000 of silver bullion to be purchased per month. Other Senators have held that there should be deducted at once from the purchases of $2,000,000 per month whatever amount might be redeemed during the month. It has finally been agreed as a compromise that not more than $500,000 per month should be taken from the Treasury purchases.

Substantially this measure in its present form was passed here once before. Last summer it will be remembered that an amendment for this purpose was offered to what was known as the Treasury surplus resolution, and it passed the Senate, but was finally rejected by the committee of conference which had that measure under consideration.

That amendment was so drawn that it would have led to the redemption of all the trade-dollars now held abroad, particularly in China, where it is estimated that at least twenty millions of them have gone. Under this bill, as it now stands, they can only be redeemed up to July 1, and none are to be redeemed which have been defaced, mutilated, or stamped. It is a well known fact that all the trade-dollars which have gone into circulation in China or elsewhere have been stamped officially, either by the Government or by Chinese merchants, and under this bill the trade-dollars now held abroad would not be redeemed.

It is estimated by leading bankers in New York and others who have investigated this question that only from six to nine million trade-dollars are now held in the United States by our citizens. They have been out of circulation now for two or three years. The people holding them have lost the interest upon them; the currency has been withdrawn from circulation, and great loss has come to many of our people. But our citizens have thus far refused to sell these trade-dollars for bullion, because they hold, and I think properly hold, that the Government of the United States can in honor do nothing less than redeem them at their face value.

If this bill can be passed this morning and go to the House of Representatives, I believe it can pass there before the adjournment previous to the holiday recess, and that then the people of this country will at once return their trade-dollars to the Treasury of the United States and receive for them standard dollars.

I need not say that I have always favored this measure of justice to our people, and I trust that as the Finance Committee has finally agreed upon this bill, and as it has been heretofore fully discussed in this body, it may now be taken up and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance, with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 1, line 3, before "United States," to strike out "eighty-six" and insert "eighty-seven;" so as to make the section read:

That until July 1st, 1887, United States trade-dollars, if not defaced, mutilated, or stamped, shall be received at the office of the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States, in exchange for a like amount, dollar for dollar, of standard silver dollars of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, after the words "coinage mints," at the end of line 4, to strike out "and under the act of February 28, 1878," and insert "and shall be regarded and treated as silver bullion, and, at their bullion value, shall be deducted from the amount of bullion required to be purchased and coined by the act of February 28, 1878, and," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That the trade-dollars received by the Treasurer or any assistant treasurer of the United States shall not be paid out or in any other manner issued, but, at the expense of the United States, shall be transmitted to the coinage mints, and shall be regarded and treated as silver bullion, and, at their bullion value, shall be deducted from the amount of bullion required to be purchased and coined by the act of February 28, 1878, and shall be recoined into standard silver dollars, according to the provisions of said act:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 2 the following proviso:

Provided, That the amount to be so deducted as provided in this section shall not exceed $500,000 in any month.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

POST-OFFICE FREE-DELIVERY SYSTEM.

Mr. CONGER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Michigan to the fact that in the printed bill a word is misprinted which may require an amendment. Instead of "that" in line 2 of section 3 the word should be "than."

Mr. CONGER. It is a clerical error, which can be corrected by the clerks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The engrossed bill has been sent for to ascertain whether it is an error in the print or in the engrossment. Is there any amendment to the bill?

Mr. CONGER. There is no amendment. The bill was reported from the committee as it was brought from the other House.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CONGER. Was that found to be an error in print?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The word was found to be correct in the engrossed copy, and the error is in the printed copy. The bill needs no amendment.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

POSTAL MONEY-ORDER SYSTEM.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5878) to amend the act entitled "An act to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

MAIL MESSENGERS.

Mr. CONGER. There is another bill which it is important should be passed in regard to postal matters. It is the bill (H. R. 8346) reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail-messengers in the postal service.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 4, to strike out the word "employ" and insert the words "contract for," so as to read:

That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract for such mail-messenger service as may be necessary for the carriage of the mails in connection with railroad and steamboat service, transfer service between depots, over bridges or ferries, between post-offices, post-offices and branch offices or stations, in cases where, by the laws and regulations of the Post-Office Department, railroad companies, steamboat companies, and the masters of vessels are not required to deliver into and take from the post-offices the mails carried on their lines or vessels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following words:

And said contracts shall be let to the lowest bidders, after due advertisement at such times and places as the Postmaster-General may direct, and upon the same terms and conditions as other contracts for carrrying the United States mails on star-routes as may be provided by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to read a third time.

The bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that upon the amendments made by the Senate a committee of conference be appointed, and that a corresponding committee be requested from the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan moves that the Senate insist on its amendments and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. CONGER, Mr. CHACE, and Mr. MAXEY were appointed.

GRAFTON MONROE.

Mr. MAXEY submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to section 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment to section 2, and agree to the same.

S. B. MAXEY,
O. D. CONGER,
JONATHAN CHACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK T. SHAW,
JONAS G. HOWARD,
J. McKENNA,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. COCKRELL. What will be the bill as agreed to? We can not tell by a mere statement of amendments to section No. 1 and to section No. 2.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state that the first amendment makes more plain the purpose and design that the account shall be clearly stated by the auditor before it can be allowed.

It is simply the claim of a postmaster who had been robbed of certain money-order funds, stamps, and postal funds. The proof was entirely satisfactory to the committee of the Senate, the committee of the House, and the conference committee, that the funds had been lost without any fault or negligence on the part of the postmaster. The trouble with the conferees on the part of the Senate was, that acting as we had always done, we were not disposed ever to allow for money-order funds lost under any state of case. But the action of this body and the action of the other House upon like cases coming from other Departments of the Government where the equities were conclusive, satisfied us that we ought to yield to the action of the House in that regard.

I will state that there was no question in the mind of any member of the conference committee on the part of the Senate or of the House that the claim was a just claim. It was merely a question as to whether technically it ought to be allowed. We believed that the equities overrode the technicality, and we therefore agreed to the action of the House.

The report was concurred in.

TRIAL BY JURY TO PENSION CLAIMANTS.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 1607, being the bill (S. 816) to give the right of trial by jury to claimants of pensions, under the laws of the United States, whose applications have been rejected by the Secretary of the Interior on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him. The question is on that motion.

The question being put, it was declared that the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I would like the question to be taken in a satisfactory way.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the title of the bill be again read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Let the bill be reported in full.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays, and I wish to make a statement in regard to this bill; or I would like, as the report of the committee is short, that the report be read, for evidently Senators do not understand what the bill is. The report is brief, and I ask that it be read.

Several SENATORS. Let the report be read.

Mr. HARRIS. Is not the reading of the report in the nature of debate, and is it not contrary to the rules?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the reading of a report is in the nature of debate, and that it can not be read at this stage if there is objection.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not object if there is a desire to hear it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the report will now be read. The Chair hears no objection.

The Chief Clerk read the report, submitted by Mr. BLAIR June 24, 1886, from the Committee on Pensions; as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 816) to give the right of trial by jury to claimants of pensions under the laws of the United States whose applications have been rejected by the Secretary of the Interior on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions, have considered the same, and report herewith the bill, and recommend its passage.

A great number of pension claims, after years of earnest prosecution at great expense to the parties, are finally rejected by the Department, often where the evidence is very conflicting and great doubt exists of the justice of the decision. The methods of trial, substantially ex parte and without the advantage of personal examination of the party and witnesses in presence of the tribunal which decides the cause, can not be remedied under the present system of adjudication. Yet the rights concluded are of much greater pecuniary importance than the ordinary amounts involved in litigation, and to the soldier, his widow, minor children, and dependent relatives the determination of these questions generally involve the comforts of life and not unfrequently existence itself.

The great mass of applications for relief by special legislation grow out of the dissatisfaction of claimants who have prosecuted their claims for many years under the greatest difficulties with the final, and as they believe unjust, decision of their claims. Consequently they come to Congress, and their petitions must be heard. The present session there have been more than 4,500 bills for special acts of pension introduced in the two Houses of Congress—3,788 in the House and 764 in the Senate—and probably not less than 5,000 will be introduced before the Congress ends. Of these, 618 have passed the Congress. How many will become laws is unknown to the committee. Probably at least nineteen-twentieths of the bills are substantially appeals from the decision of the Pension Office.

There is every reason to believe that this army of petitioners for redress will increase annually for many years. There is no escape from the consideration of these cases by Congress or by some local tribunal, with opportunity to examine the parties, witnesses, and proof and decide finally upon these controversies.

We can conceive of no possible reason why the trial by jury should not be allowed to these applicants, since it is insured by constitutional provisions in every other case of vested rights. No other tribunal but the regular judiciary of the country can settle, to final satisfaction, these claims. We believe that the passage of this bill would substantially remove the overwhelming labor which oppresses the Congress and the Executive with a work which can neither be ignored nor yet satisfactorily performed.

The great mass of cases would still continue to be finally decided by the Department of Interior, which, notwithstanding the imperfections inherent in the system, is able to adjudicate satisfactorily upon claims under the pension laws; but something must be done to provide for those who now come to Congress for relief, and in most cases with righteous demands, under the general laws, which they have not been able to establish to the satisfaction of the Department which is compelled to try their causes under every embarrassment and difficulty surrounding the forms of investigation and the formation of just conclusion in the premises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. Can I have a minute to say a word in regard to this bill before the vote is taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent of the Senate to debate this bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLAIR. This is a bill which was reported without any minority report, and so far as I know, certainly at the time of action in the committee, without opposition. Its purpose is to remove, if possible, the occasion for special legislation in regard to pension cases to such extent as is possible. The report sets forth most of the facts, though not to the full extent that they exist at the present time in the history of this Congress, for the reason that the report was submitted several months ago. Any one connected seriously, who has really anything to do with the business of the Pensions Committee, and whose membership of that committee is not merely nominal, so far as its labor is concerned, will know very well that it is highly important that some method be contrived by the wisdom of Congress that will give the opportunity of adjudicating, in a satisfactory manner, the pension claims which now come here, and must continue to come here for special legislation.

The existing law contemplates that cases be prosecuted to a final decision by the Secretary of the Interior. The cases which come to Congress arising under the general laws comprise, as I think, at least four-fifths of all those that we are called upon to act upon at all. If we could give to these parties in their own vicinity, where they live, the opportunity of trying their cases over again at their own expense, as the bill leaves them to do, if at all, by the action of the district court, either the decision of the judge or an auditor, or a jury, if the party choose to ask for a jury, it would relieve Congress entirely of this class of applications, for there would be no use remaining for coming to this body. Where a man can get his jury trial and his adjudication by the laws of the land, in accordance with the procedure of the common law, he ought to be satisfied and would be satisfied, and it would be a sufficient answer to such a man coming to Congress to say to him: "Apply to the court in your own vicinity, and abide the action of a jury of your own neighbors."

It is with this view that this bill is devised. Of course there would be still remaining special cases that arise outside of general laws which come here on petition; but the great mass of the work which now embarrasses the committee and which does not always result satisfactorily to the claimant, and which is also attended with great sacrifice of time and great labor and great expense to the claimant, or at least usually so, would be obviated.

I am entirely at a loss to conceive of any rational opposition that can be made to a bill of this kind. Senators who have served upon the committee and who know something of the work that is placed upon them, and the manner in which it has to be done, if done at all, will, I think, appreciate the necessity of some legislation of the kind that is here attempted. If better legislation can be devised, it may be suggested in debate; but upon the question of consideration, it seems to me, the Senate ought to be agreed. Something should be done, and I do not know any better opportunity of taking up the bill than now. If action is to be had it must go to the other House, and the sooner we get it there before the holidays the better.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to be allowed to debate this question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have gone with my friend from New Hampshire firmly and gladly in favor of every just pension provision, either general or particular as to particular cases; but my belief is that this bill will be injurious to pension claimants as well as to public interests, and therefore I shall vote against taking it up at all. It is impracticable in my judgment. The claimant will be eaten up with costs and expenses and arrangements with his lawyers, even if he succeeds. A jury, in my opinion, is not the proper and fit tribunal to try questions of that kind, because in order to do justice to all soldiers and pensioners you must have a perfectly impartial means of deciding them, and not go by neighborhood sympathy. That is due to all the soldiers and their widows.

In the next place, my belief is that if we pass this bill a great many more cases will be rejected at the Pension Office and by the Secretary of the Interior on appeal than are now, because the natural feeling will be "this claimant has the right to try this over again before a jury, and, while if it were left to us finally we should take the utmost care to scrutinize it and give him the benefit of every fair doubt, we will just reject it and let him try it."

Therefore, as it seems to me, with great respect to my friend from New Hampshire, it is a bill injurious to the interests of the people whose welfare I know he has so much at heart, and I hope I have also, and I shall vote against taking it up.

Mr. ALDRICH. As a member on the Committee on Pensions, I desire to say that if the bill is taken up I shall move that it be recommitted to that committee. I presume that it is reported by order of the committee, although three members of the committee, all the members who are now present except the gentleman who is acting as chairman, are opposed to the bill. If no minority report was made it is because the members of the committee did not know when the report was acted on, or that it had been made. I believe that a majority of the Committee on Pensions are opposed to the bill because they believe it would impose improper and unjust burdens on pension claimants, to say nothing about its other impracticable features.

Mr. BLAIR. I have to say, in reply to the suggestion of my friend who last spoke, that if he failed to know the action of the committee it was not the fault of the committee. The matter came up and was reported by order of the committee in due form.

So far as a motion to recommit is concerned, I have no objection to such a motion as that if the Senate shall see fit to make that disposition of the bill.

But, with reference to the suggestions of the Senator from Vermont, I can see nothing more in them than might be made to the right of jury trial in important interests between parties and the Government in any other case whatever. This is not designed to reach any excepting those who have preferred their claims before the Commissioner of Pensions and failed there, appealed to the Secretary of the Interior and failed there, and whose next step is naturally to come to Congress; and the question is whether their claims shall end finally or whether they shall obtain relief by the action of Congress.

We have had a great deal of difficulty the last session and for many sessions on account of the extent of this business. It is increasing rather than diminishing, and I do not know of any way that this work can be avoided. I can assure the Senators who have not had much of it to do—and I know of scarcely any of them who have not had occasion to have much of it done if I can judge from the applications which have been made to me personally to undertake it—that it is a matter of absolute public necessity, as well as needful for the vindication of private rights, that there be some legislation to reach this class of cases.

So far as the matter of expense is concerned, the Government pays no expense whatever of the pensioner in any case. If he can prosecute his claim here in Washington, a distance sometimes of three or four thousand miles from home, at his own expense, it seems that he might, with the assistance of all the evidence which this bill provides shall be transmitted to the local tribunals, be able to prosecute his claim there as well as here. The matter of expense certainly is much less for the man to try his case at home than here before Congress at Washington. If he has not such a case that he can get a verdict of a jury with the general popular sympathy with such claims, it is fair to conclude that he ought not to have his pension. If he can do so, then he acquires his right to the same judgment that is decisive of the right of a citizen in all other cases whatever.

I hope the Senate will take up the bill and proceed with its consideration.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to make a suggestion in regard to what has fallen from the Senator from Rhode Island. It seems to me that a bill of this importance ought not to be taken up if it is reported by a majority of a committee, when all the members of that committee but one are absent, because the absent members certainly would desire to be heard on so important a matter. I therefore suggest that we have unanimous consent to take up the bill and recommit it to the Committee on Pensions, and the Senator from New Hampshire can report it back at any time. That will dispose of it. I understand that to be satisfactory to my friend from Rhode Island.

Mr. BLAIR. I want to make some progress in some way; and so I will agree to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill may be considered at this time with a view to its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS. Taken up and recommitted to the Committee on Pensions, as I understand the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. That is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put it in that form. Is there objection to that suggestion? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate, and is now recommitted to the Committee on Pensions. The Calendar is now in order. The first case on the Calendar will be stated.

REAR-ADMIRAL CARTER.

The bill (S. 729) for the relief of Rear-Admiral Carter was announced as first in order, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It provides for the payment to Rear-Admiral Samuel P. Carter, of the Navy, of the pay and compensation of a rear-admiral on the retired-list from and after the date of his promotion on the retired-list to the rank of rear-admiral.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. BLACKBURN December 15, 1886:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of Rear-Admiral S. P. Carter, submit the following report:

This is an anomalous case. Soon after the beginning of the late war (in July, 1861), S. P. Carter, then a lieutenant in the United States Navy and a citizen of Tennessee, was detached by the Secretary of the Navy and ordered to report to Hon. Simon Cameron, then Secretary of War, for special duty, and was by him directed to proceed to East Tennessee and organize and drill volunteers to be called into the service of the United States.

In September following he was made acting brigadier-general by General George H. Thomas, and placed in command of the East Tennessee Brigade, which he (Lieutenant Carter) had organized.

On May 1, 1862, he was commissioned brigadier-general of United States Volunteers. He served during the war, being in command of brigades and divisions (infantry and cavalry), rising to the rank of major-general.

The records of the War and Navy Departments show that he performed his various duties with zeal and faithfulness. Early in 1866 he was honorably mustered out of the military service and returned to his duties in the Navy. In 1881 he was retired as commodore, and in the following year was nominated by the President, and confirmed by the Senate, as rear-admiral on the retired list. During his service in the Army he, of course, lost all opportunity of being specially advanced in the Navy, as happened to numbers of his fellow-officers.

Believing, as the committee do, that it was not the intention of either the President or Senate to confer a mere empty honor on this officer, whose whole record is so honorable, they, as an act of simple justice to him, recommend that this bill do pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to hear some oral explanation about that. I do not quite understand this case from this report. Is it possible that under the laws of the United States this gentleman held at the same time a commission in the naval service and a commission in the military service? If he did not and could not, as I should suppose he could not, he entered upon his career in the Army and went through with it and then was reappointed into the Navy.

It would seem that the object of this bill is to put him in a pecuniary condition that he might have been in if he had been specially advanced had he staid in the Navy. Well, special advances are only made for acts of extraordinary gallantry or from extraordinary public service of some kind which depended upon the fact that it was accomplished and done. Now to give this gentleman this large amount of money or small amount, whatever it may be, upon the score that he lost the chance of doing a very extraordinary thing in the Navy which would have been thought to merit and would have received if he had done it and had been thought to merit it an advance in the line of promotion, being put forward twenty numbers, seems to me to be going far beyond the notion of proximate causes, even on any ground upon which a special grant could be made to this gentleman. But perhaps it can be all explained. It certainly does not look very inviting to me just now.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the bill be informally passed over. The Senator reporting the bill [Mr. BLACKBURN] is not in his seat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not observe that. I ask that it be informally passed over.

Mr. HARRIS. So that it may be called up at any time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over informally.

THEOPHILUS FISK MILLS.

The bill (S. 2023) providing for the payment of $2,500 to Theophilus Fisk Mills for executing a model and design for an equestrian statue of the late General John A. Rawlins, was announced as next in order.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not had time to get certain papers which I want to look at before the consideration of that bill comes before the Senate. Let it be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the order.

B. B. CONNOR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.

It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and pay to B. B. Connor & Brother, now of Louisville, Ky., surviving partners of the late firm of B. B. Connor, Brother & Swan, of Nashville, Tenn., $4,420.32, net proceeds paid into the Treasury from sale of 170 tierces and 120 barrels of lard, shipped by them March 24, 1862, from Nashville to Louisville, without a permit, in ignorant violation of law and trade regulations, and seized, libeled, and sold by the United States, the same having been so shipped after due inquiry, without willful negligence or intent to violate any law or trade regulations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. There was a minority report in that case, and while I do not think it proper to resist the consideration of the question by the Senate, I think the bill ought not to pass. I hope the case will be stated in some way to the Senate, and I should like to state the objection.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. This bill was reported by the Committee on Claims some months since. The question raised is as to the propriety of paying the claimants in this bill for a certain lot of lard which they shipped without a Treasury permit from Nashville, Tenn., just prior to the capture of that city by the Federal forces in 1862. It appears from the papers in the case that the claimant was not aware that he violated any regulation in shipping this lard. It was shipped on a Government boat by the permission of a Government officer. It was afterward libeled and condemned in the Federal court at Louisville. On account of the difficulty of communicating with the Treasury Department at the time, there was a failure on the part of the claimant to get a remission from the Treasury Department.

There was also some question raised at one time as to the loyalty of the claimant. He subsequently came to Congress and was here ten, twelve, or fifteen years. An adverse report was made some years ago on the ground that the claimant was not very clearly shown to have been loyal. Subsequently additional proof was taken, and the loyalty of the claimant was shown, it seems to me, beyond any sort of question.

I regard it as a case of unquestioned hardship to the claimant. He was the owner in good faith of property in Nashville, Tenn., which he shipped on a Government boat, believing that he was complying with every regulation of the law, to Louisville, Ky., to be sold; the property was libeled, and on account of his failure to comply with a technical regulation of the Treasury Department at the time, the property was seized by the Government, and the proceeds went into the Treasury of the United States. It seems to me to be proper that his money should be restored, and I hope the Senate will concur in that view.

Mr. HOAR. The members of the committee differed upon the merits of this case. A majority of the committee thought that upon the facts it was a meritorious case. A minority thought it was not. I do not propose to go into the discussion of that question at this moment, but I should like to ask the attention of the Senate to one view of this matter.

The law unquestionably made the act which the claimant committed penal, and there is no question whatever that the claimant was properly convicted and fined, and he paid his fine. The law in those cases provided an ample remedy, to wit, that where it was claimed that there was a mere technical violation of the law the judge of the district court should report the facts to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury should hear the case and determine whether it was a fit case for a remission of the penalty. That was done. The judge of the court, Judge Ballard, reported the facts. There was a careful hearing by Mr. Secretary Chase, and he, afterward Chief-Justice of the United States, held that upon the facts it was not a proper case for remitting the penalty.

Now, more than twenty years afterwards, the claimant comes to Congress for a reconsideration of that decision of the Secretary of the Treasury. I submit that his decision ought to be final. It is not sound policy for Congress to reconsider a decision of a tribunal, a fit, proper, able, and competent tribunal, made twenty years ago on that subject. The remedy of an application to the Secretary is all that the Government ought to provide, and it is ample and sufficient. It is not a case of a claimant coming under some contract where there is no remedy in court and it is necessary to come to Congress; it is not a case of application to the bounty of the Government setting forth merit; but it is the case of a judicial hearing and trial by an able and competent officer and a decision on these same facts twenty years ago against the complainant. I think that should be final.

Mr. BECK. The bill passed the House of Representatives in the Forty-third Congress, again in the Forty-fourth Congress, and has been earnestly pressed all the time in the two Houses.

Mr. HOAR. These facts happened in 1862. There was no presenting of the matter till the Forty-third or Forty-fourth Congress. The substance of my point, however, is not the mere laches, that for sixteen or eighteen years there was no application. The substance of my point is that this is a case where we have provided an ample, proper, and sufficient remedy; and Congress ought not to sit here and retry these applications or appeals from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It seems to me that my distinguished and usually very fair friend from Massachusetts overlooks one point in this connection. In the report which I had the honor to make from the majority of the committee, on page 2, this language is used:

> There is nothing in the papers in the case to show when the claimant learned of this adverse ruling, but there is a letter, dated January 14, 1873, replying to a letter of January 6, relative to petition of B. B. Connor and Swan for remission of forfeiture, in which William A. Richardson, Acting Secretary of the Treasury, says that, the proceeds of the sale having been covered into the Treasury, he can not consider the case, and suggests an application to Congress.

That was in 1873, and in the very next year this man came to Congress and asked for relief. There was not a delay of sixteen or eighteen years; there was not a delay of one year. As soon as he understood that he was not to receive the relief he asked for at the Treasury of the United States he came to Congress, and has persistently asked for it ever since.

As the Senator from Kentucky said just now, it has been decided favorably by both branches of Congress. The bill passed here unanimously, I believe, in 1882.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to state that Mr. Chase's adverse decision was April 8, 1864, in which he says that he has made a careful review of the summary examination by the judge of the district court, and that he sees no sufficient reason to grant the prayer of the petitioner. Now the Senator says that it does not appear when the claimant found that out. Suppose it does not, does any body doubt that he knew it at the time when he appealed to the Secretary of the Treasury? The Secretary of the Treasury notified his neighbor, the district attorney. It does not appear that he did not know it at the time. To say that there is nothing in the papers to show that for the next twenty years he did not know it seems to me very strange.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. My recollection is that after the decision of Mr. Chase had been sent to the district judge, to meet the objections which had been made, additional evidence was taken, and the case was again presented to the Secretary of the Treasury, and on that final appeal no decision was had.

Mr. HOAR. In 1864 the decision was made.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The letter of Secretary Richardson was in 1873, and since that time each branch of Congress has repeatedly passed acts in favor of the claimant. The only fight that has been in this case up to this time in Congress has been on the new issue presented of want of loyalty on the part of the claimant. That question was not raised against him in any United States court; that question was not considered in the court at Louisville. Upon that side issue, which has been raised since the trial, the case has been delayed for years and years, and, as I believe, gross injustice has been done an honest man, who has a claim for which he ought to have been compensated by the United States Government years ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be engrossed for a third reading?

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when Mr. BERRY'S name was called). I am generally paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], but as he is absent I take the responsibility of transferring the pair and announcing the pair of my colleague [Mr. BERRY] with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MAXEY. My colleague [Mr. COKE] is absent, sick. He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

Mr. KENNA. My pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is transferred to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. I vote "yea."

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1333) for the relief of William H. Randle, of Nashville, Tenn.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 830) for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States;

A bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps;

A bill (H. R. 6489) granting a pension to Mrs. Barbara Fuchs.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. May I ask the indulgence of the Senate for a moment to have the bill which has just been received from the House of Representatives printed with the amendments of the House inserted in their proper place and then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, just received from the House of Representatives, be printed with the amendments of the House and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. That order will be made if there be no objection.

BRIDGE OVER CUMBERLAND RIVER.

Mr. CONGER. I desire at this time to report back from the Committee on Commerce a bill (S. 2958) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a free bridge by the county of Davidson, Tennessee, over the Cumberland River, with two amendments; and I am requested to ask for its consideration now, in order that the county may, within the time limited by the bill, make its arrangements for the construction of the bridge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of this bill, just reported, at this time. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, in section 3, line 35, after the word "Tennessee," to strike out "in which any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located;" so as to read:

And in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States of the middle district of Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the end of section 4, to insert:

And provided further, That unless the construction of said bridge shall be commenced within one year from the date of the passage of this act and completed within three years from the same date, all rights and privileges granted by thi act shall be forfeited and cease.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT LOUIS RIVER.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report favorably with amendment the bill (H. R. 9987) to construct a bridge in Minnesota, and I ask for its present consideration. It is a House bill that was passed there at the last session. We have passed a bill of the same character heretofore.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There are some formal amendments reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 3, line 1, after the word "that," to strike out the word "if;" and after the words "shall be," at the end of line 1, to strike out "constructed as a draw-bridge and shall be;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That any bridge built under this act shall be constructed as a pivot draw-bridge, with a draw over the main channel of the river at an accessible and the best navigable point, and with spans of not less than 110 feet in length in the clear on each side of the central or pivot pier of the draw.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 5, before the word "charge," to insert the word "greater;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That any bridge and accessory works, when built and constructed under this act and according to the terms and limitations thereof, shall be a lawful structure; and said bridge shall be recognized and known as a post-route, upon which also no greater charge shall be made for the transmission over the same of the mails, the troops, and munitions of war of the United Saates than the rate per mile paid for the transportation over the railroads or public highways leading to said bridge, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to; and, by unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

BRIDGE AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed at this time to the consideration of Order of Business 1563, being the bill (S. 2516).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 2516) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment was in section 3, line 2, after the word "spans," to insert the word "the;" after the word "two," in the same line, to insert "middle or channel;" in line 3, before the word "hundred," to strike out "five" and insert "six;" in the same line, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and fifty;" after the word "than," in line 4, to strike out "three hundred" and insert "four hundred and fifty;" in line 5, after the word "feet," to insert "in length;" in line 6, after the word "least," to strike out "sixty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" and in line 22, after the words "United States," to strike out "in which" and insert "within whose jurisdiction;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That said bridge shall be made with unbroken and continuous spans. The two middle or channel spans thereof shall not be less than 600 feet in length in the clear, and no span shall be less than 450 feet in length in the clear. The lowest part of the superstructure of said bridge shall be at least 75 feet above extreme high-water mark, as understood at the point of location, and the bridge shall be at right angles to and its piers parallel with the current of the river. No bridge shall be erected or maintained under the authority of this act which shall at any time substantially or materially obstruct the free navigation of said river; and if any bridge erected under such authority shall, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, obstruct such navigation, he is hereby authorized to cause such change or alteration of said bridge to be made as will effectually obviate such obstruction; and all such alterations shall be made and all such obstructions be removed at the expense of the owner or owners of said bridge; and in case of any litigation arising from any obstruction or alleged obstruction to the free navigation of said river, caused or alleged to be caused by said bridge, the case may be brought in the circuit court of the United States within whose jurisdiction any portion of said obstruction or bridge may be located: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to repeal or modify any of the provisions of law now existing in reference to the protection of the navigation of rivers, or to exempt this bridge from the operation of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was in section 7, line 16, after "United States," to strike out "in which" and insert "within whose jurisdiction;" in line 18, after the word "of," to strike out "the cost thereof" and insert "the amount so expended by the Government and all costs of such proceedings;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War, on satisfactory proof that a necessity exists therefor, to require the company or persons owning said bridge to cause such aids to the passage of said bridge to be constructed, placed, and maintained, at their own cost and expense, in the form of booms, dikes, piers, or other suitable and proper structures for the guiding of rafts, steamboats and other water-craft safely through the passage-way, as shall be specified in his order in that behalf; and on failure of the company or persons aforesaid to make and establish such additional structures within a reasonable time, the said Secretary shall proceed to cause the same to be built or made at the expense of the United States, and shall refer the matter without delay to the Attorney-General of the United States, whose duty it shall be to institute, in the name of the United States, proceedings in any circuit court of the United States within whose jurisdiction such bridge or any part thereof is located, for the recovery of the amount so expended by the Government and all costs of such proceedings; and all moneys accruing from such proceedings shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, after section 7, to add:

SEC. 8. That if the construction of the bridge hereby authorized shall not be commenced within one year from the time this act takes effect, and be completed within four years after the same date, then this act shall be void, and all rights hereby conferred shall cease and determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, after section 8, to add:

SEC. 9. That an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.," approved February 26, 1885, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT REPEALED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business of yesterday is now before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to the appointment of civil officers.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. CALL. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read again.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw the call. I understand it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORMAN (when Mr. MCPHERSON'S name was called). The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] is paired with his colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. Mr. MCPHERSON would vote "yea" if present.

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is necessarily absent. He was paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE], but that pair has been transferred to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR]. My colleague is now paired with the Senator from Nevada. If he were present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MAXEY. My colleague [Mr. COKE] is confined to his room by sickness. If present, he would vote "yea." He is paired with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. I observe that he is not in his seat. I voted inadvertently. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COLQUITT. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. BROWN], who is absent on account of sickness, is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on this bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] on party questions. This not seeming to be a party question, I shall vote "yea," if there be no objection.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] has been called from the city for a short time. He is paired generally with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. Both Senators are now absent from the Chamber. I am not prepared to say how the Senator from West Virginia would vote. My colleague would vote "nay," as I am informed, if present.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask if there is not some Senator on the other side paired with my colleague [Mr. JONES, of Florida], who is absent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the names will proceed.

Mr. RANSOM. I have just heard from some friends of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] that I am regarded as paired with him on this question. I am ready to withdraw my vote. I voted in the affirmative. However, with the consent of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], I will transfer the pair to the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CULLOM. I have no objection to that if the Senator from Florida is not paired with any one else.

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 22; as follows:

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the next special order, which is the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] is better advised than I am; but the evening before last the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] came to me and requested that I should not press the passage of the bill to-day, because he was compelled to be absent and desired to speak. I said I would not, but that he had better see the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I should not myself call the bill up in the absence of the Senator from New York, who desires to address the Senate upon it. Is it now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is now before the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to retain it before the Senate for a moment so far as to say that, while I stand upon record as having reported the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary, my views are represented by the amendment which I myself offered in the Senate, which is in print, and at the proper time before taking the question on the substitute reported by the Judiciary Committee I shall move to perfect the bill of the Senator from Kentucky by the amendment which I offered, which confines its provisions to the acting as attorneys for certain railroads, and confines it to what I deem the constitutional limit of the authority of legislation and to the cases where there may be some danger of abuse.

With that explanation I leave the subject for the present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, of course it is proper and fair to the Senator from New York who desires to be heard on this bill and is necessarily absent that it should go over, and I have not the least objection to its going over, retaining its place as a special order; but I think it right, now that the matter is before the Senate, to say to my friend from Kentucky that in his observations the other day about the Judiciary Committee and its chairman, he, without intending it, did me a personal injustice in respect to any amendment to his bill.

My desire in the committee was (if I may state it, and perhaps I may without objection) that the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky should be taken just as he wished it to be taken, as it stood, and I thought the bill ought to be reported adversely without undertaking to put it on a footing where it might be constitutional and proper; and so he did me an injustice, without in the least knowing it or meaning it, I am sure, in saying that the chairman of the committee had been a party to or concerned in any way in putting the bill into its present shape.

That is all I wish to say at this time, and I ask now that this bill may go over, retaining its place as a special order until the Senator from New York can get back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, in the chair). If there be no objection, that will be taken as the order of the Senate. The next special order will be stated.

MILITARY SITE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

The joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill., was announced as the next special order on the Calendar.

Mr. CULLOM. That is a measure introduced by my colleague [Mr. LOGAN] who has been detained at home by severe illness for the last few days, and I ask that it go over retaining its place as a special order, as I desire that my colleague shall be here when it is considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order of the Senate if there be no objection. The next special order will be stated.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD GRANT.

The bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes, was announced as the next special order on the Calendar.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Was not that fixed for another day?

Mr. INGALLS. On whose motion was that assigned as a special order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk informs the Chair that this was made a special order for next Monday. There was a mistake in announcing it now. The regular special order next in order will now be announced.

STEAMBOAT INSPECTOR AT DULUTH.

Mr. MCMILLAN. As there seems to be no order of business before the Senate just now, I ask that the Senate take up the bill (H. R. 3504). It is a bill relating to a locality in my State that will not require any discussion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the subject?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Authorizing the appointment of a local inspector of hulls and boilers at Duluth.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves to take up the bill, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 3504) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, relating to inspectors of hulls and boilers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read at large for information.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 4414 of the Revised Statutes is hereby amended by inserting, after the word "Savannah," in the second line of the sixth paragraph of said section, the words "Duluth, Minnesota."

Mr. MCMILLAN. This is a House bill which has been reported favorably by the Treasury Department and also by the Senate Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection to its consideration or passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad to hear the Senator who reported that bill to state the changes made by it in the law.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It merely creates an inspector of hulls and boilers at Duluth, Minn., on Lake Superior.

The bill was passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 2 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 20, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ANNEX TO ARMY MEDICAL MUSEUM.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. GALLINGER, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

ROSANNA FLAHIFF.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following request:

Mr. BYNUM asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 571, for the relief of Rosanna Flahiff, and that the same be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

AMENDMENT OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10240) to amend section 3342 of the Revised Statutes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

AMERICAN LOSSES, ETC., IN CANADIAN FISHERIES.

Mr. BELMONT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10241) for the appointment of a commission to investigate concerning losses and injuries inflicted since December 31, 1885, upon United States citizens engaged in the British North American fisheries; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine corps;

A bill (S. 830) for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States;

A bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap.

E. B. DAWSON.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 5326) for the relief of E. B. Dawson, and that it be now passed with the amendment reported by the Committee on Claims. The sole object of the bill is to refund to a postmaster $66.52, which was stolen by burglars who broke open his safe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to E. B. Dawson the sum of $166.52, as relief for damages sustained by him through the breaking open of his safe and stealing therefrom the Government money, in April, 1883, while said Dawson was postmaster at Boonton, N. J.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Claims to strike out in line 6 the words "one hundred and," so as to make the appropriation $66.52, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN IOWA.

Mr. FREDERICK. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 5990) amending the act of July 20, 1882, dividing the State of Iowa into two judicial districts, be taken from the House Calendar for present consideration.

The bill was read.

Mr. MURPHY. I object to the consideration of that bill; and I can furnish a reason for the faith that is in me, if there is any occasion to state it.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

SURVEYORS GENERAL.

Mr. CANNON, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas it is proposed by the Department of the Interior, in the estimates submitted to Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, to consolidate certain of the offices of the surveyors-general: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire fully into said recommendation; and that it shall be in order to propose reduction, by abolition or consolidation of any of the offices of the surveyors-general, on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM H. RANDLE.

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR. I move, by unanimous consent, that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (S. 1333) for the relief of William H. Randle, of Nashville. Tenn., and the same beput on its passage at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to William H. Randle the sum of $400, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, on account of the loss of a registered letter containing $400, by reason of a defective postal car, which sum was paid by said Randle immediately after the loss of said letter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. NEAL) was read, as follows:

The committee find that this bill is identical with the House bill 5111, for the relief of William H. Randle, and heretofore reported from this committee (Report No. 2732) and now on the Calendar. The committee therefore report this bill back to the House with a favorable recommendation, and that it be considered in connection with the House bill on the same subject.

Mr. OATES. Does this relate to the loss of a registered letter which was afterward recovered?

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR. No; it was not found, but after the loss was ascertained this postmaster paid the money out of his own pocket.

Mr. HOLMAN. The money never was paid by the Post-Office Department?

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR. It was not. The loss occurred by reason of a defective car. The bill has passed the Senate and is reported favorably by the committee of this House.

Mr. OATES. Was the report unanimous?

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR. It was.

There was no objection; and the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 5111) will be laid upon the table, if there be no objection.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. NEGLEY. I will take the floor, and yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANDERSON] to call up a bill, which he will indicate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, took the floor and sent up a bill to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. CANNON. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. That amounts to an objection.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, coming over from yesterday with the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and with the previous question ordered on the amendments and the engrossment and third reading of the bill. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. There are sixteen amendments in all. Seven relate merely to change of phraseology, about which there is no controversy. Nine concern the appropriation of money, one relating to the Baltimore public building, the second to the Rochester public building, and the third to the light-house supply steamer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will be compelled to suspend business unless order is preserved. The Sergeant-at-Arms will please request gentlemen to suspend conversation. As the Chair understands, the amendments on which a separate vote is asked are, first, the amendment relating to the Baltimore building; second, the Rochester building, and third, the light-house supply steamer.

Mr. RANDALL. The vote can be taken on the other amendments in gross.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the amendments are concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The vote will now be taken on the following amendments on which a separate vote has been requested.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$100,000" and insert "$287,000; so the paragraph will then read: For post-office and court-house at Baltimore, Md.: For continuation of building, $287,000.

Mr. RANDALL demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 61.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was asked was, in lines 47 and 48, to strike out "continuation of" and insert "completion;" and strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred," so it will read:

For court-house and post-office at Rochester, N. Y.: For completion of building under present limit, $100,000.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 107, noes 97.

Mr. RANDALL. I suppose I can save time by having the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 144, nays 110, not voting 67; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. NEECE with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. On that I demand the previous question.

Mr. ATKINSON. I desire to move to recommit with instructions——

Mr. NEGLEY. Before that I wish to ask unanimous consent that the concluding portion of the proviso, in relation to the soldiers' homes, be stricken out. As stated in the bill it is a reflection upon the Board of Managers, which I presume is not intended by the committee. I would be pleased if the chairman of the committee would make a statement as to why this should not be stricken from the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no authority from the committee to act in the direction suggested.

Mr. REAGAN. Let the proviso be read, to which reference is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no person shall be eligible to or hold any position or employment in the government or management of any home who is interested in or connected with, directly or indirectly, any railroad, brewery, mercantile house, manufactory, dram-shop, or distillery in the State where such home is located.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LE FEVRE. I object.

Mr. NEGLEY. While I have the floor I beg the gentleman's attention to one portion of this paragraph——

Mr. RANDALL. I ask for the regular order.

Mr. ATKINSON. I wish, Mr. Speaker, now to submit a motion to recommit with instructions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Before that, I ask unanimous consent to submit an amendment to this paragraph, as follows:

In lines 1742 and 1743 strike out the words "railroad," "mercantile house," "manufactory," and at the end of the paragraph insert the words:

Nor shall it be lawful for any person holding any such position or employment to be interested directly or indirectly in any contract for or sale of any article to be used at or in any such home, nor in any railroad carrying passengers or freight to any home.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the paragraph be read as it will be if the amendment is agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided further, That no person shall be eligible to or hold any position or employment in the government or management of any home who is interested in or connected with, directly or indirectly, any brewery, dram-shop, or distillery in the State where such home is located; nor shall it be lawful for any person holding any such position or employment to be interested directly or indirectly in any contract for or sale of any article to be used at or in any such home, nor in any railroad carrying passengers or freight to any home.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to ask whether this clause is now subject to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order at all at this stage, except by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] has asked unanimous consent to make the amendment which has been read.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should perhaps put my inquiry in a different form. I desire to ask whether the original subject-matter in this clause of the bill is subject to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. Not now.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand that the amendment I have suggested can only go in by unanimous consent. And if gentlemen desire that the bill shall be passed in its present unfortunate condition rather than be improved that much, they can object.

Mr. DINGLEY. I call the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to the importance of dividing the amendment which he has presented. Let the question first be on striking out certain words, and then separately on the words he proposes to add.

The SPEAKER. There can be no vote taken at all on this proposition, either in whole or in part. Whatever is done with regard to it must be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DINGLEY. I suggest that there would be no objection to the second part of the amendment.

Mr. LE FEVRE. I will object to any further amendment except that which has been offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

The SPEAKER. That is the matter that is now before the House.

Mr. NEGLEY. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to state explicitly his reasons for casting this slur upon the board of management.

Mr. RANDALL. The committee meant no slur on the board of management.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is no slur cast on anybody.

Mr. NEGLEY. Then what is the occasion for it?

Mr. LE FEVRE. There might be such an abuse.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the House will not pass the bill in its present shape.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think it is due to the House——

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think it will be demanded against my suggestion that this matter be explained by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, so that gentlemen will understand whether this is a direct imputation on some gentlemen who are now members of the Board of Managers, or who occupy prominent positions in connection with the homes.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no imputation cast on any one. There is an effort to correct what is alleged to be an abuse.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ATKINSON].

Mr. ATKINSON. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to amend by striking out the words "fifteen thousand dollars," in lines 1727 and 1728, and inserting instead the words "two million dollars."

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. ATKINSON, the the Speaker stated the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. ATKINSON. I call for a division.

Mr. BURROWS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 124, nays 138, not voting 59; as follows:

So the motion was not agreed to.

On motion of Mr. ATKINSON, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. NEGLEY, on this vote.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. BINGHAM, for this day.

Mr. NELSON with Mr. NEECE, on this vote.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, in connection with my pair I desire to have it recorded that I would have voted "aye." How Mr. BLOUNT would have voted I do not know.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion to recommit was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the language of one paragraph of the bill. The modification is made at the suggestion of the Second Auditor, and is in relation to the auditing of the accounts. It will make no material difference, but the Auditor thinks the phraseology he suggests is better than that contained in the bill.

The proposed modification was read, as follows:

In line 1735, after the word "managers," insert the words "shall be made subject to the general laws governing the disbursement of public moneys, and," so that, if amended, the provision will read: "But all of the expenditures of the said home, including the expenses of the Board of Managers, shall be made subject to the general laws governing the disbursement of public moneys, and shall be audited," &c.

There being no objection, the modification was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

M'MINNVILLE AND MANCHESTER RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, a day set apart, under the rules, for the consideration of private bills, the first business in order is the bill (H. R. 5194) directing the Quartermaster-General to settle with the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, and for other purposes. This bill was reported from the Committee of the Whole without recommendation, and the question is upon the demand for the previous question upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BURROWS. What is the bill, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the bill had better be reported at length.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Quartermaster-General of the United States Army be authorized, and he is hereby directed, to settle and adjust the claims of the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company against the United States for iron, chairs, spikes, and switches, upon the basis of estimates furnished by A. Hibard, engineer of repairs, under orders of Major-General George H. Thomas, commanding department, dated July 18, 1865, taken and used by the United States army, the items thereof being for railroad-iron, $231,880; for chairs, $7,200; for spikes, $6,300; and for switches, $1,500; making a total of $246,880, which sum shall be allowed said company in making such settlement.

SEC. 2. That from the value of the property thus taken and used, which is hereby declared to be said sum of $246,880, the Quartermaster-General will deduct the amount now due and owing to the United States by the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, which is evidenced by a judgment in the United States circuit court at Nashville, Tenn.

SEC. 3. That any balance thus found to be due said McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company shall be paid to the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, or their successors, the Nashville, Chattanooga and Saint Louis Railway, in the bonds or indebtedness of the latter company held by the United States for material purchased of the United States since the close of the war, and said judgment shall thereupon be satisfied of record.

The question was taken on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time, and there were—ayes 81, noes 34.

Mr. BRUMM. No quorum.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted, and pending that, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] calls for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BRUMM. And I will withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. Then the ayes have it; the previous question is ordered, and the question now is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. GROSVENOR. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Speaker, I move to recommit this bill to the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is operating now. The gentleman's motion would be in order even though the previous question had been ordered on the passage of the bill, but it is not in order at this stage.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I now move the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The matter has not yet reached that stage. The question now is upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. Upon that question the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays upon that question, asking to be recognized to renew the demand upon the question of the recommittal of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has that right.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Now, Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GEDDES. And I now move to recommit the bill to the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 101, nays 131, not voting 89; as follows:

So the motion of Mr. GEDDES to recommit the bill was not agreed to.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. JACKSON with Mr. CABELL, on this vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. LONG, on this bill.

Mr. STEPHENSON with Mr. VAN EATON, on this vote.

Mr. STRAIT with Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, on this vote.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. MCCOMAS, on this vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RICHARDS. I now ask the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDEN, Mr. GILFILLAN, and others called for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, I hope we shall order the yeas and nays. There are other war claims of just this sort amounting to a hundred million of dollars that will follow one after another if this bill be passed. They lie right along the lines of the Southern railroads.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 45, noes 100.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 116, not voting 88; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. PAYNE, on this vote.

Mr. HERBERT with Mr. HARMER, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. LONG, on this vote.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. RICHARDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon laying on the table the motion to reconsider.

Mr. PAYSON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 45, noes 82.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Can I withdraw the motion to reconsider, pending the demand for the yeas and nays on the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The question now pending before the House is not the motion to reconsider, but the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; and on that motion the House has ordered the yeas and nays, so that the motion to reconsider can not be withdrawn.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I think, owing to the confusion in the Hall, there is misunderstanding as to the pending question. Is not the pending motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. It is, as the Chair has already stated it. The vote will now be taken on the motion made by the gentleman from Illinois to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let me ask a parliamentary question. If the motion to lay on the table is defeated, then the next vote will be on the motion to reconsider?

The SPEAKER. It will.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 117, nays 116, not voting 88; as follows:

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

During the roll-call, Mr. SOWDEN asked, by unanimous consent, to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. MCMILLIN objected.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, for the rest of the day.

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. TOWNSHEND with Mr. LONG, on this vote.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. KELLEY, on this vote.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. PAYSON. I think it is proper the House should now adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill has been passed.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, and the proper thing is to adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 85.

So the House refused to adjourn.

MRS. JANE R. M'QUAIDE.

Mr. CONGER. I call up for present consideration the bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide.

The SPEAKER. This bill comes over with the previous question ordered on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide, mother of F. G. McQuaide, deceased, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. MATSON. I ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate, and can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. MATSON. I supposed fifteen minutes were allowed on each side.

The SPEAKER. That is so unless there was debate before the previous question was ordered.

Mr. CONGER. There was debate.

Mr. MATSON. I ask in the interest of the bill that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

This bill is for the relief of a dependent mother; the merit of the case is fully set forth in the Senate report appended hereto.

Your committee therefore adopt the same as their own, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The petitioner is the mother of F. G. McQuaide, deceased, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. The application was rejected on the ground that the claimant was not dependent on the soldier at the date of his death.

The evidence shows that the father and mother were living on a farm at the time of the son's enlistment, prior to which he had contributed by his labor to their support; that he sent them a portion of his monthly pay; that he died shortly after his discharge from disease contracted in the service; that his father owned a farm, but it was heavily mortgaged, and that the dockets contained innumerable judgments against him; that he died poor, leaving his widow in destitute circumstances; that she is still very needy.

The committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. CONGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 3504) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the inspection of hulls and boilers; and

A bill (H. R. 5878) to amend an act entitled "An act to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883.

It further announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe.

Also, that the Senate requested a committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers for the postal service, and had appointed Messrs. CONGER, CHACE, and MAXEY as conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested, namely:

A bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar;

A bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointments of civil officers;

A bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.; and

A bill (S. 2901) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey the United States custom-house and post-office property at Eastport, in the State of Maine, lately destroyed by fire, the proceeds thereof to be invested in the purchase of a new site for and to provide for the erection of a public building at that place.

GENERAL BENJAMIN F. KELLY.

The SPEAKER. The next pension bill coming over is the bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to General Benjamin F. Kelly; upon which the previous question has been ordered upon its passage.

The Clerk will again report the bill.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. MATSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to ask whether that bill was debated?

The SPEAKER. It was; having been considered by the House on 23d of July last, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent to have the report read.

There being no objection, the report was again read at length.

The question being taken on the passage of the bill, the House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 52.

Mr. MATSON. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. MATSON and Mr. GOFF were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 128, noes 48.

Mr. MATSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WISE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MATSON. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that motion, but move to take a recess until half-past seven, in pursuance of the special order.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the special order?

Mr. MATSON. The regular Friday evening session for pension bills.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let us dispose of this bill before we do anything else.

Mr. WISE. I insist on the motion.

Mr. BRAGG. Pending that, I ask the gentleman to allow me to submit a report. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; the House divided, and there were—ayes 49, noes 79.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and there were—yeas 150, nays 84, not voting 87; as follows:

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRIDAY EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that the order for Friday evening sessions shall be changed so that the House shall meet after the recess at 7.30 p. m. instead of 8 p. m. The original order was for a meeting at 7.30 p. m., and as the days lengthened the hour was changed as a matter of convenience to 8 o'clock. Now, as the days are shortened, I ask that the recess shall be from 5 until half past 7.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that there be included in the order of business for the Friday evening sessions what was applied for by a resolution of the Committee on Military Affairs at the last session, so that private bills reported by the Military Committee, except such bills as relate to the retiring or restoring of officers, shall be in order for consideration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]?

Mr. LIBBEY. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House take a recess until half past 7 o'clock for business under the order of the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment to report a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MATSON. I yield to the gentleman.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRAGG, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; which was read twice, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GRAFTON MONROE.

Mr. SHAW. I rise to present a privileged report, the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to section 1, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its amendment to section 2, and agree to the same.

FRANK T. SHAW,
JONAS G. HOWARD,
J. McKENNA,
Managers on the part of the House.

S. B. MAXEY,
O. D. CONGER,
JONATHAN CHACE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement by the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe, submit the following statement:

The Senate amendment to section 1, at the end of said section, adds the following words: "Provided that it shall be proven to the satisfaction of said auditor that said postage stamps and money-order funds were lost, as aforesaid, without fault or negligence on the part of said postmaster."

The recession of the Senate from its amendment to section 2 leaves said section as it heretofore passed the House.

FRANK T. SHAW,
JONAS G. HOWARD,
J. McKENNA,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. SHAW moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RICE. There is one other pension bill on which the previous question has been ordered. I hope that that will now be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. There is a motion to take a recess pending.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] to yield to me for a moment that I may offer a resolution to which I think there will be no objection.

Mr. MATSON. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

HARBOR AT VAN BUREN, ARK.

Mr. ROGERS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish to the House of Representatives any information showing what changes, if any, have recently occurred in the harbor at Van Buren, Ark., affecting navigation and facilities for commerce, and also plans and estimates, if any be necessary, to restore the harbor and improve the navigation and commercial facilities at that point.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] that the House take a recess until 7.30 p. m.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 59, noes 69.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 75, noes 93.

Mr. BRAGG. I call for tellers.

Mr. BRUMM. To save time, I call for the yeas and nays; but if the call for tellers shall be withdrawn I will withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 23—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Tellers were not ordered, only 7 members voting therefor—not one-fifth of a quorum.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the House take a recess until half-past 7 o'clock, for business under the order of the House.

The motion was agreed to; there being—ayes 113, noes 10.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 7.30 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 7.30 p. m.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the transaction of business under the special order, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on each Friday the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 7.30 p. m., at which evening sessions private bills granting pensions reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions and the Committee on Pensions, and bills reported from the Judiciary Committee to remove political disabilities, only, shall be considered.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that members present be allowed to call up such bills as they desire.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

SECTIONS 4756 AND 4757 REVISED STATUTES.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. MATSON. I ask for the reading of the bill, with the view of making a point of order against it. I suppose it to be a general bill.

The bill was read.

Mr. MATSON. I make the point of order that that is not a private bill, and therefore is not in order at this evening session.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The bill is evidently on the wrong Calendar. It is not a private bill. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] that in the House the reference of the bill ought to be changed.

JACOB S. BIDDLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

Mr. SWOPE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who introduced that bill [Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania] not being present, I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that bills be called in their regular order on the Calendar, and that when a bill is called, if no member rises and asks its consideration, it shall be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

FRIDOLINE GLASTETTER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask the consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Fridoline Glastetter, late a private in Company F, Second Illinois Light Artillery Volunteers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us hear the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Your committee, after a full consideration of this case, adopt the following Senate report:

"The petitioner was a private in Second Illinois Light Artillery. He enlisted December 12, 1861, and was honorably discharged December 14, 1864. He applied for a pension for rheumatism, alleged to have been contracted by breaking through the ice on the Mississippi River on the 9th of January, 1864, and subsequent exposure in wet clothing, while on his return from furlough. The Commissioner of Pensions does not deny the existence of the disability, but says it was not contracted in the line of duty. Appeal was made to the Secretary of the Interior, who sustains the rejection by the Commissioner. The records verify his service, and show that he was granted a furlough from November 21, 1863, to December 20, 1863, to enable him to provide a home for his children, his wife having died about that time. It is charged that he overstaid his time, and that it was after the expiration of his furlough that the accident occurred.

The Adjutant-General informs the Pension Office that there is no charge against him for desertion or absence without leave, and the committee are of opinion that a severe construction should not be put upon his delinquency, in view of the fact that he was absent on the sad errand of providing a home and protection for his motherless children, and the necessity for his prolonged absence may have been imperative. At all events, there is no evidence that it was criminal; and inasmuch as it is the principal ground of his rejection, the committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GRACE F. EDES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2144) granting a pension to Grace F. Edes, reported adversely.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Grace F. Edes, widow of Benjamin Long Edes, late a lieutenant-commander in the United States Navy, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MORRILL. I observe that that bill is reported adversely, and I would like to hear the report.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it lie upon the table.

Mr. HATCH (Mr. MCMILLIN in the chair). Mr. Chairman, I see that the report in this case was made by Mr. LOVERING, one of the members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The bill has been brought to my attention once or twice by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL, and others interested in it, who are not present this evening. I know that both Mr. LOVERING and Mr. RANDALL desire to make statements to the Committee or the House in regard to it.

Mr. TAULBEE. There is an adverse report upon the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I know; but the evidence was not complete at the time that report was made. The committee will remember that the husband of this lady while in the torpedo service lost his life by the premature explosion of a submarine torpedo, I think in the harbor of Newport. He was down in the water at the time in the performance of his duties, and by the premature discharge of a torpedo he was killed. It is one of the saddest cases that have occurred in the Navy for many years, and I hope that gentlemen who have objected to the consideration of the bill will withdraw their objections. It is a Senate bill, and simply proposes to increase this lady's pension to $50 a month.

Mr. LOUTTIT. What pension is she drawing now?

Mr. HATCH. I am not advised upon that point; I am not familiar with the details, but, knowing some of the facts from the newspaper reports at the time the accident occurred, and having had the case brought to my attention here, I think it is a very proper case for favorable action; and I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. LOUTTIT. I think her present pension is $30 a month.

Mr. TAULBEE. After the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that when the committee reported adversely on this bill, the proof which has since been obtained was not before the committee, I would have no objection to a proposition that the bill be referred back to the committee for further consideration or be laid aside informally. But I shall object to this class of bills being reported to the House with a recommendation that they do pass. Bills of this kind, I think, ought not to pass.

Mr. HATCH. Then I will ask that the bill be laid aside informally until the gentlemen who have it in charge can be present and make a statement.

Mr. TAULBEE. I shall not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCMILLIN). If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside informally, not to lose its place on the Calendar.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

DANIEL SCHULTHEIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. MATSON) was the bill (H. R. 7911) granting a pension to Daniel Schultheis.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel Schultheis, late of Company H, Forty-ninth Illinois Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WAITIE F. HARRIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. SPOONER) was the bill (H. R. 8258) granting a pension to Waitie F. Harris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Waitie F. Harris, a volunteer nurse in the late war, and to pay her the sum of $25 per month from and after the passage of this act.

An amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out "twenty-five" before the word "dollars," in line 6, and insert "twelve," so as to make the pension $12 a month, was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL E. TRACY.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. PIRCE) was the bill (S. 1660) granting a pension to Samuel E. Tracy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel E. Tracy, late of the United States Navy.

Mr. TAULBEE. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1660) granting a pension to Samuel E. Tracy, respectfully report that they have had the same under consideration, and, adopting the Senate report as their own, report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

[Senate Report No. 747, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The claimant, Samuel Edward Tracy, was a private in the First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, from May 2, 1861, to August 2. He afterward enlisted in the Navy, and served on the United States steamer Anacostia from August 30, 1861, to August 29, 1864. The claimant is suffering from total disability resulting from a wound in his head, which he received some time in the summer of 1863, while on duty, as he claims. The fact is established by abundant testimony that Tracy was a sound and healthy man at the time of his enlistment in the Navy. His family were first advised of his wound in the head in the summer of 1863, when he was home on a furlough, but the wound does not seem to have seriously troubled him until some time after his discharge, when it began to be very painful.

Since the time of filing the original application for a pension, in July, 1863, the claimant's mental and physical condition have become such that he has not been able to give any definite and intelligent statement of the circumstances under which he was wounded or of his treatment in hospital immediately following the wound. During this time his sufferings have at times produced violent insanity, the paroxysms of pain have been of the most intense character, and are fast reducing him to a state of mental imbecility. The case has been examined by several special examiners, who were impressed with the fact that the case was a meritorious one; but from the facts above stated and the further fact that the principal officers of the steamer at the time can not be found render it impossible to obtain the necessary testimony to establish the origin of the disability in the line of duty. These examiners have, however, suggested to the Pension Office that the claimant should receive relief by special act of Congress. The examining surgeon, member of the board at Providence, a man of skill and reputation, reports his belief that the disability, which is total, was incurred in the service. The claimant belongs to a family of the highest respectability, and two of his brothers served in the Army during the war.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to ask if any gentleman present can state whether or not the application in this case has been rejected at the Pension Office. [A pause.] I think it a bad precedent to pass bills granting pensions when the remedies afforded by existing law have not been exhausted.

Mr. PIRCE. I assume from the language used in this report that the application of this case has been rejected at the Pension Office. The bill has received the favorable action of the Senate, and has been reported unanimously by the committee of this House. I suppose it is all right, and that the applicant's name could not be placed on the rolls by the Pension Office; otherwise this proposition would not have been presented here.

Mr. LOUTTIT. I observe that this report was prepared by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING]; and I believe it is a rule with him not to report any of these bills favorably unless the applications have been rejected at the Pension Office.

Mr. TAULBEE. After the statement of the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUTTIT], my colleague on the committee, to the effect that it is the custom of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING], who made the report in this case, not to state in his reports the fact that the cases have been rejected by the Pension Office, I shall offer no further opposition to this bill. I think the language implies, at least, that there has been unfavorable action at the Pension Office.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY M'MAHON.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. SPOONER) was the bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Mary McMahon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary McMahon, widow of Peter McMahon, late a private in Company E, Second Regiment Rhode Island Infantry, and pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 2372, having had the same under consideration, adopt the Senate report, and report back the bill and recommend its passage.

That Peter McMahon, the husband of Mary McMahon, enlisted as a private in Company E, Second Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, August 1, 1861. That on the 5th of June, 1864, at the battle of Cold Harbor, Va., he was wounded in the shoulder by a musket ball, and was discharged for disability on the 17th of October, 1864. He was pensioned August 4, 1865, for the disability resulting from his wound. His pension was increased from time to time, until at the time of his death, January 29, 1879, he was receiving $18 per month. The application of the widow was rejected by the Pension Office because the medical reviewer did not feel satisfied that the disease from which he died was traceable to the wound in the left shoulder. The following affidavit of Dr. A. C. Dedrick, a leading physician of Warwick, R. I., and late surgeon in the Army, who attended him at the time of his death, seems to clearly establish the fact that the fatal disease resulted from the injury for which the soldier was pensioned, and which wound was received in the battle of Cold Harbor, as stated above:

"I, A. C. Dedrick, a regular practicing physician, residing and practicing in the town of Warwick, State of Rhode Island, upon oath depose and say that I was called upon to treat professionally, in his last sickness, Peter McMahon, late of Company E, Second Rhode Island Volunteers, and found him suffering from double pleuritis, with slight pneumonitis in the right lung, which disease, by increasing the duties of the left lung, in all probability caused the reopening of an old injury to the left lung, received, in my opinion, at the time that he received the gunshot wound in the shoulder, producing pneumo-hydrothorax in the left side, of which complication he died on or about January 29, 1879. At my first examination of the patient I observed a large cicatrix over the left breast, which he informed me was the site of a large abscess which had formed there, and had opened and discharged large quantities of pus and several pieces of dead bone while he was under treatment in general hospital for wound in shoulder, which abscess, the surgeon in charge informed him, was caused by the passage of some foreign substance through the lung when he was wounded, and lodging in the wall of the chest anteriorly. As the inflammatory action was not at any time severe, it is my opinion that his death resulted from the original wound in the left shoulder, affecting the left lung in manner and form as above set forth.

"I have no interest in the claim of widow McMahon for pension whatever.

"ALBERT C. DEDRICK, M. D.,
"Late Assistant Surgeon, Fourth Rhode Island Volunteers.

"STATE OF RHODE ISLAND, County of Providence, ss:

"Sworn to and subscribed before me this 2d day of January, 1882, and I certify that A. C. Dedrick is a regular practicing physician, and a respectable and credible person; also, that I have no interest in the prosecution of this claim; the word 'left' erased and the word 'right' substituted before execution; also, the months 'December' and 'January' interlined in jurat.

"WILLIAM M. JOYCE,
"Notary Public."

In view of the foregoing facts your committee report the bill with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

E. A. M'FADDEN.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I came into the hall just as the Clerk was reading the title of the bill (H. R. 7699). I thought at the time, though I was not certain, that it was a bill introduced by me. I sent a page for the bill, but before he returned the Clerk had passed on to other bills. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. 7699) granting a pension to E. A. McFadden be now taken up for consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the bill will be read and considered.

There being no objection, the bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of E. A. McFadden, late second lieutenant of Company G, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteers in the Mexican war, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for the reading of the report in this case.

Mr. PERKINS. This is the case of an old soldier of the Mexican war.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] insist upon the reading of the report in this case? It is a bill to pension a soldier of the Mexican war.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not insist on the reading in this case, because I do not desire to seem to discriminate; but I think these reports, as a rule, ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The report is not lengthy.

Mr. PERKINS. This is the case of an old soldier of the Mexican war, who is now almost dead.

The report (by Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

The claimant, E. A. McFadden, enlisted May 29, 1846, in Company G, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteers, Mexican war, and mustered into service July 2, 1846, and was discharged October 31, 1846, on account of disability. Claimant made application for pension in 1852, and also in 1879, but for lack of satisfactory evidence it was not allowed.

As in the opinion of your committee the evidence clearly shows that claimant served in the Mexican war and was discharged on account of disability, and as he made an application for pension in 1852, although not conclusive, is satisfactory evidence that claimant incurred permanent disability in said service. They would recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MATSON. This bill appears to be defective in its terms, as it does not fix the amount of the pension, nor does it provide that the person shall be pensioned, "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. PERKINS. I move to amend by inserting at the end of the bill the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." I think those words were a part of the bill as I introduced it, but I am not certain. As a matter of precaution I offer this amendment, though it is somewhat doubtful whether it is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS M. TATEM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6241) granting a pension to Thomas M. Tatem (reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. SWOPE).

Mr. SWOPE. I am informed by the member who introduced that bill that the pension has been granted by the Pension Office. I therefore move it be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

HERMAN BAUMHAGER.

On motion of Mr. HERMANN, the bill (S. 2149) granting an increase of pension to Herman Baumhager was taken up for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the pension of Herman Baumhager, of East Portland, Oreg., of $30 per month (certificate 23293), be, and the same is hereby, increased to $40 per month.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Senate report, hereto attached, represents the present condition of this claimant, which, in the opinion of this committee, entitles him to receive the relief granted by the Senate. They therefore report the bill favorably, and ask that it do pass.

The petitioner was a private in the Fifth Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, Company E. He was pensioned for paralysis of the right side, a disability resulting from his service. He was first allowed $20 a month, and was advanced to $30 a month on account of increasing disability. His infirmities have grown upon him, so that at the present time he is comparatively helpless. His attending physician certifies to his protracted knowledge of his condition, and describes paralysis of right arm, hand, and leg, and partial loss of speech. His helplessness is such that he requires an attendent to dress and feed him.

The committee report the bill with an amendment, changing the word "fifty" to "forty," in the sixth line, and, as amended, recommend that it do pass.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THERESA SCHLEYER.

On motion of Mr. ELLSBERRY, the bill (S. 1191) granting a pension to Theresa Schleyer was taken up for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Theresa Schleyer, widow of Charles Schleyer, late captain of Company F, One hundred and sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1191) granting a pension to Theresa Schleyer, having examined the same, concur in the Senate report hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1191) granting a pension to Theresa Schleyer, beg leave to report back the same, with recommendation that it do pass.

Theresa Schleyer is the widow of Charles Schleyer, deceased, late captain of the One hundred and sixth Ohio Infantry Volunteers, who enlisted in that regiment on the 11th day of August, 1862, was commissioned first lieutenant of that regiment November 11, 1862, and captain March 21, 1864, and was honorably discharged from the service June 29, 1865, by reason of the disbandment of the Volunteer Army at the close of the war. On the 17th of February, 1867, said Schleyer was legally married to Theresa Hauselman, by whom he had in wedlock four children, who are still living and none of them yet of age; and on the 6th day of August, 1879, he was struck and killed by lightning, leaving the said Theresa his widow, who has never since married and still survives him. Her application for a pension, which was made July 12, 1882, was rejected by the Pension Office "on the ground that the immediate cause of soldier's death was not one due to his Army service."

The facts remain, and are shown by papers in the labor of your committee, that the widow has since the death of said Charles Schleyer been compelled to support herself and the four children by her own labor as a laundress or washerwoman; that she is and has been in feeble health, which made it painful and onerous for her to perform such severe service; that she and her children—who are also the children of a brave and faithful soldier—have endured much suffering and poverty, which the passage of this bill would serve to greatly relieve.

The views of the minority were then read, as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

We are unable to assent to the views and recommendations of the majority of this committee. The soldier's death was in no way attributable to or connected with his Army service. He was killed by lightning long after his discharge. In similar cases, equally meritorious, this committee has heretofore uniformly reported adversely. No reason exists for granting a pension in this case that might not be applied to thousands of cases where soldiers have been killed or have died of diseases not connected with the service since the war. This is a field of gratuities upon which Congress has heretofore refused to enter. We can not consent that this widow shall be singled out above all others, in violation of rules and practices heretofore adhered to, and accordingly beg leave to dissent from the recommendations of a majority of this committee, and ask that the bill may lie upon the table.

Mr. MORRILL. Who signed those minority views?

The Clerk read as follows:

Martin A. Haynes, C. C. Matson, E. N. Morrill, John A. Swope, Edwin B. Winans, W. P. Taulbee, H. B. Lovering, J. N. Pidcock, E. H. Conger.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, this case fulfills the requirements we have all been looking for. This is the case of a soldier who was struck by lightning after the war was over. I think, considering the large minority representation of the committee, that bill should be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CAROLINE C. M'NAIR.

On motion of Mr. FULLER the bill (H. R. 7689) granting a pension to Caroline C. McNair was taken up for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Caroline C. McNair, of Canisteo, Steuben County, New York, at the rate of $25 per month.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

That Miss Caroline C. McNair was one of those self-sacrificing, heroic Christian women who left the comforts of a pleasant Northern home, with health and vigor, early in 1861, and for four years and more followed the fortunes of war; endured its hardships, privations, and agonies; gave her time, strength, and health to the arduous and dangerous duties of hospital service as a volunteer nurse in the United States Army, and returned to her home and friends with health broken, having incurred disability in said service, that has continued to exist to the present time, and which renders her incapable of performing manual labor, or engaging in any business whereby she may support herself. She has never married, and must depend upon her friends for maintenance.

The following certificates and affidavits clearly set forth her distinguished services, their excellence, their unusual merit, and the broken health resulting therefrom:

OFFICE SANITARY COMMISSION, Saint Louis, Mo., December 28, 1861.

Miss Carrie C. McNair has this day been appointed nurse in the military hospitals of the Western department by authority delegated to the Sanitary Commission by Miss D. L. Dix, general superintendent of nurses in military hospitals in the United States.

[Certificate.]

WESTERN SANITARY COMMISSION.

This is to certify that Miss Carrie C. McNair has been employed in hospital as nurse for three years, and in other positions connected with the service, and discharged her duties as such faithfully and well; for which this certificate, with the thanks of the Western Sanitary Commission, is respectfully tendered. She has re-enlisted as a veteran.

JAS. E. YEATMAN, President.

SAINT LOUIS, January 20, 1865.

ROOM WESTERN SANITARY COMMISSION,
Saint Louis, August 4, 1862.

Miss CARRIE C. MCNAIR:

The Sanitary Commission have awarded to you and Miss Collins a premium of $5 each, which was decided to be given to twenty of the best female nurses in this department, besides a certificate and vote of thanks, which you will call and get when you visit the city.

Very respectfully,

JAS. E. YEATMAN, President.

NASHVILLE, TENN., June 13, 1865.

Miss CARRIE C. MCNAIR:

I am unwilling that you should leave Nashville without taking with you to your friends in Saint Louis some written acknowledgment of the estimation in which you are held in Nashville, for the valuable services you have rendered in aid of sick and wounded soldiers in our general hospital at this post. I am well acquainted with those services, and know that your work has been well and faithfully done. I have never heard any one speak of you except to praise you; and it gives me pleasure to say that you carry with you to your home the love and respect of all who know you.

With sincere wishes for your future welfare, I am your friend,

E. ROOT,
Agent in Charge U. S. Sanitary Commission, Nashville, Tenn.

Miss Carrie McNair is about to leave our employment, simply because the necessity for her service has ceased. While we are thankful that the war is ended and hospitals closed, we are sorry to part with one who, through all our labor, we have found a most faithful, untiring, and devoted co-worker and friend of the soldier.

MRS. ALFRED CLAPP,
Pres. L. A., U. S.

Many other testimonials of like character as to the value of her services are on file, but it is not necessary to quote further from them.

E. I. Weisner, late captain of Company D, Third Iowa Infantry, testifies:

"I was well acquainted with Miss Caroline C. McNair prior to 1861, while she was a resident of this place, and know that she was a healthy, able-bodied person, and that she enlisted in the United States service as a hospital nurse in 1861. That I was a captain in the Third Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and while stationed at Saint Louis, Mo., I saw her frequently in the discharge of her duties as hospital nurse in the Fourth-street hospital in said city, and know that she not only gave her time and service in alleviating the sufferings of sick and wounded soldiers of the United States Army, but she also contributed of her scanty earnings in procuring delicacies for those under her care, and that she remained in the service until the close of the war."

William B. Taylor, of Canisteo, N. Y., testifies:

"I have been acquainted with Caroline C. McNair since the year 1851. At that time and up to the time she went into the hospital service she was a sound and healthy woman. That she was a school teacher, and during the years 1854 and 1855 worked at that business more than 3 miles from her residence, and that she walked to and from the school-house each day she taught. That I have lived within 1 mile of her the whole of the time since 1853 or 1854, except while she was in the service. That immediately after her return from the service I saw her, and she was using crutches, being lame, as was at that time alleged, from continual traveling in said service, and that the said claimant has been wholly incapacitated for manual labor from that time up to the present time."

Victoria A. Green testifies to same facts.

Eli Soule makes affidavit of like import.

Lura B. Taylor testifies:

"She first became acquainted with Miss Caroline C. McNair in the year 1873, when she came to us on crutches. The summer of 1874 was spent in company with said Miss McNair at a sanitarium at Castile, N. Y.; that she (Miss McNair) was suffering from a serious complication of diseases. She did not lose courage, but talked of what she hoped to accomplish when restored. She has never recovered her health, and is unable to engage in any pursuit requiring physical strength."

Dr. M. D. Ellison, of Canisteo, N. Y., testifies:

"He is a practicing physician, and has been acquainted with Miss Caroline C. McNair for about nine years, and that she has been afflicted with nervous prostration since his acquaintance in 1877; that he has prescribed for and treated her for the same at times since that date; she is subject to numbness of the left side of the body, pains along the spinal column, twitching of the muscles of the left side, and obstinate constipation; she was constantly under my care in 1880, is weak physically, and unable to perform manual labor."

Dr. C. P. Chamberlain, in a long affidavit, sets forth a like state of facts, and certifies to a continuing disability and treatment therefor.

Your committee are of the opinion that the high character and long-continued services of this nurse, the resulting disability, and her present helpless condition, should entitle her to a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, after striking out of the last line the words "twenty-five" and inserting the word "twelve."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so it will read:

At the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. ELLSBERRY. I object to this bill. I do not think there is more merit in this case then in the Schleyer case, which was reported to the House with the recommendation it be laid upon the table. There it was proposed to grant a pension to Theresa Schleyer, the widow of Charles Schleyer, deceased, late captain of the One hundred and sixth Ohio Infantry Volunteers. Here the pension is to be granted no doubt to an estimable woman, but to a nurse who was paid for her service. She asks for a pension when there is no law covering her case, and members are willing to grant her a pension, while a moment ago they refused to grant a pension to the widow of a brave soldier who served for four years in the war, and whose case is supported by the petitions of hundreds of as good citizens as there are in the State of Ohio. It is alleged that this nurse is poor and broken down in health. The widow of the soldier who was struck by lightning is also poor, and needs a pension. Yet this House has refused to grant a pension to that soldier's widow, and now seems to be willing to grant a pension to this schoolmistress who served as nurse. Where is the distinction which can be drawn in favor of the nurse and against the widow whose husband lost his life? There is no just distinction which can be drawn against the widow and in favor of the nurse. And if this woman is entitled to a pension, then the widow of the dead soldier is also entitled to a pension. I am not in favor of granting a pension in this case just after we have refused to grant a pension in the other. Not one voted in favor of the widow, and yet in this case I have no doubt the bill will be carried through the House by a large majority. Let gentlemen, if they can, reconcile the inconsistency of their action.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH F. KIRKHART.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. CONGER) was the bill (H. R. 9167) granting a pension to Joseph F. Kirkhart.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the requirements and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph F. Kirkhart, late a private in Company E, One hundred and seventeenth Ohio Volunteers, second lieutenant of Company D, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteers, and first lieutenant of Company A, Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

This claimant enlisted October 8, 1862, in Company E, One hundred and seventeenth Ohio Volunteers, but was taken sick before muster-in and is marked on company description book:

"Discharged November 9, 1862, by Surg. J. L. Feristone, at Camp Ashland, Kentucky. Remarks: Rejected by mustering officer; cause not stated."

After sufficiently recovering he was commissioned as second lieutenant Company D, Independent Battalion Ohio Cavalry; afterwards as first lieutenant Company A, Thirteenth Ohio Cavalry, from which he was discharged May 3, 1865.

He filed his applica ion for pension July 23, 1881, on account of rheumatism, and gunshot and shell wounds received in battle before Petersburg, July 30, 1864. His claim was rejected May 5, 1886, because of "no pensionable disability from wounds, and because rheumatism is alleged to have been incurred while serving under the enlistment in the first organization, namely, One hundred and seventeenth Ohio Volunteer Infantry, into which he was never mustered."

Joshua Grove, captain Company C, Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, testifies as follows (and his affidavit is fully corroborated by the records in the War Department):

"That he has been well and personally acquainted with said Joseph F. Kirkhart for 21 years or more, and that said Joseph F. Kirkhart was commissioned a lieutenant in (his) Company D, Fourth Independent Battalion Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, on or about the 1st day of August, 1863, and continued in said service till said battalion was mustered out on the expiration of its six months' term of service, on or about the 14th day of March, 1864, when the said organization was mustered in the Thirteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and the said Joseph F. Kirkhart was recommissioned in (his) Company C of said regiment. That said Lieut. Joseph F. Kirkhart, in the said first service, in the autumn of the year 1863 became disabled for general duty by reason of an attack of rheumatism, from exposure on duty, after a sickness of fever at Cumberland Gap, Tenn., where the battalion was stationed in the fall and winter of 1863, and was so afflicted by reason thereof as to be relieved of general duty, yet continued to serve with the company whenever actively engaged before the enemy. That when said battalion was mustered out and mustered into the Thirteenth Cavalry, said lieutenant was commissioned in my company, C, of said regiment, and subsequently assigned to Company K, of the same regiment. He was still suffering from the continued affliction of rheumatism of the year previous, yet participating with the regiment in every action in which it was engaged through Virginia, till it reached Petersburgh, Va., where, upon the movement of Grant upon Lee's works, the fort before Petersburgh, on the 30th day of July, 1864, said Lieutenant Kirkhart was wounded, and taken prisoner in the action, from which imprisonment he was not exchanged till the close of the war.

"Further, that in May or June I met said lieutenant in Washington, D. C., just returned on his exchange from imprisonment, so seriously afflicted from continued rheumatism and from prison confinement as to be merely able to walk with the aid of a cane. When I last saw him, about two years since, he was manifestly declining from same causes. From reasons to be inferred from the foregoing statements, I do verily believe that said Lieutenant Kirkhart, from disease, broken health, contracted in the military service of the United States, is disabled from obtaining his subsistence by manual labor. He was a good soldier, a competent, efficient, and faithful officer."

Continuance of his disability from discharge is proven by neighbors and physicians.

The last official medical examination describes—

"Gunshot wound of left leg below the knee, and shell wound above the knee, but does not ascribe any disability directly to wounds, but says he has rheumatism all over, especially in left leg and back; that he has pain and lameness. He uses a cane, and limps. There is no apparent stiffness of joints nor swelling; and the muscle and tendons furnish no physical sign of rheumatism; legs uniform in development. In view of his statement of his long service, with seven months in prison, and his declaration of pain, the board believe his statements are true, and that he has sciatic rheumatism as a result of the wounds above described, and would recommend a rating of one-fourth."

We have, then, this state of facts: Soldier had two attacks of rheumatism in service, yet continued to do duty, was wounded and taken prisoner in battle; was imprisoned for seven months, has been disabled ever since, and is now suffering with sciatic rheumatism as a result of his wounds.

Your committee believe his claim to a pension is clearly established, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask that that bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it be laid upon the table, as I do not see anything in it to justify the granting of a pension.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend the motion by laying it aside with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The latter motion takes precedence.

The motion of Mr. CONGER was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUKE HOROBIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. HOLMES) was the bill (H. R. 8949) granting a pension to Luke Horobin.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll of the United States, subject to the regulation of the pension laws, the name of Luke Horobin, late a private in Company D, Fifty-first Regiment of Indiana Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

That this soldier was a private in Company D, Fifty-first Indiana Volunteers, and alleges in his application for pension, filed April 3, 1877, that from exposure in the service and from caring for the sick, dying, and dead in hospital at Bardstown, Ky., in January, 1862, he contracted black-bone erysipelas in right leg, resulting in permanent disability of the same. His application was rejected on the ground of "claimant's inability to establish origin in the service in line of duty; unable to furnish any evidence whatever as to soundness at enlistment."

As the law now is, prior soundness is presumed; but we have as corroborative of this presumption the affidavits of Joseph Salt and James Smedley that they were intimately acquainted with claimant prior to his enlistment, except about six months immediately preceding his enlistment, and they know he was a sound and healthy man, free from erysipelas and varicose veins.

He was discharged May 24, 1862, for the following, as appears in his certificate of disability for discharge:

"Enlarged thyroid gland, interfering seriously with respiration and deglutition. He has had caries of the shin-bone, and muscular abscesses of the thigh and shoulder. He is evidently, in my opinion, of scrofulous diathesis."

Dr. David W. Flora, late acting assistant surgeon, and the same that signed the soldier's certificate for discharge, certifies:

"He saw said soldier in the fall of 1861 at Bardstown, Ky. His leg was attacked by phlymonous erysipelas, for which he treated him about four days, when he was then sent to general hospital. Said soldier was next seen by me at Louisville, Ky., in the month of May, 1862, at which time he was compelled to go upon crutches. His leg had been the seat of several abscesses, which had caused extensive destruction of muscular tissue and contraction of tendons. It was my professional opinion at that time that said soldier would never again perform military duty, nor gain a livelihood by manual labor. About this time the soldier received his discharge from the service of the United States."

An examination by Hiram Neill, examining surgeon, discloses his present condition, as follows:

"Erysipelas of right leg and thigh; measurements of legs over each calf show the affected leg to be 1 inch the smaller at that point; similar measurements below the knee show the affected leg to be one-half inch the smaller. Nine cicatrices, evidently once the seat of ulcers, appear upon the leg and thigh. The first cicatrix is located over metacarpal bone of great toe; second, internal to crest of tibia, about 4 inches above internal malleolus. This ulcer probably affected the bone, as there is a depression in the bone. The other cicatrices appear along the course of internal saphenous vein. All the cicatrices are very tender. The leg and thigh are about one inch and a half shorter than sound side. A large ecchymosis appears upon the external part of leg, showing that leg must have been recently inflamed. Applicant's leg and thigh are tender at many different points, especially along internal saphenous vein. The calf and the crest of the tibia, all branches of saphenous vein, are varicose. Applicant is lame."

And he rates him at $12 per month. The record in the Adjutant-General's Office shows that soldier was in hospital as alleged. The certificate of disability for discharge shows that he was disabled. The subsequent affidavit of surgeon describes and defines his disability as the same disease which disables him now.

Your committee can not understand the rejection of this case at the Pension Office, unless from the reference to scrofula in the certificate of discharge they presume prior existence of the disability.

The law authorizes the opposite presumption, which, if given to the soldier, makes his case one of merit, and in the judgment of your committee he should be pensioned; therefore we recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES T. WORNOM.

The next business on the Private Calendar, called up by Mr. LYMAN, was the bill (H. R. 9169) to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles T. Wornom.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations, restrictions, and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Charles T. Wornom, of Atlantic, Iowa, late of Company F, Twelfth Illinois Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

This soldier enlisted June 15, 1861, in the Seventeenth Illinois Volunteers; discharged October 29, 1861; enlisted again July 1, 1862, in First Illinois Cavalry, and was mustered out with the regiment July 14, 1862; enlisted November 20, 1863, and discharged January 28, 1865.

He filed his declaration for a pension August 15, 1870, which was rejected on the ground that "disability existed prior to enlistment."

This rejection is based upon the following statement by the surgeon in his first discharge, viz, "because of incipient phthisis, of hereditary origin."

In his last discharge we find the following, by his company commander:

"By reason of disease of the lungs contracted while in the service of the United States."

And in same, by the assistant surgeon:

"Asthma, for which he has received medical treatment in hospital and in camp, without any beneficial effect. He has done no duty in the field since enlistment, and he is not fit for invalid corps. Degree of disability, one-third."

The last official medical examination is as follows:

"This applicant claims to have been attacked with bleeding from the lungs while on duty at Napoleonville, La., in July, 1864, and has had a cough and more or less expectoration of blood and pus ever since. I find the bronchial murmur all over the upper lobe of the left lung, and it is very dull on percussion. He now has a continual hacking cough, but only expectorates on using physical exertion, about every three or four weeks. Disability results from weakness, and the general results following phthisis, entitling him to total third grade, or $18 per month."

There is on file ample lay testimony to prove prior soundness. The two certificates of discharge name a different disability, thus throwing a doubt upon their accuracy. He was three times accepted into the service, so far as the record shows, without objection. He was disabled at date of discharge, and has been ever since. Following the strict letter of the law the claim was probably properly rejected by the Pension Office, but Congress can and should give the soldier the benefit of all doubt; wherefore the passage of the bill is recommended by your committee.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALEXANDER TRIMBLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. CONGER) was the bill (S. 1897) granting a pension to Alexander Trimble.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Alexander Trimble, late a member of Company H, Seventeenth Regiment of Iowa Infantry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) is as follows:

"The claimant was a private in Company H, Seventeenth Iowa Infantry. He enlisted in 1862, and was discharged in 1865. He claims disability, permanent and acute, from chronic dyspepsia. There is no testimony of his having been sick in the service, and he says the physician who treated him is dead, and he finds it impossible to procure the testimony required. The Adjutant-General's report, however, does show that he was several months a prisoner in the South, which is very strong circumstantial evidence that he may have incurred not only chronic dyspepsia, but almost any other disease to which the soldier is liable. His record as a soldier from the beginning to the end of his service is excellent, and his reputation as a man is of the best. His neighbors, quite a number of them, certify to his physical depreciation, and to his inability to do manual labor more than a small portion of the time. The examining surgeon testifies that he is ill from the cause specified by him; that he is reduced in strength; that his heart is affected, and his respiration at times difficult; and he adds that he has personal as well as professional knowledge of his disabled condition.

"The committee are of the opinion that the claimant is entitled to the relief he claims and needs, notwithstanding his inability to furnish the full amount of testimony required. The bill is therefore reported favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass."

After a careful examination of the papers in this case on file in the Pension Office, your committee adopt the above, and find further that there are none of the records of the Seventeenth Iowa Infantry on file in the Surgeon-General's Office, and hence could be no record of his medical treatment in service. But his sound, healthy condition at enlistment is clearly proven, and the fact of disability at discharge and continuance since is well established.

His application for pension was rejected for want of this record evidence of disability, which it seems was no fault of claimant that it was not preserved.

Your committee believe the case a meritorious one, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANKLIN SWEET.

The next business on the Private Calendar, called up by Mr. DORSEY, was the bill (H. R. 7540) to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet, late captain of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, to the rate to which he would have been entitled had his muster as a captain been made prior to the date of the incurring of the disability for which he was pensioned.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

This bill asks that the pension now granted to claimant for wounds received in battle at Gettysburg be increased to the rate to which he would be entitled had he been at the time mustered as captain.

The facts in this case as shown by the papers submitted to your committee seem to be that claimant was orderly sergeant of Company E, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. That on the 25th of March, 1863, he was commissioned captain of that company, to fill vacancy caused by the dismissal of its former captain. In the latter part of June, 1863, Lieutenant-Colonel Hull, commanding the regiment, ordered the lieutenant commanding the company under arrest, and placed Sergeant Sweet in command of the company. A few days after he was seriously wounded while commanding his company at the battle of Gettysburg. He was sent to the hospital, and upon his discharge therefrom was mustered as captain of his company. Section 4696 provides that—

"Every commissioned officer of the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall receive such, and only such, pension as is provided in the preceding section for the rank he held at the time he received the injury or contracted the disease which resulted in the disability on account of which he may be entitled to a pension; and any commission or Presidential appointment regularly issued to such person shall be taken to determine his rank from and after the date as given in the body of the commission or appointment conferring said rank: Provided, That a vacancy existed in the rank thereby conferred, that the person commissioned was not disabled for military duty, and that he did not willfully neglect or refuse to be mustered."

Claimant was commissioned captain March 25, 1863, a vacancy then existing in the captaincy, took command of the company in June, 1863, was severely wounded at the battle of Gettysburg July 2, 1863, was sent to the hospital, and was mustered as captain after his discharge therefrom.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to hear that bill read again. I think it ought not to be retroactive in its provisions, so as to give this man a pension dating back as if this rank had been held at the time of receiving the injury.

I have always believed that there was no reason for giving a greater pension to a volunteer officer than to a volunteer soldier. Whatever may be the reason for it in the regular service, certainly there is none for it in the volunteer service, and I think this is an exception to the practice of the committee. A number of such cases have been reported adversely, on account of an attempt to rate the pension by reason of the applicant having subsequently filled a higher rank than the real rank at the time of receiving the injury. Many applications have been refused on that ground. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was again reported.

Mr. MATSON. I move to add the words, "Such increase to begin from and after the passage of this act."

Mr. DORSEY. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. NEECE. That is the effect of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

NANCY GUNSALES.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (H. R. 3931) to grant a pension to Nancy Gunsales.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Nancy Gunsales, widow of Samuel Gunsales, late of Company K, One hundred and ninetieth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

Claimant is the widow of Samuel Gunsales, late of Company F, One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and applied for pension as such widow, alleging that the soldier died January 23, 1885, of disability contracted in the service aforesaid. The soldier was a pensioner at the time of his death, at the rate of $12 per month, for gunshot wounds of right leg, left thigh, and left testicle. Claimant was married to the said soldier January 28, 1845.

Dr. James Haller, of Burlingame, Kans., who had examined the soldier in 1882 and 1884, on his application for increase of pension, testifies, under date of March 16, 1886, as follows:

"I am sixty-two years of age, a resident of Burlingame, Osage County, Kansas, and have been for the past seventeen years; have practiced medicine and surgery for thirty-five years last past; that I was acquainted with Samuel Gunsales, deceased, late a private Company K, One hundred and ninetieth Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, and examined him in June, 1882, for an increase of pension, 176,263, granted because of disability incurred in the Army from gunshot wounds of right leg, left thigh, and left testicle, and for which I rated him at that time, to the best of my judgment, in accordance with the physical condition then found.

"Again, in March, 1884, by order of Commissioner of Pensions, I made a special examination, going to his residence, 17 or 18 miles distant; found an aggravation of disability arising from wounds over last examination, and rated accordingly. Also found, from his own statement, one of his physicians (he having had three or four), and that of his neighbors, he had been disabled for manual labor for a year, and because of anasarca of lower extremities and abdominal dropsy had been confined to the house for four months. Two months previous to my visit paracentesis was practiced; a gallon of water drawn; abdomen, however, soon refilled. A physical exploration under the extreme distension of abdomen exhibited, so far as I was able to determine, no increase in size of liver. Spleen I expected to find enlarged; it was not. Said he never had any malarial difficulty. Most that I learned from kidneys was subjective. Urine had been normal in quantity and color until abdomen began to fill; was now scanty and high-colored. Tested, it contained albumen and urates and slight increase of specific gravity. I regarded the case as one of fibroid liver and kidney, and if it was sequence of disease incurred in the Army and in line of duty, which I believed it was, he was entitled to an additional rating, 'second grade.'

"Although I had seen the decedent a number of times, I never prescribed for nor conversed with him except on the two occasions of examination. Those who were best acquainted with him said he was strictly temperate in his habits, did not use alcohol in any form; the most frequent cause of such scleroses."

Dr. E. N. Weems, of Marion, Kans., testifies:

"At different times I was called to visit and prescribe for Samuel Gunsales from September 4, 1881, to January 21, 1885. During his last sickness I was called to see him November 25, 1883. His condition at that time was one of general dropsy. On the last above-mentioned date I performed the operation of paracentesis and visited him almost every day thereafter until January 17, 1884. I was not permitted to visit him again. I can not state positively, in the absence of proper data, as to the cause of his trouble. His trouble was not acute, but chronic. There was a general anasarca of all the tissues of the body, beginning with the lower extremities. I was not in immediate attendance on him at the time of his death; hence can not give the immediate cause of death. His general health from the time I first met him, in September, 1881, was poor; there seemed to be a failing of all his vital organs."

Three neighbors testify to his death from dropsy. The only question in this case is as to whether the soldier's death was the result of his wounds. The evidence is not so clear and positive as to comply with the requirements of the Pension Office. The evidence of the physicians seems to make a reasonable case that the dropsy was the result of the wounds, and the consequent debility arising therefrom.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM DICKENS.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. MORRILL) was the bill (S. 2269) granting a pension to William Dickens.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Dickens, late of Company A, Twenty-fourth Regiment Missouri Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The facts in this case are fully set forth in the following Senate report:

"The soldier claims pension for disability resulting from sunstroke incurred at the battle of Yellow Bayou, Louisiana, and from rupture by hard marching with General Banks on the Red River expedition. The office rejected his claim on the ground that there is no record or medical evidence; but the medical reviewer says:

"'If the regimental surgeon could identify the claimant as the man he treated for sunstroke, the claim might be admissible.'

"If only those claims that are substantiated by the reports of the adjutant and surgeon generals were allowed there would be very few pensions granted. The imperfect condition of their records is a serious disadvantage to the soldier.

"The case was put in the hands of special examiners, one of whose reports was favorable, but rejected by the office. Another contains the testimony of Dr. L. H. Baker, late surgeon Twenty-fourth Missouri Volunteers, the claimant's regiment, which he thus reports. The doctor testifies that he remembers that there was a man named Dickens in the regiment, and thinks he must have treated him. Remembers treating a case of sunstroke at Yellow Bayou, La., about May, 1864. The special examiner adds:

"'I deem it proper to say that the doctor received no intimation from me as to the basis of the claim. In answer to question, the doctor said, 'I could not say positively. What does he claim?' I said, 'Not for any wound.' Then followed his testimony about a case of sunstroke."

"The doctor testifies that there was only one such case. Several comrades testify to service with him in the field at this battle; to seeing him fall of sunstroke; to seeing him carried to the rear on a stretcher; to Surgeon Baker's attendance on him; to their having been his neighbors and friends all their lives; to his prior soundness; to his subsequent and present broken-down condition; and one of them swears to the rupture while on the Red River march. Dr. Baker's reputation is admitted to be good, and, with one exception, all the witnesses are rated reputable. The soldier is sick; has been unable to work since his discharge; is advanced in years; and worthy."

While it is not clearly proven that the claimant received a sunstroke at Yellow Bayou, the presumption is very strong that he was the soldier treated at that place by Dr. Baker. Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANDREW J. BURRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. PERKINS) was the bill (S. 1826) granting a pension to Andrew J. Burrell.

The bill is as follows:

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The claimant in this case was captain of Company A, Fiftieth Indiana Volunteers, enlisting September 12, 1861, and receiving his discharge April 3, 1863. In 1871 he applied for a pension, alleging that he contracted hemorrhoids in the service. His claim was rejected on the ground that he suffered from the same disease prior to enlistment. The certificate of disability upon which his resignation was accepted states that the disability existed prior to enlistment, but was greatly aggravated by his military service. The hospital records show that he had camp dysentery while in the service, and suffered terribly from the disease for which he claims pension. The fact that the disease existed prior to enlistment has deprived this soldier of a pension for twenty-three years. That the disease was greatly aggravated and rendered incurable by his Army service seems to be clearly shown. It would seem but simple justice to now place him upon the pension-roll. Your committee, after a careful examination of the papers, recommend the passage of the bill.

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions is hereto attached and made a part of this report:

"The petitioner is Andrew J. Burrill, late captain of Company A, Fiftieth Regiment Indiana Volunteers. He applied for a pension in February, 1871, alleging disability from chronic diarrhea resulting in piles. He was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the disabilities existed prior to enlistment. In reference to the officer's history, the Adjutant-General furnishes information from the records, for the use of the Commissioner of Pensions, in which is included the certificate of the surgeon of the regiment, who certifies that Captain Burrill has 'camp dysentery.' He has for months been suffering with piles, and from his present condition the surgeon says 'he can never recover in this camp;' 'that in consequence thereof he is unfit for duty;' and upon this certificate the officer is granted a leave of thirty days.

"The history, as further supplied by the Adjutant-General, shows by continuous dates intervals of sickness at home and in quarters, and finally it comes to his resignation, and gives a copy of his letter, in which he says he resigns his commission on account of ill-health; that he has been afflicted with hemorrhoids for some months, and for the last month or two has been unable to perform his duties; that he is now in hospital. Then follows a certificate from the medical department of his regiment, which states that on examination the officer is found unable to perform his duties in consequence of frequent, profuse hemorrhoids of the bowels; that the disease existed prior to entering the service, but has been greatly aggravated by camp life. The examining surgeons certify to the severity of the disabilities.

"Notwithstanding the evidence of prior disability furnished by the War Department, and the declaration of the Pension Office that any additional testimony the claimant may file would not benefit his claim, there have been ten special examinations, resulting in an accumulation of confusing and contradictory testimony, some of it coming from reputable witnesses, vindicating the officer's claim, with a proportion of adverse statements from witnesses, some of whom are apparently candid, while others are strongly biased.

"It is difficult for the committee to determine from such a mass of conflicting proof whether or not the officer was sound when he entered the service. Some affirm, of their personal knowledge, that he was well, while others assume exactly the reverse. The certificate of the regimental surgeon is the most damaging, but he gives no reason in support of his bare statement. The officer entered the service as a lieutenant and was promoted to captain. He was then comparatively and apparently a well man. All the testimony is positive as to his good character and as to his present disabled and suffering condition.

"The committee are of the opinion that he is entitled to some relief, and report the bill favorably, and recommend that it do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ADDISON A. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. PETERS) was the bill (S. 1958) granting an increase of pension to Addison A. Jackson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Addison A. Jackson, late of Company I, Twelfth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) is as follows:

The report of the Senate committee, hereto attached, contains a full statement of the case, except that it was rejected on the ground that it was not clearly shown that the rheumatism was the result of the service, but it is proven that the present condition of the claimant is the result of a continuous decline since his discharge, and the conclusion is irresistible that his present condition is the result of his Army service.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

That the records in this case show that claimant, who was a sergeant in Company I, Twelfth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, enlisted July 24, 1861, and was discharged October 24, 1864. Declaration for pension filed March 24, 1880, alleging gunshot wound left knee and thigh, for which claimant was pensioned at the rate of $2 per month.

It appears from the records that this soldier was a brave man, and although seriously wounded he returned to his regiment and remained with it, participating in every battle until mustered out; that for gallantry in action he was promoted to first lieutenant which rank he held when mustered out.

From the time of the injury until now claimant's health has steadily grown poorer, as is shown by the testimony on file.

The examining surgeon's certificate, dated September 24, 1884, says that in addition to the wound for which claimant was originally pensioned, "His joints all present a puffy appearance. The joints of the fingers of left hand are twice as large as normal. His circulation is very poor, pulse weak and irregular. His stomach large (bloated) and very sensitive to the touch. Liver is large and very tender;" and they rate his disability total.

Taking into consideration all the evidence on file in this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of the bill, and recommend its passage. Had claimant been pensioned as of the rank to which he was promoted for gallantry it would have been for a larger sum.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee now rise and report to the House the bills which have been acted upon.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will yield for a moment, till I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill (H. R. 8227).

Mr. PERKINS. There are three or four other gentlemen who would like to be recognized, to call up bills.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE]?

There was no objection.

SETH WELDY.

The bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to Seth Weldy was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

In the matter of pension claim of Seth Weldy, late Captain of Company I, Twenty-third Regiment United States Infantry, the report of the Assistant Adjutant-General shows that the claimant enlisted on the 7th day of August, 1861, and was assigned to Company C, second battalion Eighteenth United States Infantry; that he joined his company from the depot August 30, 1861, and was on the same day appointed first sergeant, and was reported discharged, to take effect June 25, 1862. On July 11, 1862, he accepted a commission as second lieutenant, First Infantry; was promoted first lieutenant May 28, 1864, and appointed captain of the Twenty-third Infantry on July 28, 1866. From the testimony submitted by claimant, his appointment to the Twenty-third Infantry was as captain of Company I, Twenty-third Infantry. The papers on file show that while in command of said company, by order of General Halleck, who was then in command of the military division of the Pacific, he was commanded to build a military road of 250 miles from Willow Creek, Oregon, across the foot-hills of the Blue Mountains, and established the post or camp now known as Camp Harney; that while engaged in said work he claimed he incurred hernia or rupture. Claimant thereafter made application for original invalid pension on the ground that while in the line of his duty as captain aforesaid he became disabled by incurring a hernia or rupture.

The Commissioner of Pensions rejected said claim, for the reason that claimant was unable to produce satisfactory evidence showing that said claim of disability was incurred in the line of duty.

From the testimony produced by the claimant, he admits his inability to state exact time, place, or circumstance under which he sustained the injury; but in his affidavit, filed in the case, claims that said injury was incurred during his service as captain of Company I, Twenty-third Regiment, United States Infantry. The report of the assistant adjutant-general, before referred to, further shows that on December 17, 1866, claimant was examined for his commission as captain Twenty-third Infantry by a board of officers at Louisville, Ky., and his examination mentally and physically was satisfactory; on leave and on detail to March, 1867; with company at Fort Vancouver, Washington Territory, to April, 1867; Fort Dalles, Oregon, to July 15, 1867; en route to camp on Willow Creek, Oregon, to September 23, 1867; and Camp Harney, Oregon, to October 25, 1867; and on leave of absence, not sick leave, to date of resignation. He tendered his resignation October 27, 1867 (no reason given), from Camp Harney, Oregon, and it was accepted, to take effect December 16, 1867.

The claimant filed his affidavit stating therein his inability to give required testimony, for the reason that there was only one commissioned officer in his company other than himself, and at the time claimant discovered his injury the said commissioned officer was under arrest, by virtue of claimant's order, for disobedience, and therefore claimant did not impart the information to him, and he further says that from that time he only had official communications with him. As to the second requisite of proof, claimant filed his affidavit stating that the person assigned as surgeon to his company was a discharged hospital steward, in whom claimant had no confidence, and did not consult nor inform said so-called surgeon of his injury. As to the third requisite, the papers show that claimant was an officer of the company—its commander—and did not inform the privates of his injury, nor is it reasonable to suppose that the commander of a company should impart information concerning his injury to the privates of his company. Claimant also filed the affidavit of his physician as to his soundness before enlistment; the affidavit of a surgeon of the United States Army, that at the time he saw claimant (which was immediately after his resignation was accepted), and claimant was then suffering with the injury alleged.

But this testimony did not meet with the technical proof required by the Department, which was to show that he incurred the injury at the time alleged, and requiring proof of time, place, and circumstance of such injury.

But from the direct testimony offered by claimant and from the deductions to be fairly drawn from the examinations made by the board of examiners immediately previous to his commission as captain, and from the testimony of Surgeon Wagner, made immediately after his discharge, the committee recommend that House bill 8227 do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY MERICLE.

Mr. MILLARD. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 2998) granting a pension to Henry Mericle.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry Mericle, late a private in Company D, Sixth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES H. KING.

Mr. BYNUM. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 362) granting a pension to James H. King.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. King, late a private in Company D, Ninth Indiana Legion.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SARAH RANDLES.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7352) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Randles.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sarah Randles, widow of William Randles, late captain of Company I, Ninety-third Regiment of New York Volunteers.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUTTIT. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 1481) granting an increase of pension to Col. Charles E. Capehart.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles E. Capehart, late lieutenant-colonel of the First Regiment of Virginia Cavalry, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension he now receives.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the report is very lengthy.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. LOUTTIT. There is an amendment to the bill. I can state the substance of the report very briefly to save the reading of it. There is an amendment to cut down the amount to $45.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from California to let this go over so that the case may be investigated before the next meeting. There seems to be some doubt about it.

Mr. LOUTTIT. There is an amendment recommended in the report to strike out $50 and insert $45.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph making that recommendation.

The Clerk read as follows:

We are of the opinion that an increase should be granted, and recommend that the Senate bill be amended by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting in lieu thereof "forty-five," and that so amended the bill do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his motion?

Mr. MATSON. I do.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration pension bills on the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will first report the titles of the bills reported by the Committee of the Whole House to which no amendments are recommended.

DANIEL SCHULTHEIS.

The Clerk read the title of the first bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7911) granting a pension to Daniel Schultheis.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I did not arrive in time to be present when that bill was called up in Committee of the Whole. I do not think it ought to pass. It struck me in reading the report as a very weak case, and one that ought not to receive the approval of this House. It is a case where a man lost certain powers of locomotion, and now claims that that was owing to the spraining of muscles by marching. The claim struck me as being exceedingly weak. I had intended to enter an objection when the bill should be reached in Committee of the Whole, but as the hour of meeting was changed I did not arrive until after the bill had been laid aside to be reported to the House. I ask that it be not now read a third time, but that it be passed over. The case is one which struck me as having no merit. If the gentleman who has the bill in charge can show it has merit, I shall be glad to hear him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over informally without losing its present status.

Mr. WALLACE. I did not put it in that way. I do not think the bill has any merit, and do not think it should retain its place on the Calendar night after night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless the motion is put in the form in which the Chair has suggested there is no other alternative than to vote on the question. If the gentleman from Louisiana is not making the request for unanimous consent, as the Chair has stated it, the Chair will proceed to put the question on the bill to a vote.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not care to submit it to an issue of that sort.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The other mode presents the only way in which the bill can be passed over so as to allow the other bills to be reached.

Mr. WALLACE. Then I ask that it be passed over in that way.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If that is agreed to I presume the bill does not lose its place.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I should like to understand what would be the effect of passing over the bill informally.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In answer to the gentleman from New Jersey the Chair will state that in that case the bill will necessarily retain its present status and come up as unfinished business at the next meeting for the consideration of this class of business.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suggest that the bill be passed over until bills that are not objected to be disposed of. I do not see why this bill can not be disposed of to-night.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Did I understand the Chair to say that there was no objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair heard none.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I thought that my suggestion was in the nature of an objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understood the gentleman's suggestion to be directed to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE]. The gentleman from Louisiana made no response, and the Chair heard no objection to his request. But, not being disposed to take advantage of any gentleman, the Chair will put the question again.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I certainly was under a misapprehension. I did not mean that that request should go without objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will put the question again.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BUCHANAN] will observe the fact that this bill will come up at the next evening session, I think he will not insist upon his objection.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Oh, the same thing would have to be gone through then; the bill would be at the head of the Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE]?

Mr. BUCHANAN. There is.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey objects. The question, then, is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside until action has been had upon the bills to which there is no objection.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not see the object of that, Mr. Chairman. I do not see why the bill should not be acted upon now as well as later in the evening. Let the gentleman state the object or purpose he has in view. I object to this bill on the score of its merits. And I object to it as much at 11 o'clock as I do now. I object to it because I do not think it has any merits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] objects. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 30, noes 1.

Mr. WALLACE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. WALLACE, and the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BUCHANAN, to act as tellers.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas (before the count was completed). Mr. Speaker, I renew the request of the gentleman from Louisiana, and ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside, so that bills to which no objection is made be taken up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection has been made to that, and the House is dividing and nothing is in order until the tellers make their report.

Mr. TAULBEE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. GOFF. But, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the regular order is demanded and cuts off unanimous consent. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

TAULBEE] demanded the regular order after the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] was made.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, I made objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE], for the reason that if it prevailed this bill would be left at the head of the Calendar at the next evening session, and I thought the matter might as well be disposed of to-night; but I see that it is stopping all pension legislation, and I am willing to—no, I will—withdraw my objection. [Laughter.]

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Chairman, has the previous question been called on this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. MATSON. I ask that it be ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That can not be done pending the objection of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE], who has asked that the bill be passed over, retaining its present status. In the absence of objection that order will be made.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 9167) granting a pension to Joseph F. Kirkhart;

A bill (H. R. 8949) granting a pension to Luke Horobin;

A bill (H. R. 9169) to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles T. Wornom;

A bill (H. R. 3931) to grant a pension to Nancy Gunsales;

A bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to Seth Weldy;

A bill (H. R. 2998) granting a pension to Henry Mericle; and

A bill (H. R. 7352) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Randles.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with amendments, were severally taken up, the amendments agreed to, and the bills as amended ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 8258) granting a pension to Waitie F. Harris;

A bill (H. R. 7699) granting a pension to E. A. McFadden; and

A bill (H. R. 7689) granting a pension to Caroline C. McNair.

FRANKLIN SWEET.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House with an amendment was the bill (H. R. 7540) to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment to this bill as reported from the Committee of the Whole House will be agreed to, and the question will be on ordering the bill as amended to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I rise to oppose the passage of this bill. I have no factious objection to make to it. I simply wish to announce to the gentleman who has it in charge that I am opposed to the measure on principle, and that a quorum will be required to pass it.

I listened to the reading of the bill and the report. The proposition, as I understand it, is to give the pension of a captain to a man who is now under the law receiving pension as a private or a non-commissioned officer. Now, as I understand, the purpose of our pension system in cases of this kind is to make good to the soldier, so far as the Government can do so, the disability that he has incurred while serving his country. According to my understanding, the law now giving to this soldier a pension as a private contemplates making good to him by such pension his disability, so far as obtaining a livelihood is concerned.

I am unable to appreciate the justice of saying that because this man, on the particular occasion when he incurred this disability, happened to have stripes on his collar or a sword in his hand instead of a musket we should adopt some special legislation to place him upon a higher plane than those men who carried muskets on that day and who incurred similar disability.

I understand from the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the view I now state is no new idea of mine, but that this report, according to his understanding, is an innovation upon the precedents of that committee. I believe this bill should not pass. If the Government is not now compensating sufficiently this soldier and others who incurred similar disabilities under like circumstances, let the pensions of all of them be increased. But I do not believe it right to say that because on that day this man carried a sword instead of a musket he should receive more pension than those who did carry muskets.

I oppose this bill on principle. I do not wish to throw any obstruction in the way of going on with other business here to-night. It seems to me unnecessary that we should go through the formality of calling for a quorum. I simply state to the gentleman who has this bill in charge that I oppose it, and that a quorum will be required to pass it. With this statement, I ask that the bill be laid aside.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent, as the Chair understands, that this bill be passed over informally, not to interfere with other business.

Mr. DORSEY. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. ALLEN] certainly misunderstands this case, or he would not raise this objection.

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly he does.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. That the bill be laid aside, to be considered in a full House.

Mr. DORSEY. My friend from Mississippi fails to understand this case. Captain Sweet was a sergeant in Company E, Sixty-second Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry. In March, 1863, the captain of his company was dismissed the service, leaving the first lieutenant and the second lieutenant with the company, Mr. Sweet being at that time the first sergeant. In April, 1863, the first lieutenant resigned, and in June of the same year the second lieutenant was placed under arrest, and subsequently was dismissed. Captain Sweet was put in command of the company. On the 2d of July, at Gettysburg, he commanded his company by order of his colonel, as is shown by the evidence before the committee, and was severely wounded, in consequence of which he was taken to the hospital, where he lay until the following December. While in the hospital he received a commission from Governor Curtin, of Pennsylvania, as captain of the company, to date from March 24, 1883.

But he was unable to be mustered. The War Department dates his muster in August, at the time when the second lieutenant was dismissed, claiming, erroneously, that he could not have been mustered into the office of captain so long as there was a commissioned officer with the company. Now the fact is, Mr. Speaker, that he was commissioned in March, but was not mustered until the following December. He drew the pay of captain and held the rank of captain from March, but not being mustered, according to the ruling of the Pension Office, he is held not to be entitled to draw a pension as captain. He is therefore now drawing pension only as a sergeant, although he was a captain in the Army, as I have stated, from the preceding March.

I can see no good reason why this man should not be placed on the pension-roll as a captain, as he was so commissioned prior to the date when he received his injury. He commanded his company on the day when he was wounded, and commanded it until the close of the war.

It is no innovation we are making, but we propose simply to do an act of justice to this man by correcting an erroneous decision of the War Department. If the Secretary of War could have dated his muster back to March, he would then have done full justice. The section of the statute recited in the report of the committee fully covers the case.

Mr. WALLACE. Will the gentleman be good enough to tell the House why this whole question has been delayed until this late day?

Mr. BOUTELLE. For the same reason which applies in other cases.

Mr. DORSEY. He did not apply for it.

Mr. WALLACE. He could have applied in 1865 as well as to-day.

Mr. DORSEY. But his failure to do that should not work him injustice.

Mr. MATSON. It was because probably there was no act under which this man's failure to be mustered could have been corrected, until recently.

Mr. BRADY. I understand this man did duty as captain of his company, and received the wound for which he is to be pensioned while he was in command of his company acting as captain.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I did not misapprehend the case at all when I made objection to it. I understood the report just as the gentleman now states it. As I understand the theory and principle of this pension business, it is not to give a man a pension as a captain. The Government is not going to qualify him to earn a living as captain by the pension given him. The principle ought to be to give him what will make him a full man, as if he had not received these wounds.

I do not expect to be able here to reverse the general laws of this land which give to officers better pay than privates.

Mr. MATSON. Pensions.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes; larger pensions than it gives to privates. But I am not going to consent for one to enter into special legislation and to pass special bills to relieve individuals who do not technically come within the law as it is now upon the statute-book.

Mr. Speaker, I have had some little experience in war; I have had the fortune, or the misfortune, to be a private myself, and have stood guard many a night, in snow and rain, with a musket in my hands, while my lieutenants, and captains, and colonels, and generals, were enjoying a good night's sleep. [Laughter.] I have been greatly impressed ever since that time with the fact that privates who carry their muskets and do their duty as soldiers, are entitled to as much from this country in the way of pensions after the war is over as any man who served his country as an officer. The private's life is as hard as any other, and he deserves as much of his country, and I say I am not going for one to consent to any special legislation, where I can prevent it, that would place the man who carried a sword and received wounds at Gettysburg upon a higher plane than the man who received wounds there in the discharge of his duty as a private carrying a musket. That is the ground upon which I oppose the bill. The officers were better paid, better fed, and had better clothes, and a better time during the war, and that may have been all right, but now that the war is over and we are trying to make good their loss in pensions, give the privates an equal show.

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest, as a compromise, the previous question be ordered and this case go over until we can have a vote on it in a full House.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

FRIDOLINE GLASTETTER.

The bill (S. 2132) granting a pension to Fridoline Glastetter, reported from the Committee of the Whole favorably, was considered, the question being upon its third reading.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, this is another bill that has been before the House five or six times, and each time it has been laid over and allowed to hold its place on the Calendar. It delays the House nearly every night we have pension legislation. It is a bill that always impressed me as one entirely without merit. I have talked upon it two or three times, and I do not propose to enter upon another discussion of it to-night. But from my standpoint this bill is one totally devoid of merit; and I shall certainly raise all the issue I can to prevent the Government from being, what I consider, mulcted in the amount of that pension, in a case not justifiable under the laws.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to its going over; but to get rid of it I would ask that the previous question be ordered and that it be referred to a full House.

Mr. WALLACE. I think it very objectionable in this short session to take up the time of the House in that manner.

Mr. MORRILL. I consider this a very meritorious bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that these bills, if the previous question is ordered, will go over and come up the first thing after the reading of the Journal to-morrow, conflicting thereby with anything which may have been made a special order for to-morrow.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Kansas to ask that it be passed over informally?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; I will object to that. I would like to have some understanding with reference to the disposition of the bill. I would accept the previous question.

Mr. WALLACE. The gentleman's suggestion is acceptable to me.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. But the gentleman from Kentucky has objected, and the question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

Mr. PETERS. I would like to make this suggestion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will hear the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered, and that the bill go over until next Friday to a full House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It goes over until the next Friday's session of the House if not acted upon to-night.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then, I misunderstood the Chair a moment since in a statement with reference to the parliamentary course which the bill would take in the event that the previous question was ordered to-night and it was suffered to go over to a full House. I understood that it would come up to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair says that now. The Chair stated, in response to the gentleman from Kansas, that it would go over until next Friday if no action were taken to-night, and would come up as the unfinished business; but if the previous question is ordered to-night it comes up to-morrow immediately after the Journal is read.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not be within the province of the House, by unanimous consent, to say that it shall go over until next Friday, the previous question being ordered upon it, and not come up to-morrow for action? My question is, may that order not be made?

Mr. PERKINS. That has been done, I think, in one or two instances.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair supposes that might be done.

Mr. MATSON. Then I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered, and that the bill be passed over until next private bill day, to be acted upon in a full House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I do not desire to make objection, for I am willing to do almost anything to have these bills disposed of; but it is well to bear in mind that Friday is private bill day, and some of these gentlemen who are sending the bills over to that day are interested in the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas that the previous question be considered as ordered upon this bill, and that it be allowed to go over until the next Friday when the House is in session?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Also, petition of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of Minnesota, for the passage of the Blair educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 18, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DEFICIENCY ESTIMATES FOR SIGNAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with a letter from the Secretary of War, deficiency estimates for the Signal Service for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINTE MARIE RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, a report relating to the construction of a railroad bridge across the Sainte Marie River, and recommending an amendment to the act authorizing said bridge; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MAIL MESSENGERS IN POSTAL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service, with amendments by the Senate, and a request by the Senate for a committee of conference.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to move that the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate and agree to the conference asked by that body.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 17, 1886.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives, No. 8346, authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service do pass with the following amendments:

In line 2 strike out "employ" and insert "contract for."

After "vessels," in line 10, insert "and said contracts shall be let to the lowest bidders, after due advertisement at such times and places as the Postmaster-General may direct, and upon the same terms and conditions as other contracts for carrying the United States mails on star routes as may be provided by law."

Resolved, That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the said bill and amendments.

Ordered, That Mr. CONGER, Mr. CHACE, and Mr. MAXEY be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to concur in the Senate amendments and to agree to the conference asked by that body.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. WARD, of Indiana, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. WAKEFIELD.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were severally read twice, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 4) to permit the owners of certain vessels and the owners or underwriters of cargoes laden thereon to sue the United States—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 199) for the retirement and recoinage of the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The bill (S. 1537) for the relief of B. B. Connor, of Louisville, Ky.—to the Committee on War Claims.

The bill (S. 2901) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey the United States custom-house and post-office property at Eastport, in the State of Maine, lately destroyed by fire, the proceeds thereof to be invested in the purchase of a new site for and to provide for the erection of a public building at that place—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

TENURE-OF-OFFICE ACT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill of the Senate of the following title:

A bill (S. 512) to repeal certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the appointments of civil officers.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the 5th day of January be set apart for the consideration of the bill the title of which has just been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend from North Carolina will name the 6th of January.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I have no objection to saying the 6th.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will such an order give that bill precedence over prior special orders?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order which the gentleman from North Carolina desires to have made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Thursday, the 6th day of January, be set apart for the consideration of the tenure-of-office act now reported from the Senate, and the same be continued from day to day until said bill is disposed of.

Mr. HILL. I object.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman agree to except bills forfeiting public lands?

Mr. HILL. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. MILLS. That bill should be considered and disposed of in one day.

A MEMBER. In one hour.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I agree to make the exception indicated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

The SPEAKER. If there be no further objection——

Mr. PETERS. I object.

The bill having been read twice, was referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

COMMITTEE APPOINTMENTS.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BACON to fill the vacancies on the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Committee on Expenditures in the State Department occasioned by the death of Mr. Arnot.

PUBLIC BUILDING, CHARLESTON, S. C.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10051) for the erection of a public building at Charleston, S. C., and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to purchase or otherwise provide a site and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office and the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other Government uses, at the city of Charleston, in the State of South Carolina. The site of said building shall not exceed in cost the sum of $100,000; and the building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $400,000; and no purchase of site, nor plan for said building, shall be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury involving an expenditure exceeding the said sums of $100,000 for the site and $400,000 for the building; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of South Carolina shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owner thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of civil process therein.

SEC. 2. That as soon as the said building shall have been erected and occupied for the uses of the Government, the Secretary of the Treasury shall advertise for sale, and shall sell at public auction, to the highest bidder, for cash, the site and building now used and occupied as a post-office in the city of Charleston, and damaged by the recent earthquake shock in that city; and the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $500,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill what objection there is to using the old site for the proposed new building.

Mr. DIBBLE. There are two objections, Mr. Speaker. One is that the old site, all told, is only 90 feet by 50, and is surrounded by streets, so that it can not be enlarged, and it is the opinion of the Supervising Architect that the building should be put upon a larger piece of ground—should be spread out more—built low and wide.

Mr. SPRINGER. Before the time for objection is passed I desire to ask the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] whether he will not agree to an appropriation of $200,000 to continue the work during the next fiscal year. It is unusual to appropriate the whole sum for the completion of a building that can not be completed within two or three years. We usually appropriate in the first instance only for the site.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. HEPBURN. I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection. The building formerly used there has been destroyed by an earthquake, and this is required to meet a present emergency.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is just for that reason that I make the objection. It seems to me, in view of the recent experiences of that city, that this is not the time to invest $500,000 in a new building there.

Mr. DIBBLE. Then I suppose the business of the Government must be done in the open air.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DUNN. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DORSEY. I wish to call up a pension bill which has come over from last evening.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. BARKSDALE] desires to present a privileged report.

PRINTING REPORTS OF HEADS OF DEPARTMENTS.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a privileged report from the Committee on Printing.

The report was read, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 13, 1886.

Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form, separately, for the use of the House of Representatives, —— thousand copies of the reports proper of the heads of Departments, including the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, of the Director of the Mint, and of the Treasurer of the United States, without the appendices.

The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the foregoing resolution providing for the printing in pamphlet form of separate copies of the reports proper of the heads of Departments and other reports, report the resolution back to the House with the following amendments:

Strike out the word "thousand" and fill the blank with "seventeen hundred," and insert after the word "agricultural" "of the report of the Comptroller of the Currency;" so that the resolution will read as follows:

"Resolved, That there be printed in pamphlet form separately for the use of the House of Representatives 1,700 copies of the reports proper of the heads of the Departments, including the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture, of the Comptroller of the Currency, of the Director of the Mint, and of the Treasurer of the United States, without appendices;"

And do recommend its passage as so amended.

The estimated cost will be about $454.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman making this report whether it would not be desirable to embrace in this printing the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by inserting the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, there is this to be said in reference to that proposition: The law will not permit the House to pass the resolution if so amended, because it is more than probable that the printing of this additional report will increase the expense beyond the five-hundred-dollar limit.

Mr. HOLMAN. Upon the facts stated in the report, I do not think that this addition will increase the expense beyond the limit, but if there is any such danger, it seems to me that some of the other reports named had better be omitted than the one I suggest, which is a report of very general interest.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I offer no further objection, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was adopted.

The resolution as amended was then agreed to.

Mr. BARKSDALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

FRANKLIN SWEET.

Mr. DORSEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7540) to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet, which comes over from last evening's session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. DORSEY] that upon an examination of the Journal it appears that the previous question was ordered last evening simply upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill. That being the case, the bill comes up this morning for a vote upon ordering it to be engrossed and read a third time, and when that vote is taken, if objection be made, the bill will go over until next Friday.

Mr. DORSEY. It was the agreement last night that the vote should be taken upon the passage of the bill this morning.

The SPEAKER. The RECORD does not show that, and the Journal does not show it.

Mr. DORSEY. I understand from the Speaker pro tempore that such was the order.

The SPEAKER. The last statement in the RECORD about it is this:

Mr. PERKINS. I suggest, as a compromise, that the previous question be ordered and this case go over until we can have a vote on it in a full House.

That was agreed to without anything being said as to when the vote should be taken.

Mr. DORSEY. Then I now move the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill, and the Speaker declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. TAULBEE called for a division, but before it could be had, said: Mr. Speaker, it being perfectly apparent that the majority of the House is in favor of the passage of this bill, I withdraw the demand for a division.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. DORSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLAND. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is proceeding. The next business in order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HILL. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the presentation of reports from committees.

The motion was agreed to; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills reported from committees now begins at 36 minutes past 12 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on the Territories.

ASSOCIATE SUPREME JUSTICE FOR NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HILL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HILL. I ask that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it had better be considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HILL. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico shall consist of a chief-justice and three associate justices, any three of whom shall constitute a quorum.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the President to appoint one additional associate justice of said supreme court in manner now provided by law, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and until his successor is appointed and qualified.

SEC. 3. That the said Territory shall be divided into four judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each district by one of the justices of the supreme court, at such time and place as may be prescribed by law. Each judge, after assignment, shall reside in the district to which he is assigned.

SEC. 4. That the present chief-justice and his associates are hereby vested with power and authority, and they are hereby directed, to divide said Territory into four judicial districts, and make such assignments of the judges provided for in the first section of this act as shall in their judgment be meet and proper.

SEC. 5. That the said district court shall have jurisdiction, and the same is hereby vested, to hear, try, and determine all matters and causes that the courts of the other districts of the Territory now possess; and for such purposes two terms of said court shall be held annually, at such places within said district as may be designated by the chief-justice and his associates, or a majority of them; and grand and petit jurors shall be summoned thereon in the manner now required by law.

SEC. 6. That all offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect (except as to the number of judges) as if this act had not passed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say that this bill has been carefully considered by two standing committees of this House—the Committee on the Territories and the Committee on the Judiciary—and that both of those committees have reported in favor of the passage of the bill because of the absolute necessity of additional judicial force in New Mexico to transact the public business there.

I yield five minutes to the Delegate from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH].

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report of the Committee on Territories upon this bill be read in my time.

The report (by Mr. JOSEPH) was read, as follows:

Your committee have given this bill careful consideration, and are satisfied that the proper administration of justice in the Territory of New Mexico requires that an additional judge should be provided at an early day.

The Territory of New Mexico embraces an area of 121,201 square miles, its eastern boundary line being 345 in length, and its western line 390, with an average breadth of 335 miles, and in 1880 had a population of 119,565, which, at the same ratio of increase as was realized between the census of 1870 and that of 1880, may now safely be estimated to have reached at least a total of 140,185.

Under existing law this large extent of territory is divided into three judicial districts, with a single judge assigned to reside and hold court in each, and such has been the law from the date of the organization of the Territory, in 1850, when the population was only 61,547, or considerably less than one-half of what it is at the present date.

It is also an important fact that railroad facilities through the Territory are being increased, the effect of which must be to stimulate general business, and consequently augment the volume of judicial business to be disposed of by the courts; in addition to which your committee are possessed of reliable information showing that there is at present an accumulation of business on the dockets of the courts as now constituted that will take at least twelve months to dispose of, much of which consists of criminal cases in which the defendants are under indictment for violation of Federal laws, and it is important to the due administration of justice that such cases should be disposed of promptly.

From carefully prepared data it is known that in what is now the first district there are pending about 1,560 indictments, and in the second about 540, and in the third about 450.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying substitute.

Mr. JOSEPH. Mr. Chairman, since that report was made, my attention has been called to an official report made by an examiner of the Department of Justice, who was sent to New Mexico for the purpose of examining into the condition of the judicial business in the district which this bill proposes to divide. From his report I will read a short extract.

After a summary of the number of criminal and civil cases in the district, this officer goes on to say:

There being two terms of court a year in each county, the above represents but half of the business, making 1,580 cases to be passed upon in one term, in addition to those in the supreme court. Taking this as an average, the total number of cases passed upon during one year by the judge will amount to about 3,214 cases, making an average of a little over ten cases for each working day of the year.

Upon the organization of the Territory of New Mexico, in 1850, when our population did not exceed 60,000, the Congress of the United States provided for the appointment of three judges for that Territory; and though, in the thirty-six years that have since elapsed, our population, wealth, and business have more than trebled, yet the judicial force in that Territory has not been increased. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that if the system of territorial government is to be continued over that country, justice demands that Congress should provide a judicial system adequate to meet the wants of that great and growing Territory; and I think it but fair and just that Congress should, at this time, meet that demand by the passage of this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How many districts will be provided for under this bill?

Mr. JOSEPH. Four; there are only three now.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was before the House a few days ago, on a request of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. JOSEPH] for unanimous consent for its passage, I very reluctantly interposed a request that the matter be delayed, inasmuch as it did not appear that the amount of business in the Territory required an increased number of judges. I was reluctant to antagonize the gentleman who so well represents that Territory. Three judges have generally been sufficient in each of our Territories, except in Dakota, where the vast extent of the Territory and its enormous population for a Territory have required an increase in recent years in the number of judges, first to four, and finally to five. But, having spent some time in New Mexico, it did not occur to me that so large an increase of business had occurred there within the last few years as would justify an additional judicial force. Hence, at my instance, the Committee on Appropriations addressed to the Department of Justice an inquiry, mainly to ascertain what increase, if any, in the business of the Federal courts in that Territory has occurred during the last two years. I send to the desk the reply which has been received.

The Clerk read as follows:

[File No. 8292, 1886.]

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, December 17, 1886.

SIR: The Attorney-General directs me to say in reply to your last message in relation to the volume of business before the courts of the United States in the Territory of New Mexico, that, owing to the changes in the office of attorney of the United States there, no return of business for that district for the annual report of the Attorney-General was made for the year 1885, but a return was made for 1884, and appears in the report for that year. I inclose a brief summary of the statistics for 1884 and 1886.

Very respectfully,

CECIL CLAY,
Chief Clerk.

Mr. J. C. COURTS,
Clerk of the Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives.

Memorandum of statistics of business in United States courts in New Mexico.

	1884.	1886.
Civil suits to which the United States was a party terminated in year ending June 30	14	1
Civil suits to which the United States was a party pending July 1	34	34
Criminal prosecutions in circuit and district courts of the United States terminated in year ending June 30	120	61
Criminal prosecutions in circuit and district courts of the United States pending July 1	170	78
Amount of judgments in favor of the United States obtained during year ending June 30	$22,497 31
Amount of fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed during year ending June 30	18 50	$1,047 35
Realized from judgments during year
Realized on fines, forfeitures, and penalties imposed during year		337 35

Mr. HOLMAN. That statement manifestly does not present the whole volume of business in that Territory for the years 1884–'86. Yet it does not appear to be entirely confined to the criminal and civil causes to which the United States was a party. It goes, I think from a hasty reading, beyond that. The inquiry addressed to the Department of Justice went to all the business. I present it only for the purpose of showing the unimportance and insufficiency of the data on which we are called upon to act—data showing an actual decline in the business of those courts as far as it goes.

Let me call attention to the report of the inspector for 1885 for a moment. The state of business in the first district is set forth, the number of causes in the several counties of the district, civil and criminal, are given at a given term of the court in 1875, and this inspector merely doubles the number for the purpose of ascertaining the entire business of that district for the current year on the assumption that the entire docket of each county was cleared off each term. This data is wholly unsatisfactory and indefinite.

I regret, Mr. Chairman, very much to see any increase of public offices, unless there is an imperative necessity for that increase. Yet I present any ground of objection to the passage of this bill with reluctance; for no gentleman commands the respect of this House more than the accomplished and able delegate from that Territory [Mr. JOSEPH], and he seems to be very anxious this bill should pass. He thinks it is a necessary and proper measure. Yet gentlemen can see the data furnished by the Department of Justice of the business of the Territory as far as presented do not seem to justify or require the appointment of an additional judge. The business of the United States in those courts, it will be seen by the statement, is actually declining. It would seem almost impossible, considering the character of the population of the Territory of New Mexico—an unusually peaceful, quiet, and orderly people, more crystallized, more established in their habits than the people of most of the Territories—there should be any material increase of business in the courts of that Territory during the last two years. Heretofore no complaints were made of the insufficiency of the courts of the Territory.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point against this bill that the business of the Territory of New Mexico does not require an additional judge.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman should not put me in that position. I said that, taking the number of suits, the business of the Territory would not seem to require the appointment of an additional judge.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will repeat, then, that the gentleman from Indiana on the data there holds the opinion that the business of the courts does not require the appointment of an additional judge. The Department of Justice is of the opinion that it does. The expert of the Department of Justice is also of a similar opinion. Such, also, is the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. HOLMAN. Have you any opinion of the Attorney-General to that effect?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have his report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not a report by him, however.

Mr. SPRINGER. It has been transmitted by him on the request of the Delegate of the Territory of New Mexico as to the condition of business there. He sends the report to this House. The Delegate of the Territory, who has lived there from his birth, is also of opinion that the condition of business in New Mexico does require the appointment of an additional judge. The Committee on the Judiciary is also of that opinion, as well as the Committee on the Territories. These two committees, then, as well as the Delegate of the Territory of New Mexico, and the Department of Justice, are all of the same opinion that this Territory requires this additional judge, and I place their opinion against that of the gentleman from Indiana, although in ordinary cases I have the highest respect for his judgment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman also inform me on what data the committee acted?

Mr. SPRINGER. The Committee on the Territories has acted upon the papers to which I have already referred and the information which has come to us through the sources mentioned; as also upon the facts to which I have endeavored to call attention with reference to the excessive amount of work imposed upon these judicial officers.

Mr. HOLMAN. But have you taken the opinion of the Department of Justice as to the necessity for this additional judge? Have you asked for information in the Department of Justice?

Mr. SPRINGER. We have the report which the gentleman has just called attention to. It shows that these judges must decide each and every working-day an average of ten cases, thereby making it impossible for them to take any recreation whatever; and the failure to pass this bill will be practically denying to the citizens of that territory, one hundred and fifty thousand people, that justice which the law accords to all of its other citizens. In view of the fact that the gentleman from Indiana has been only a few weeks in that Territory, and, notwithstanding the very high regard I have for his opinion, I am convinced that he is not fully advised as to this question. I am satisfied that the information upon which the committee acted is reliable, and, consequently, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend must remember that this paper which I now hold in my hand, the report of the inspector, is no official recommendation whatever from the Attorney-General for this action.

Mr. HILL. Before the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is submitted I send to the desk and ask to have read an extract from the message of the governor of that Territory, to which I hope attention will be given.

The Clerk read as follows:

There are now but three judicial districts for this Territory, and the labor of these courts has become exceedingly onerous. A large part of the year is now occupied by each of the three judges actually in court, leaving them but little time for recuperation or for the preparation of opinions upon the many very important cases that come before them for adjudication. The result is that they are greatly embarrassed in the discharge of their duties, and are often unable to clear the docket in one county before court begins in another; important cases, civil and criminal, are obliged to be held over to a later term, to the great detriment of litigants, and with great wrong and the denial of justice to alleged criminals, who are not infrequently compelled to be in jail for another six months, under accusations of which they claim to be, and sometimes are finally on trial found to be, innocent. Another serious phase of this matter is in the fact that, with but three judges to constitute the supreme court of the Territory, each of the three is required, in order that there may always be a majority for the promulgation of an opinion and the decision of a case, to sit in judgment and reviewal of his own decisions in the court below.

Mr. HILL. Now, I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 142, noes 17.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the fact that the House is manifestly largely in favor of the passage of this bill, I hope my friend from North Carolina will not insist upon the question of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina withdraw the demand for a quorum?

Mr. BENNETT. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BENNETT and Mr. HILL were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 176, noes 8, not voting 80.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9642), had directed him to report the same to the House without amendment, and recommend its passage.

Mr. HILL. I demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and, under the operation thereof, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of acts of the following titles; in which concurrence was requested:

A bill (S. 2516) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at Memphis, Tenn.; and

A bill (S. 2958) to give the assent of Congress to the construction of a free bridge by the county of Davidson, Tennessee, over the Cumberland River.

It further announced the passage of a bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, with amendments, asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the latter bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. VEST as managers of said conference on its part.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HILL. I now call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7217) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HILL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. HILL. This bill was read at length when this subject was considered by the House on a previous day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill had better be again read.

Mr. STRUBLE. It has been read once.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that on the 1st day of May when the House was in Committee of the Whole it was read. It was also considered on June 3.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not insist upon the reading.

Mr. HILL. I yield the remainder of the hour to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], in opposition to the bill.

Mr. BARNES. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that I am entitled to more than the remainder of this hour, having presented the minority report.

Mr. HILL. I can not yield you more time than I have.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Georgia does not desire to accept the time remaining of the gentleman from Ohio, the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia in his own right as soon as the gentleman from Ohio has exhausted his time.

Mr. HILL. I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia thirty minutes, if that will be satisfactory.

Mr. BARNES. I am unwilling to accept the time in that way. I am entitled to it as a matter of right.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Georgia, if I can have his attention, that the gentleman from Ohio occupy such time as he thinks proper now, in view of the fact that the Chair has stated he would afterwards recognize the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HILL. But I do not desire to occupy the time now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair learns by reference to the RECORD that the gentleman from Ohio has but eight minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. HILL. But that came out of the time under the special order, and I do not understand that it applies to this morning hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the fact the bill is called up in the morning hour would not alter the status of the question in that respect.

Mr. HILL. Then, as I understand it, the gentleman from Georgia would be entitled to an hour in his own right.

The CHAIRMAN. Whenever the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HILL. Then I hope the Chair will recognize the gentleman from Georgia now.

[Mr. BARNES withheld his remarks for revision. They may be found on page 334.]

Mr. SPRINGER. As the consideration hour has expired, I will move, with the permission of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7217) had come to no resolution thereon.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. MORRISON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

Mr. MCKINLEY. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 149, nays 154, not voting 19; as follows:

During the roll-call

The SPEAKER said: The Clerk will call my name.

Mr. CARLISLE'S name was called, and he voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KING] is absent by leave of the House. It was impossible to procure a pair. If present, he would vote aye.

Mr. BOYLE. My colleague [Mr. STORM] is unable to be present on account of important business. If present, he would vote to go into committee.

Pairs were announced as follows:

Mr. SCOTT with Mr. LITTLE, until further notice. On the tariff bill Mr. SCOTT would vote for consideration and Mr. LITTLE against it.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. WHITING. If present, on the tariff bill Mr. MITCHELL would vote for consideration and Mr. WHITING against it.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, on the tariff bill. Mr. GLOVER would vote for consideration and Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, against it.

Mr. STORM with Mr. HENLEY, on the tariff bill. If present, Mr. STORM would vote for consideration and Mr. HENLEY against it.

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, on all political questions until further notice.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The nays have it, and the motion is not agreed to. [Applause.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the special order, which is the bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, in May last, by order of the House, two days were fixed for the consideration of certain bills reported by the Committee on Pacific Railroads. One of these bills, and one of great public importance, was partially considered and the previous question was ordered on its engrossment and third reading. I refer to the bill to adjust the indebtedness of the Pacific railroads to the United States.

The terms of the order provided that the committee shall be allowed two days for consideration of these bills. When it is taken up, and that bill is in condition where the previous question is ordered on its engrossment and third reading, I do not think it will take much time to dispose of it. It is a matter of great importance to the people and the Government, and I ask to call it up.

Mr. HERBERT. This bill for the consolidation of bureaus of the Navy Department is the regular order and has priority. It is entitled to it by the terms of the order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The language of the two orders is precisely the same. In each case a day was set apart for consideration and to be continued from day to day. In the case of the bill called up by the gentleman from Georgia the time fixed by the vote of the House was an earlier day than that fixed by the bill called up by the gentleman from Alabama. And therefore the Chair holds the question must be first put on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia. Does the gentleman from Alabama raise the question of consideration against it?

Mr. HERBERT. I do.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will not press the bill, but will allow it to go over until after the holidays. If it is pressed this evening without affording time for its consideration, I give notice I will resist its passage with all the power which the rules of the House will give me.

The SPEAKER. Questions relating to the priority of business are not debatable.

The Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Georgia, and against which the gentleman from Alabama raises the question of consideration.

Mr. HERBERT. A vote against that proposition will enable the bill for the consolidation of the bureaus of the Navy Department to be taken up?

The SPEAKER. That will be the effect if the House so orders.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I hope that will be done.

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. HERBERT. This is a very important matter, and I hope the House will order its consideration.

Mr. CRISP. I hope the House will not do it. This is a very much more important matter than the reorganization of the Navy——

The SPEAKER. This is not debatable.

Mr. CRISP. A question involving as it does the collection of $109,000,000 that is due or will be due the United States.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is rather a question of extending indefinitely the payment of that amount.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8318) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of the claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays on this motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. REAGAN. I want to ask permission of the House to record my vote on the motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider revenue bills. I was not on the floor at the time; but inasmuch as my vote will not change the result I ask the privilege of recording it.

The SPEAKER. The rules of the House expressly provide that it shall not be in order for the Chair to entertain even a request for unanimous consent. The gentleman can state, however, how he would have voted.

Mr. REAGAN. If present, I would have voted to consider the tariff bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The only question pending is the question of consideration; and if the House will be in order the Chair will submit the question.

Mr. SPRINGER. In view of the fact that great confusion is prevailing on the floor, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; the House divided and there were—ayes, 117, noes 43.

Mr. HAMMOND, Mr. HERBERT, and others demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 2 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 140) to provide that judges of the United States circuit and district courts shall reduce their instructions to juries to writing in all States wherein by the laws thereof State judges are required to do so, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. FRYE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3014) to fix the charge for passports at $1, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance; which was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3020) providing for the resurvey of certain public lands in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3021) granting a pension to M. T. Lindsey, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 3022) to encourage co-operation and to provide for the formation of associations in the District of Columbia for the purpose of conducting any lawful business and dividing the profits among the members thereof; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. STANFORD. I ask that the bill may lie on the table, and at the proper time I shall submit some remarks upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table for the present.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3023) to authorize the Kansas, Texas, and Southwestern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Hays Military Reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3024) granting a pension to L. J. McGoffin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] is absent from the Senate attending the funeral of a friend. He has requested me to introduce for him a bill.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BOWEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC SHIP-RAILWAY.

Mr. VEST. I ask leave to submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me as a substitute for the bill (S. 2288) to incorporate the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway Company, and for other purposes; and I ask the Senate to indulge me in a few words in regard to the bill before I submit a motion.

The original bill, together with the substitute, refers to the subject of the inter-oceanic ship-railway, as it is known. The substitute eliminates from the original bill all the provisions in regard to a guarantee on the part of the United States Government, and provides simply for a naked incorporation of a company looking to private subscriptions in this country and in Europe for the purpose of accumulating or getting the means to construct the road.

I ask that the substitute be printed; and I move that the bill to which it relates be made a special order for the second Tuesday in January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks that the substitute be printed, and that the bill to which it relates be made a special order ——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without a reference?

Mr. VEST. The original bill was reported from the Committee on Commerce. This substitute strikes out all of the original bill except the naked proposition to incorporate. That subject has been before the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is intended to be proposed as an amendment, I understand.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course, as a substitute by way of amendment. The subject has been considered by the Committee on Commerce and reported, and all the objectionable features have been stricken out of the bill by the substitute. I want it taken up and disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves that the bill referred to by him be made a special order for the second Tuesday in January. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to (two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative).

RAILROAD RECEIVERS.

Mr. GEORGE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the powers of the Federal courts wherein any receiver for a railroad has been appointed to authorize or permit such receiver to disregard or violate the laws of the State wherein such railroad is operated regulating charges for the transportation of persons or property on the same, so far as such charges are made for transportation beginning and ending in such State, and also to inquire into the necessity for any legislation on that subject, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to have the resolution printed and lie on the table. I may submit some remarks in reference to it at some future time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table for the present, if there be no objection.

USE OF COLUMBIA RIVER APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Whereas it is alleged in the public prints of Oregon that a steam-vessel known as "The Cascades of the Columbia, United States Engineers," was heretofore built under the direction of the United States engineer then in charge of work at the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War at a cost of about $70,000, and paid for out of money heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of continuing the construction of the canal and locks at that point; and

Whereas it is further alleged in such public prints that such vessel is not used in carrying on said work, but is used as a transport and tender to the jetty works now being constructed opposite to the Saint Helen's Bar in the Columbia River, some 80 miles distant from said canal and locks; and

Whereas it is further alleged in such public prints that a steam-launch, now alleged to be used as an excursion boat for the army officers at Vancouver, Washington Territory, was also constructed under the direction of the United States engineers and paid for by a misappropriation of money heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of constructing said canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia; and

Whereas it is further alleged that the cost of maintaining these boats has been and is about $10,000 a year, which sum annually, it is alleged, has been paid out of the funds heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of carrying on said work at the canal and locks aforesaid: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate at his earliest practicable convenience whether any such steam-vessel known as, licensed, or called "The Cascades of the Columbia, United States Engineers," or any steam-launch, has at any time heretofore, and, if so, when, been built on the Columbia River for use on said river, under the authority or direction or with the approval of the Chief of Engineers or Secretary of War, and, if so, for what purpose was such vessel or vessels built, the date when commenced and when completed, under what authority constructed, the cost of the same and each thereof, if more than one, and out of what appropriation paid for; also in what particular service such vessel or vessels have been employed since their completion, at what particular place or places and how long at each place employed: also the cost and expense of maintaining such vessel or vessels per annum since completed, and from what fund or funds have such cost and expense been paid.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the resolution go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution being objected to, will lie over.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Objection being made, I ask that the resolution be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. In connection with the same subject-matter, I offer another resolution, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document, and go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon offers a resolution and asks that it be printed in the RECORD and go over with the preceding resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read if it is to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRIS. Unless there is some special reason, why not let it be printed as a document and lie on the table with the other resolution?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged in the public prints of Oregon that the wages of the employés at the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River were, by order of Capt. Charles F. Powell, United States engineer in charge of said work, either under the direction of or approved by the Secretary of War, reduced recently to such an extent that great numbers of them quit work and were hired by the Northern Pacific Terminal Company, a corporation alleged to be owned jointly by the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and the Northern Pacific Railroad Company; it being further alleged that the wages of some sixty stone-cutters on such work were so reduced to $1.44 per day for eight hours' work, while from this sum they were compelled to pay $4.50 per week for board and lodging to the person keeping the boarding-house at said canal and locks: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate at his earliest convenience as to the truth or falsity of such allegations; also what wages are being paid stone-cutters and other laborers employed on said canal and locks, the number of hours exacted for a day's work, and whether such wages have been reduced since October 10 last, and, if so, to what extent; also, whether any such stone-cutters or other laborers, and, if so, what number so employed have quit work by reason of any such reduction of wages and when, and have their places been supplied; and what effect, if any, has such reduction of wages, if any such reduction has been made, had on the prosecution of such work.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I give notice that I shall to-morrow, or at the earliest convenience of the Senate thereafter, move to proceed to the consideration of both these resolutions.

MAJOR POWELL'S REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. HOAR. I ask for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the report of Major Powell to the Secretary of the Interior in relation to Senate bill No. 1907, to facilitate the settlement and develop the resources of the Territory of Alaska, and to open an overland commercial route between the United States, Asiatic Russia, and Japan, be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I object to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. HOAR. It is merely a resolution to print a very valuable paper in the ordinary way (not an extra number) for the use of the Senate. Is there any objection to it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] objected to it.

THE SUGAR TRADE.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was read:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President is requested to enter upon negotiations with the governments of the several principal sugar producing countries of the world with a view of securing mutual agreements by which the United States shall agree to admit at its ports free of duty, sugar and molasses the produce of such countries or their colonies, when transported in vessels under the flag of either of the contracting parties, and upon which no export tax or other export charges shall have been levied, upon the condition that such governments shall agree to admit into their respective countries or their sugar-producing colonies, free of duties, the agricultural, mineral, and manufactured products of the United States.

Mr. ALDRICH. I ask that the resolution lie on the table with a view of calling it up for action at a later period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table, and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8346) authorizing the employment of mail messengers in the postal service, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. T. B. WARD, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. WAKEFIELD, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also requested the Senate to return to the House of Representatives the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 362) granting a pension to James H. King;

A bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to General Benjamin F. Kelly;

A bill (S. 1660) granting a pension to Samuel E. Tracy;

A bill (S. 1826) granting a pension to Andrew J. Burrell;

A bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide;

A bill (S. 1897) granting a pension to Alexander Trimble;

A bill (S. 2372) for the relief of Mary McMahon.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5194) directing the Quartermaster-General to settle with the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 5326) for the relief of E. B. Dawson;

A bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 9642) to provide for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of the Territory of New Mexico.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (S. 54) be complied with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return to that House of the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the request of the House be complied with. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the special order for to-morrow, being the Pacific Railroad funding bill (S. 1200) be postponed to the second Monday in January with the same rights that it now has.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the special order for to-morrow, being the Pacific Railroad funding bill, be postponed to and continued as a special order on the same conditions as now until the second Monday in January.

Mr. EUSTIS. What day of the month will that be?

Mr. HOAR. The second Monday of January will be the 10th.

Mr. EUSTIS. I wanted to make a special order myself for that day.

Mr. HOAR. The special orders stand in their order. This matter is a special order for to-morrow. A great deal of the time of the Senate may be saved by this postponement. I hope the subject may be taken up in the other House and disposed of one way or the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the order will be made. The Chair hears none.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD GRANT.

Mr. EUSTIS. The bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge, and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes, was on my motion, made the special order for to-day. For the same reason that I asked its postponement previously, the absence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who, I understand, desires to be present when the bill is considered, I ask that it be made the special order for the second Wednesday in January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana moves that the bill indicated by him be postponed to and made the special order for the second Wednesday in January, with the same rights as now.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds of the Senators present voting in the affirmative.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. SPOONER was on his own motion excused from further service upon the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

Mr. MANDERSON was on his own motion excused from further service upon the Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the President pro tempore be authorized to fill the vacancies now existing in the different committees.

The motion was agreed to by unanimous consent.

TEMPORARY OCCUPATION OF STREETS.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of streets by a railway for the purpose of transporting material to fill about the base of the Washington Monument.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to call attention for a single moment to the necessity for immediate action not only here, but elsewhere upon this bill, if it is to have any effect at all.

In the sundry civil appropriation act of last session there was an appropriation of $57,000 for the completion of the Washington Monument, and among other things for the filling of a portion of what is known as Babcock Lake, to give greater security to the foundation of the monument. The commission in charge of the work, I understand, have advertised for bids for making that fill, and the cost of making it will depend to a very large extent upon the facilities given the contractors to do the filling. It is therefore important that the commissioners be clothed with the power to give permission to lay these temporary tracks for that purpose. That is all I desire to say, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BESSIE S. GILMORE.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1189) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to redeem United States 5 per cent. coupon bond numbered 38712, for $1,000, act of July 14, 1870, with interest thereon from the 1st of August, 1876, to the 12th of August, 1881; also one

United States 5 per cent. coupon bond numbered 54191, for $500, act of July 14, 1870, with interest thereon from the 1st of August, 1876, to the 21st of May, 1881; also one United States 5 per cent. 10-40 coupon bond numbered 28253, for $500, act of March 3, 1864, with interest thereon from September 1, 1876, to July 18, 1879, in favor of Bessie S. Gilmore, who claims to have been the owner thereof on September 14, 1876, at which time it is alleged they were stolen from her, and who further claims that they were afterward destroyed by the thief or thieves, upon Bessie S. Gilmore furnishing to the Treasury Department a bond of indemnity, with good and sufficient sureties, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to secure the United States against loss or damage in consequence of the redemption of the bonds.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, a single word. These bonds belonged to a lady. They were lost more than ten years ago, and there is provision for security on the part of the lady to the Government. The bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Finance.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not intend to contest the passage of the bill, but I think it is a very dangerous precedent. I believe the committee has heretofore reported probably one or two similar cases. I desire to say, as I said in those cases, that I think it is an exceedingly dangerous precedent for Congress to undertake to pass upon the loss of coupon bonds, and to authorize their payment. It is nearly as dangerous as it would be to pass upon the loss of greenbacks, and reimburse persons for their alleged loss.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PATTISON & CALDWELL.

Mr. BECK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1813) for the relief of Pattison & Caldwell.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The preamble recites that in an attempt to extinguish the fire by which the distillery of Pattison & Caldwell, located at Hamilton, Ohio, was destroyed, water was thrown into, ran into, and became intermixed with certain distilled spirits then in the drawing-off cisterns in the cistern-room of the distillery; that by reason of the intermixture the spirits were reduced twenty degrees below proof; and that, under that provision of law by which a tax of 90 cents is imposed on each and every wine-gallon of distilled spirits when below proof, Pattison & Caldwell were required to pay, and did pay, internal-revenue taxes upon the spirits to the amount of $510.30 in excess of the sum they would have been required to pay had there been no such intermixture.

The bill proposes to pay to Pattison & Caldwell so much, not exceeding $510.30, as it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue they have paid as internal-revenue taxes on the spirits in excess of what they would have been required to pay thereon had there been no such intermixture of water and reduction of proof.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that a similar bill passed the Senate unanimously at the last Congress, but it was not reached in the other House. It has now been passed by the other House, and reported unanimously by the Committee on Finance of the Senate, and it is recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in a written report.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WILLIAM B. ISAACS & CO.

Mr. MAHONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 67) for the relief of William B. Isaacs & Co.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the resolving clause and to insert:

That the Court of Claims is hereby empowered to hear the claim of William B. Isaacs & Co., and to proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act to afford assistance and relief to Congress and the Executive Departments in the investigation of claims and demands against the Government," and report to Congress the facts in the case and the amount of the claim, including any facts bearing upon the question whether there has been delay or laches in presenting such claim, and any facts tending to excuse such delay or laches.

Mr. MAHONE. I am advised that the Committee on Claims are willing to withdraw the amendment. On further consideration they prefer the joint resolution as it came from the other House. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made the report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on Claims.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the text proposed to be stricken out be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The original joint resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the petitions and claim of William B. Isaacs & Company for certain assets claimed to belong to them, as successors in interest of certain banks of Virginia, described therein as having been taken by the Government of the United States in the month of August, 1865, with the accompanying papers now on file in the House of Representatives, being Miscellaneous Document No. 5, second session Forty-fifth Congress, be referred to the Court of Claims for judicial ascertainment of the facts; that wherever papers or affidavits are made or executed by persons deceased, not interested in the cause, they shall be considered as evidence by the court and given such weight as they may deserve, but wherever the affidavits are of living persons the evidence shall be taken the usual way, subject to cross-examination on behalf of the United States; that the court shall fully adjudicate upon the rights of the parties and the ownership of the property described in the petitions, and, as matter of law, to whom it should be paid, and report said findings of fact and law to Congress for consideration. The said petitioners shall not be barred of relief in the said court by reason of any act of limitations.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to have the Senator reporting the joint resolution explain the difference between the measure as passed by the other House and the proposed amendment of the Senate committee.

Mr. HOAR. The measure as passed by the other House authorizes the Court of Claims to render a judgment, and authorizes them to act upon the affidavits of deceased persons, giving them such weight as they see fit. Quite a number of the witnesses are deceased. The committee preferred in the first instance to send it to the Court of Claims under the Bowman act simply; but on being satisfied by the Senator from Virginia and from other sources that that would in this case operate an injustice, we concluded to let it stand as the House of Representatives passed it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let me ask one question. Under the amendment proposed by the committee referring the claim under the Bowman act there would be no judgment in the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOAR. It would come back to Congress for consideration as an original case.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now, the whole question as to the propriety or impropriety of these parties being paid this money is taken out of Congress and left to the court?

Mr. HOAR. It leaves it to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MAHONE. They must come back again, as I understand the bill; the case has to come back to Congress for an appropriation.

Mr. HOAR. Yes; the original resolution only authorizes the court to make an adjudication and express its opinion as a matter of law, and report said findings of fact and law to Congress for consideration. It is under the principle of the Bowman act. It does not give the Court of Claims a right to adjudicate or settle the question.

Mr. COCKRELL. All right.

Mr. HOAR. That is the original resolution, I now remember. It has been some time since my attention was drawn to the matter.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 2998) granting a pension to Henry Mericle;
A bill (H. R. 3931) to grant a pension to Nancy Gunsales;
A bill (H. R. 7352) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Randles;
A bill (H. R. 7689) granting a pension to Caroline C. McNair;
A bill (H. R. 7699) granting a pension to E. A. McFadden;
A bill (H. R. 8227) granting a pension to Seth Weldy;
A bill (H. R. 8258) granting a pension to Waitie F. Harris;
A bill (H. R. 8949) granting a pension to Luke Horobin;
A bill (H. R. 9167) granting a pension to Joseph F. Kirkhart;
A bill (H. R. 9169) to place on the pension-roll the name of Charles T. Wornom; and A bill (H. R. 7540) to increase the pension of Franklin Sweet.

The above eleven pension bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MILITARY SITE ON LAKE MICHIGAN.

Mr. CULLOM. During the last session of Congress there was a special order made of the joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill., introduced by my colleague [Mr. LOGAN], who is now detained at his home by illness. He is very anxious, so he sends me word, that the joint resolution shall be disposed of before the holidays. There was some opposition to it by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] at the close of the last session, but, as I understand from him, he has now withdrawn his opposition on information which he has received.

I ask that the joint resolution be taken up and disposed of at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands, &c., near Chicago, Ill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. CULLOM. This measure has been recommended by the Secretary of War and also by General Sheridan and General Terry, who were appointed to go there, make examination, and report. The Senator from Kentucky made some opposition to the passage of the joint resolution at the last session, but, as I understand, he now has information which justifies him in withdrawing his objections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment pending to the joint resolution, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "land," it is proposed to insert "when the State of Illinois shall cede jurisdiction of the same to the United States;" so as to make the joint resolution read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept deed and conveyance of a certain tract of land when the State of Illinois shall cede jurisdiction of the same to the United States, described as follows: Known as the Highwood tract, in Lake County, Illinois, containing 598½ acres, lying on Lake Michigan, north of the city of Chicago, and distant 25 miles; this land being a tract donated by the Commercial Club of Chicago (represented by John A. Doane, C. B. Farwell, and Alexander P. McClurg) for military purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Perhaps it is just to myself to say that when the joint resolution was under consideration at the last session I objected for the purpose of obtaining information on the subject. I have since taken all the pains I could, both when in Chicago and otherwise, to see whether it was right or not. I have a letter from one of the best informed men in the country stating that the site is a very valuable one, a portion of which letter I think I ought to read:

Permitted by the changed aspect of our Indian affairs, and in accordance with these ideas, General Sheridan has already commenced to bring the troops together in large masses, but there are very few posts in existence that are sufficiently large to permit such concentration; he is hampered, therefore, in the execution of his plans by the necessity of building or enlarging posts so that they will accommodate the garrisons proposed. Moreover, nearly all our posts except the artillery posts on the seaboard are situated west of the Mississippi and Missouri Rivers, and surely it would be both wise and just to establish a proper proportion of the Army in the central and eastern sections of the country. It would be neither wise nor just to leave the National Government in those portions of the country which contain the great mass of our population and of our wealth without the means of promptly performing the duties imposed on it by section 4 of Article IV of the Constitution. I could hardly discuss here the question of what points east of the Mississippi should be selected as positions for troops, but there are a few places that I think would naturally come to the mind of every one. Atlanta, Ga., has already been selected as a site for a post of ten companies, and an appropriation has been made by Congress to put up the necessary buildings. Cincinnati, or what is the same thing, Newport, Ky., is another. Chicago is a third, and the most important of the three, though neither place could be considered as the rival of the others. Chicago is probably the most important railroad center in the country; from it troops could be sent with the utmost facility and speed to every point of the compass. Its markets for meats, both fresh and salted, and for breadstuffs and grain are unsurpassed, if equaled. The prices of imported goods are but little above those prevailing on the seacoast. Fuel, water-borne from Pennsylvania, is laid down at rates far below those prevailing at most of our existing posts. For forage the proposed post would have the whole of the shore of Lake Michigan to draw from. I doubt whether there is any place in the country that combines so many advantages, military and economical, as a station for troops.

The land which is offered the Government is a most admirable site for a military post. It is on the shore of the lake about 25 miles above the city, and is nearly a square mile in extent. Its general elevation is about 75 feet above the water, and thorough drainage could be effected with great ease and little expense. There can be no doubt of its salubrity. Its surface is partly covered by woods and partly open, and is diversified by ravines and plateaus, the latter affording ample sites for the buildings of a post and for parade and formal drill grounds; the former giving excellent opportunity for instruction in the movement of troops in rough ground, such as they must encounter in actual service.

Two railroads brush along the edges of the tract, giving direct communication with both Chicago and Milwaukee; and if all railroad communication should be obstructed there would still be water communication with both cities and with every other point in the lake system.

The writer gives other very good reasons why this resolution should pass, which I do not care to detain the Senate by reading. I have concluded not only not to oppose, but to favor the passage of the resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1647, being the bill (S. 2806). It is a very short bill, and will only take a moment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces, for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was agreed to.

THE JEANNETTE SURVIVORS.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1634, being the bill (H. R. 1659).

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette, and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the Arctic seas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment in section 3, line 21, after the word "death" to insert:

Provided further, That the surviving child of Henry D. Warren, one of the crew of the Jeannette, shall in like manner be entitled to receive twelve months' pay, and also the amount found due said deceased Warren at the time of his death; and that no moneys shall be paid the widow of said Warren under this act.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to know from the Senator in charge of the bill why that provision is put in.

Mr. HALE, Owing to the peculiar circumstances. The wife of the deceased sailor left him in that case and contracted a marriage, which of course was illegal, and therefore the representative of the family desired that the money should go to the child.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask another question in regard to the general provision here. How much will be paid under section 3 to the heirs of the parties named in section 2, "a sum equal to twelve months' pay?" About how much would that be? What was the annual pay of these parties, respectively, or about what sum?

Mr. HALE. That depends of course on the rate of pay of the officers and of the men at the time. I can not give that exactly, of course.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will be an amount equal to the regular annual salary they were drawing.

Mr. HALE. Yes; equal to the annual pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. I observe in the preamble a recitation that the steamer Jeannette was "engaged in an exploring expedition by authority of Congress and under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy." I suppose it implies a degree of ignorance for which I ought to feel ashamed, but my impression was that the Jeannette was a private vessel sent out by the beneficence and by the enterprise of citizens of the Republic. It may be that I am mistaken, and that the recitation of this preamble is correct. Of course it is put in there because, I assume, that unless this ship was a Government ship, authorized by act of Congress and under the control of officers of the Government, this bill would be without precedent.

It is with some trepidation that I address myself to the chairman of the committee for some information upon this point. But unless my memory is at fault, the Jeannette never was in the service of the United States, properly speaking. I trust that at least before we are called upon to agree to the preamble the Senator from Maine will inform us, so that we may know definitely whether we are acting in accordance with precedent or whether we are making a precedent. If the former, I have nothing to say. If the latter, I should not hesitate to observe that I think it would be exceedingly detrimental for the Government of the United States to establish the precedent that in regard to all these various expeditions in the north seas and elsewhere, in case of calamity or loss, we are to be called upon to make these great donations to the survivors.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Kansas has called attention to that point, because the explanation is very plain and clear.

The Jeannette was adopted by Congress as an exploring ship. Her officers and crew were officers and enlisted men, and were sent by the Navy Department into these far northern seas upon the Asiatic side. I do not need to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas or others here to the painful circumstances of her loss and of the expedition. The whole subject was investigated by the House committee, and I will say by the way that this is a House bill which has passed that body, and in the last Congress was investigated by the late Senator Miller, of California, who says in his report:

In recommending this bill, or some similar measure of relief for the survivors of the officers and enlisted men of the Jeannette, and for the widows and children of those who succumbed to the privations and fatigues to which they were subjected in consequence of the loss of that vessel, I desire to state that the provision for the relief of the survivors is not intended as a gratuity, but as a reimbursement of the losses sustained by them, and is in accordance with similar action—in the cases of the Polaris, the Huron, and other vessels wrecked or lost at sea.

This is in reply to the suggestion about the precedent—

The bill is as it came from the House, with the single amendment to which attention has been called by the Senator from Missouri, and is in the line of precedents. It is a painful case, one of great hardship and loss, and these beneficiaries have waited for years. I should be glad if the Senate would now pass the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

WINDSOR HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1878, being the bill (S. 2761). This is a bill to incorporate a hotel company in this District. I have been, in general, opposed to bills granting acts of incorporation for private purposes when the powers could be obtained under the general law upon that subject; but having examined the statutes I found that the power to incorporate for this purpose does not exist, and therefore the committee reported in favor of the charter asked for by the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2761) to incorporate the Windsor Hotel Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with an amendment striking out section 8, as follows:

SEC. 8. That the real estate of the said corporators on which they shall erect a building or buildings for a public hotel shall be exempt from taxation for a period of ten years from the time of completion of the building or buildings and their opening to the public for occupation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Is that section stricken out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is to strike it out; and it has been agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is all right.

Mr. VEST. There is one provision of this bill to which I will call attention. I do not know that I shall oppose it; but I do not like it. This company is authorized to issue $1,500,000 worth of bonds. These bonds may be put upon the market and sold throughout the United States; and unless this enterprise is successful there will be a loss on the bonds, and the next thing we shall hear that the Government of the United States having created this corporation and these bonds having been sold and put in the hands of innocent holders, we ought to make good the bonds.

I much prefer that there should be a provision in the bill to remove that impression. If the bill is only to make a corporation I have not any objection; but that feature of it I confess I am apprehensive about. There was the Freedman's Bank, for which the Government was in no way responsible, but now we are called on to pay a million dollars because we created that corporation. Whenever the Government of the United States goes into the work of creating corporations the holders of bonds or securities of the corporation seem to think that the Government ought not to have created the corporation unless it intended to make good any loss resulting from it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was going to suggest that that perhaps could be remedied by a provision that the stockholders of the corporation should be personally liable for the obligations and debts of the corporation. I believe that ought to be done. If we incorporate this company, which I have no objection to with proper provisions, especially as we give them power to create debts and issue bonds, there ought to be a provision making the stockholders of the corporation personally responsible for every liability of the corporation. If we incorporate this company simply as a corporation, the individual stockholders may not be bound for the debts of the corporation; but we ought not to create a corporation of this kind without having a special provision that the corporators themselves shall be personally liable for all the obligations and liabilities of the company.

Mr. ALLISON. The stockholders?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The stockholders. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that a provision of that kind ought to be incorporated in the bill, especially if we give to this corporation the power to issue bonds. I shall certainly support a provision of that kind. I have not the bill before me, or I would prepare an amendment of that character to require the stockholders to be personally liable for the debts and obligations of the corporation.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move an amendment in accordance with the suggestion of my colleague, which I believe would come in properly at the end of section 3:

Provided, That the United States shall in no manner be responsible, directly or indirectly, for any bonds, obligations, or other liabilities of said company.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please reduce his amendment to writing.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Missouri, on a little reflection, will see the unwisdom of incorporating a provision of that kind in this bill. By implication there would be an inference, if that were adopted, that there might possibly be some liability on the part of the Government of the United States. Everybody knows that there is not and can not be any such obligation, and I should regret to see any amendment agreed to that would imply, even by the most indirect and remote assumption, that such liability could exist.

I may say in passing that the incorporators named in this bill are well known gentlemen of character and responsibility, and they would not appear here if they could have become incorporated under the general statute permitting incorporations in the District of Columbia.

So far as I am concerned the obnoxious provision of the bill has been struck out, which was contained in the last section of the bill; and I am willing to agree to any limitation that any Senator thinks would be wise and proper. But there can not be any supposition that the United States would be directly or indirectly liable for any of the bonds or stock or other indebtedness of this corporation. If it is intended to impose personal liability upon the stockholders, it should be done by a direct proposition to that effect, and not by a negative proposition declaring that the United States is not liable.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, in my judgment there is an objection to the bill in that it is not required that the investors, the shareholders, shall expend any definite sum themselves before they issue these bonds. They may have bought a piece of ground for $100,000 and expended $200,000 in commencing a building, and are then perfectly at liberty under this proposed law to issue bonds for a million and a half. It seems to me a device in order to permit the building of a large and expensive hotel by the issue of bonds. I believe that to be unjust. It would be nearer just, in my judgment, if the bill required these promoters to have expended, say $1,000,000, before they should be permitted to issue, say $750,000 in bonds. I do not specially care what the limitation is. They should expend a larger sum than they issue bonds for; otherwise there may be no security back of the bonds. There may be a million and a half of dollars in bonds out with a million dollars of expenditure; and people buying the bonds in perfect innocence and good faith will find when they foreclose that they have not got much property to seize upon. It is too much like the schemes for building many railroads: the shareholders are scattered and the innocent purchasers of bonds away off are those who suffer the loss eventually.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, it strikes me that section 3 should be amended so that these corporators could proceed without placing upon the community bonds that would not eventually be paid. The third section provides that—said bonds to be issued shall not exceed $1,500,000.

I move, after the words "shall not exceed $1,500,000," to insert "nor shall they exceed three-fourths of the capital stock actually paid in money."

Mr. HAWLEY. Very good.

Mr. ALLISON. Then the stockholders will be obliged to put up their own money as against the money they borrow. It will then read:

And said bonds to be issued shall not exceed $1,500,000, nor shall they exceed three-fourths of the capital stock actually paid in money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is first in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon; I did not know he had one pending.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the Senator's be acted on first.

Mr. VEST. What is the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to section 3 "nor shall they exceed three-fourths of the capital stock actually paid in money at any time."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt about these gentlemen being of high character. Nobody is reflecting on the gentlemen who are to compose this corporation, but I presume the corporators of the Freedmen's Bank and Trust Company were at the time that company was incorporated gentlemen of just as high character and standing, and yet we now see that it is attempted to impose upon the Government not only a moral but a legal obligation for all deficits of that institution. I say very frankly that I do not believe myself there is either justice or right in that proposition, and I shall vote against it, but I think the chances are overwhelmingly in favor of the passage of such a bill.

Now, here we create this corporation, and we send them out with bonds on the market with probably a special clause in them, "incorporated by special act so and so," and representations may be made—I do not say that these gentlemen would make them—that they were the same kind of bonds with those of the District of Columbia, and the United States assumed those bonds issued by the authorities of the District. Therefore, my amendment is simply to exclude the possibility that the United States recognizes any moral obligation in any way.

Mr. INGALLS. Let me ask the Senator from Missouri if this would not be acceptable to him, using substantially the language of the national-banking act?

The stockholders shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all debts, contracts, and engagements to the extent of the amount of their stock herein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such stock.

Mr. COCKRELL. I presume that would probably include the idea, as no one pretends that under the banking laws the United States is responsible.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that, if that will be agreeable to the Senator from Missouri and obviate the objection he has, as an amendment to section 2.

Mr. COCKRELL. I withdraw my amendment, then, and accept the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri is withdrawn, and the Senator from Kansas submits an amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas to consider whether, after all, in accepting that amendment he is not yielding more than is just or reasonable. Why should there not be a hotel corporation in the city of Washington, in which, with an amount of indebtedness and capital limited as the amendment of the Senator from Iowa has limited this, stockholders are not individually responsible for debts at all? The creditors who trust the corporation will know that; they will look to its property alone. In my experience, which is not very small in this class of subjects, these provisions which make stockholders personally liable for the debts of corporations fall with great severity and cruelty as a rule on women, on minors, on trust estates, on aged persons who have got past the activities of business.

It is necessary for the sake of the protection of our circulation that this clause should exist in our national-banking act, and I have no fault to find with it there; but it is one of the most cruel provisions of law on the statute-book. The few instances of the failures of national banks have come down with ruin on poor people—women—people who can not take care of themselves in such failures. They do not apply to railroad corporations. They do not apply to banks in the States usually. For myself I believe it is utterly unjust and unreasonable to put such a clause in this bill, and for one I shall vote against it.

Mr. CALL. I agree with the Senator from Massachusetts. The principle of association or incorporation performs so large a part in the business economies of this day that it would be unwise to cripple it by requiring individual responsibility on the part of the stockholders of a corporation. Where the legislature has established proper guards in the creation of a corporate body, and has provided for a proper responsibility in the payment of its stock, it has done all that it is necessary to do. Of course no one can be responsible for the management of the corporation as an individual. It may fail, and the public looks to its assets which were the basis of their credits. I think that it would be eminently unwise and impolitic in many respects to attach a condition of individual liability to those who have honestly put their money into it, and impose upon them a responsibility which they can not properly discharge, for they can not see and know as to the business management of the corporation. It is simply saying, in addition to their spending their money for their stock, that they shall be further liable for the result of the enterprise. We shall have but few corporations if the stockholders are to be individually liable for their debts. We can not estimate the widespread ruin which would result from this principle when applied to railroad or other corporations whose stock is held throughout the country generally, much of it by estates of deceased persons, the property of widows and minors.

Mr. HAWLEY. But, Mr. President, while I share in the gentleman's sympathy for shareholders, I am thinking also that there may be innocent people who have invested in bonds and who have a right to say that the shareholders ought to have taken better care of the property.

I shall vote for the amendment suggested by the Senator from Kansas. I know it is severer than is ordinarily imposed on business corporations, but I would rather be severe here in the District of Columbia. I would rather the legislation should not be loose in these matters. I think of the investors in the bonds when I vote for it.

Mr. HOAR. If that is to be done, it seems to me the true and just thing to do is to make the officers of the corporation, the directors, or the president and treasurer, or the agents, liable for debts contracted in their time. But the liability of shareholders results in this way: the men who are really to blame, the active business men who understand all about the law, get out of the way and sell their stock if bankruptcy or failure is coming, and the real liability falls upon the innocent investors in stock who bought the stock of an incorporation that they supposed was good, or some trustee or agent has bought it for them, and everybody who is to blame gets out of the way, and the widow or orphan or the cestui que trust suffers.

I think if the doctrine of the Senator from Connecticut is to be carried out, it should be by an amendment making the officers of the corporation liable for the debts contracted in their time to a certain extent—the amount of the existing capital stock, or the value of the assets, or whatever other standard should be adopted.

Mr. CHACE. If the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the committee, will look at this bill, I think he will perceive that there may be a method adopted of protecting the bondholders more successful even than his proposition. The bill provides that the capital stock of the company shall be $2,000,000, but I do not discover any provision in the bill requiring that such capital stock shall be fully paid up. It seems to me that if we put a provision into the bill that the capital stock shall be paid up, that will be a better protection to the bondholders than the provision which the Senator from Kansas proposes. I would suggest to the Senator that that would be an absolute money security paid into the corporation, which would be invested in the property and would be a security much better than a claim against the private individuals, for the stock would be liable to be transferred and the bonds carried along, the obligations made until such time as the sound and solvent stockholder might have placed himself in a secure position. I suggest to the Senator whether it would not be better to substitute some such provision as that. I have written a little amendment which I will submit to the Senator. I will pass it up to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island proposes to submit an amendment which will be read.

Mr. CHACE. An amendment to the pending amendment.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

Provided, That until the full amount of the par value of the shares of stock in said corporation shall have been paid, the subscribers to said shares shall be personally liable to an amount equal to the par value of the stock subscribed for, but such liability shall cease whenever he shall have paid in the full amount so subscribed for.

Mr. INGALLS. It appears to me that that suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island would obviate the necessity of the amendment I offered, and I am entirely willing to accept it.

The only object I have in this matter is, as there seems to be an idea prevalent that there may be some subterranean design to inflict pecuniary injury upon the public, that these unsuspecting purchasers shall be protected. I should be willing myself to accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island in lieu of the draught that I submitted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to say "paid in money," so that it will not be considered that a payment by indirection shall suffice.

Mr. CHACE. I have no objection to that. I suppose the word "paid" means in money. This is a similar provision to one that is in a great many charters passed by a number of States that I am aware of, and I think it answers the purpose desired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment by way of a new section. I do not mean to intimate that there is any disposition to speculate upon this charter, but our experience in the Committee on Commerce in regard to charters for bridge companies teaches us that a practice has been indulged in to some extent of obtaining a charter from Congress and then selling it out to other persons. I think a provision like this ought to be put on all these bills.

The amendment of Mr. VEST was read, as follows:

If the construction of said hotel shall not be commenced in two years from the passage of this act and be completed in five years from the same date, the privileges herein granted shall cease and determine.

Mr. COCKRELL. I suggest to add:

That Congress reserves the right to repeal, alter, or amend this charter at any time.

Mr. VEST. Very well; I accept that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment to the amendment is to add:

And Congress reserves the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act at any time.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MORGAN. I offer the following amendment to the bill as a new section:

SEC. —. In consideration of the privileges conferred under this act, the said Windsor Hotel Company shall pay annually a tax not exceeding 1 per cent. on its capital stock, to be assessed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia for the benefit of the poor of the District, which tax shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as other taxes on personal property are or shall be collected in the District of Columbia; and said tax shall not exempt the other personal or real property of said corporation from taxation.

Mr. President, I do not know but that the law as it now is might authorize the taxation of the capital stock of the money corporation we create here, but for fear that it may not I desire to have that provision put in the bill. I can not vote for the bill in the absence of such a provision.

I do not agree with the Senator from Florida and perhaps others in regard to the beneficial effects and advantages of the chartering of so many money corporations in this country. On the contrary, my reflections have led me to the conclusion that they are the source of many of the most flagrant evils that we now live under. The States of this Union have gone forward to make incorporated associations to such an excessive degree that nearly all the important interests of the country are intrusted into the hands of corporations. I find that Congress is continually besieged with applications to regulate and restrain State corporations in their business operations because of the immense privileges that have been thus conferred, many of which they seem to have seriously abused.

The railroad legislation about which both Houses have been concerned and are now concerned, limiting the railroad corporations to make certain charges on freights, and limiting a number of the other privileges that they enjoy under State laws, indicates to my mind sufficiently the necessity, at least on the part of Congress, of restraining our hands when it comes to the organization of any new corporation.

In fact, I do not know of any one trouble (I call it an evil) in this country which in its present and prospective difficulty seems to present more dangerous matter for the consideration of Congress or of any other body of statesmen than this matter of building up corporations. They derive their privileges entirely from the law. They come to legislative tribunals, either Congress or the State or Territorial Legislatures, for all the advantages and privileges which they enjoy. In their charters they have multiform, peculiar, and exclusive rights which ordinary private citizens do not enjoy. When an individual goes into an enterprise such as the building of a hotel or any other enterprise of a private or public nature, either by himself or in association with copartners or holders of stock in a joint stock company, he puts up his talents, his personal responsibility, and all that belongs to him as a stake upon the success of his enterprise. The creditors of that individual have a right to resort to his property to any and every degree permitted by law for the purpose of collecting out of him their debts. The laws of the country bear upon him and inflict upon him in many instances severe penalties for his failure to comply with his obligations. He has taxes to pay, he has children to educate, he has society to maintain, he has all the burdens of a private citizen upon his shoulders without immunity and without exemption except to the extent, in some of the States, of the exemption of a small portion of real or personal estate for the support of his family.

When we come to create a being which we call a corporation, the mere child of the law, we set about to confer upon that bantling first of all perpetuity, the right of holding property in perpetual succession, and in that way we violate the whole spirit of our system of laws which was adopted at the time we organized an independent government in the United States against establishing perpetuities either in real or personal estate. We put down in the very beginning of our civil system in the United States the law of entail. We declared that a man should not have the right either by deed or by will to entail upon his posterity the ownership of a particular tract of land in perpetuity. All the spirit of our law at that time, and from that time to this, has been contrary to the idea that it was any part of the province of the legislative tribunals of this country to restore these rights of perpetuity in property. But when we come to create a body-corporate, as the one that is now before the Senate for consideration, the first thing we do is to confer upon that body-corporate the right to hold property in perpetuity.

There is no limit of time in reference to which the right of ownership of this property which it is proposed to create here by law is to be controlled, or to be abridged. It goes on and on and on by the transfer of the certificates of stock into the hands of successive generations. It may be that the investment will be immensely profitable, and in this way we enable men to pass from time to time, from generation to generation, a most valuable description of property, without our ability otherwise than by repealing the act to restrain the enjoyment of it in him and his successors or his heirs at law, who are his successors. When that privilege is conferred upon any body of men at all, it ought to be done in reference to some great general advantage or benefit that they are going to confer upon a community, and not merely with reference to the advantage or benefit which they may give to themselves in a money-making way.

I know, sir, that it is the opinion of many of the wisest of our commercial men, and our statesmen also, that the wonderful development of this country has been due in a very large degree to the existence of corporations in their midst. At the same time it must be confessed that losses and embarrassments have been brought upon millions of individuals in the United States since the organization of our Government in consequence of the failure of men who own property in corporations to comply with their obligations. Here we make this creature of the law. We invest it with these peculiar privileges. We set it above other people in the right of its members to combine together in order to invest their money in a very large and expensive hotel, and after we have done that we decline to tax the capital stock. We confer upon them the privilege of the enjoyment of the franchise which we grant them to-day without a response on their part in the nature of taxation, or without any ability, it may be, on our part hereafter to enforce taxation upon them. The rights that we confer upon them under the decision in the case of the Dartmouth College are rights that become vested the moment they commence an expenditure of money to carry into effect the objects of the incorporation. We give them rights which we can not afterwards abridge, that we can not afterwards destroy, except under the power of repealing or amending this charter. But the vested right which they get in this property excluded from the duty of tax-paying is a right which we can not, in my judgment, hereafter abridge or curtail. At all events, now is the time to decide whether those rights of property, when they become vested, are beyond our power to tax them.

Now, let me ask whether it has been stated in this debate, or whether it can be stated, that there is any necessity in the city of Washington for the incorporation of an immense hotel company. Have we not boarding-houses and hotels here almost innumerable, with every rate of charges, for the accommodation of all classes in this city?

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 263) making appropriation for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the special order for this hour, being the bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States.

Mr. VEST. I move to lay aside that order of business temporarily, in order to allow the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to finish his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

Mr. MAHONE. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to present a conference report?

Mr. MORGAN. I yield.

Mr. MAHONE submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 263) making appropriation for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, with an amendment, namely: Strike out "twenty-five" and insert "fifty," and agree to the same as so amended; and the House agree to the same.

WILLIAM MAHONE,
H. L. DAWES,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
BERIAH WILKINS,

RAILROAD ATTORNEYS.

Mr. BECK. The bill that was called up a few moments ago to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés of railroad companies, &c., is to be laid aside because of the absence of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. I ask that it be laid aside informally until 2 o'clock to-morrow, and in the mean time I will ascertain when the Senator from New York expects to return, and have some final order made about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that course, and the special order will be postponed until 2 o'clock to-morrow, holding its position.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 17th instant, approved and signed the act (S. 1990) to provide for the adjustment of matters connected with certain judicial proceedings in Pennsylvania in which the United States was a party.

The message also announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1424) for the relief of graduates of the United States Military Academy, and to fix their pay; and Joint resolution (S. R. 19) directing copies of the official letter-books of the executive department of the State of North Carolina to be furnished to said State.

WINDSOR HOTEL COMPANY.

Mr. INGALLS. Now I move that the Senate continue the consideration of the bill that was up when the hour of 2 o'clock arrived.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2761) to incorporate the Windsor Hotel Company of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORGAN. Amongst all this number of hotels and boarding-houses in the city of Washington I am not aware that any one of them is incorporated. We have got along so far with the investment of very large amounts of money and great labor, and very great skill also in the hotel business, without the necessity of the builders or proprietors coming to Congress for an act of incorporation, and I confess that I can see no good reason why we should incorporate a hotel company in the city of Washington any more than we should incorporate a dry goods store. As I observed, I have heard no public necessity stated, nothing in respect to which this corporation can confer any benefit upon the people equivalent to the advantages and privileges which they are gaining under this charter.

I can see that this charter must be valuable. It is pressed here by gentlemen of high character. It seems that they are gentlemen in whom Congress has very great confidence. Why do they come here for a charter to conduct this purely private business, this business for mere personal advantage, when so many others are engaged upon their own capital and their own private responsibility in conducting hotels and boarding-houses? Why should we exempt this hotel corporation under this charter from a personal responsibility of its membership for the debts of the corporation beyond the sum that the stockholders may have paid in as capital stock into the corporation? What benefit are they going to confer upon this community, or upon the people of the United States at large, which justifies us in exempting them from liability for any more money put in this business than that actually paid in?

I confess I do not see the public necessity of incorporating this institution. But aside from that, it is the duty of every Government that creates an incorporation for money-making, for the private advantage of the corporators, to lay a tax upon the capital stock of that corporation; and if this policy had been pursued by the States and by the Federal Government from the time we commenced this loose method of incorporating any and everybody that desired a charter, we should have found ourselves in a very much safer condition commercially and in a very much more agreeable position in respect of the legislation of the country than we are to-day.

What is all this complaint that we hear in the Senate, and in the other House also, about the watering of stocks in railroad corporations and in various other corporations of the country? It is that these men, after they have got a charter for the building of a railroad, or for any other purpose, and after they have begun to make money upon it largely, desire to conceal the real amount of money they are making from the people of the country by increasing, magnifying the amount of stock they have included in it. This evil has been complained of on all hands, and it has been made one of the most strenuous arguments that have yet been urged in respect to the necessity that devolves upon the Congress of the United States for legislating to control the great railroads of this country.

Now, sir, if a tax had been laid upon the capital stock of corporations, if that had been the policy of the States and of the United States Government, this evil would never have been heard of, for no incorporation, whether it be a telephone company, a telegraph company, a railroad company, or any private corporation, would ever have increased its stock in this magnificent way for the purpose of concealing its profits and of distributing its gains among the hands of a new membership it may be. If the governments concerned had placed upon these corporations a tax upon the amount of their capital stock they would not have faced the tax collector with his right of assessment on the capital stock of any corporation for the mere purpose of expanding the number of shares or the amount of the shares that were held in the corporation by the persons interested therein. It is a neglect of this very policy which, in my judgment, has brought these evils on this country. We have not controlled the corporations through the taxing power of the land. They have gone scot-free except in respect of the property that they actually own, personal and real estate that they actually own and that is liable in their hands to taxation just as it is in the hands of any other person. So far as the capital stock of these corporations is concerned, as a rule, if not a universal rule, it has been exempted entirely from taxation.

Now, is it not a correct principle of government that when any body of men come before this tribunal and ask a peculiar privilege, which in its nature is really an exclusive privilege, they should consent to be taxed upon the capital which they put into that establishment? If they come asking privileges and benefits and immunities and exemptions, is it not exactly right and fair that they should pay to the Government something for the enjoyment of these privileges that private men can not enjoy? If they come asking an exemption from indebtedness which they may contract or incur in the conduct of a hotel, is it not rational that they should be entirely willing to pay for the privilege which we confer upon them? And if the privilege we confer upon them is something of value, if we by the enactment of this charter create in them a property which is valuable, why should they not be willing to have that property taxed which we create by this act of incorporation? What is the value of it? First, the privilege of association; second, the privilege of perpetuity; third, the exemption from responsibility beyond the actual amount of stock subscribed and paid in.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the life of the corporation in this bill perpetual?

Mr. MORGAN. It is a perpetual corporation. The only limitation is the power to repeal the charter, put in by the way of amendment.

If these privileges which they esteem to be valuable, which will give them more power in the association of capital and the conduct of this business enterprise than belongs to any private man who has a hotel in Washington, or to any partnership that has a hotel here—if these privileges are valuable, who creates them? We create them by the concession that we are making in this act. Without the concession we make here they are of no value. With the concession that we make they are of very great value. If they were not of great value, this act would not be sought after.

When we are in the act of creating this corporation, this privilege, this value in favor of the corporators, it seems to me that we should specify in the bill itself that this property should be liable to the assessment of a reasonable tax. My amendment proposes a tax not to exceed 1 per cent. upon the capital stock, to be assessed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, and that the benefits of this tax shall go to the poor of this District.

I trust I shall not be accused of providing for the poor of the District this special tax from any motive to make this amendment popular with the Senate or popular with any person else; but I have been living in this District now about nine years and I have made the acquaintance of many of the poor of this District, and there are scarcely a poorer people on this earth than the poor of the District of Columbia. Whether it is their fault or not, it is not for me to say; but I know the fact. It stares us in the face every day. There is scarcely a housekeeper in the city of Washington whose doors are not besieged for the crumbs that fall from his table by the poor of this District; and there are few places in the world where the poor are worse provided for than here. Private associated effort is doing very much, is conducting a beautiful benevolence in the city of Washington, with a view to relieving the wants and necessities of the poor; but Congress has done very little. Congress has provided some poor-houses, some places of resort for people who are so afflicted by disease or disability that they can not provide for their own wants; but when we come to distribute the money that is in the Government here into the hands of the poor, it must be confessed that Congress has shown at least a great economy, if not parsimony, in extending its beneficence. Those who come hereafter into the District of Columbia seeking charters at the hands of the Congress of the United States ought to have this burden placed upon them, so that we shall have a fund growing up in the District out of which we can provide for the necessities of the very poor. It is for that reason that I have incorporated that view in my amendment.

The amendment, however, does not commend itself to my own judgment so much on account of the charity, the benevolence that it is supposed to contain, as it does upon the ground which I have stated already, that it is time that the people of the United States had realized that much of the strife and controversy that is going on in this land is simply a conflict between incorporated men and men who labor for them in the different vocations of life. If these labor strikes, if these commotions, these acts of violence which seem to be prompted by some underlying necessity that Congress has not been able yet to understand or to grasp, were rightly understood and traced back philosophically to their real origin, in my judgment it would be found that it has been the latitudinous way in which the States and the Federal Government have created these artificial bodies and the peculiar privileges given them that has led to this commotion that we understand so little about and are so illy prepared to meet, for the larger number of these conflicts have arisen between corporations and their employés. Individual capital has few wars with labor.

Here is a man who makes an invention for any purpose whatever and takes a patent for it. He strikes a new and a bright idea, one that relieves the country from the necessity of employing a great deal of labor. It is a labor-saving machine or invention. As soon as its merits become known capital at once associates itself together for the purpose of using that man's invention. They go to him and buy out his invention. They organize an incorporation, upon which they risk just so much money as they put in, and no more. They know nothing about the invention themselves; they are not skilled men; they are not mechanics; they have had nothing to do with enterprises of the character that are included in the invention in regard to which I am indulging this supposition, and they come together merely as speculators, merely as men possessing money, who by force of their money become the owners of the invention or the controllers of it, and they put it to work. In addition to the inventor's monopoly we give them a charter. We say to them in the charter: "Put in $500,000 of your money for the purpose of developing this invention and of executing the objects of your charter, and then, when you have paid up that money, we shall not hold you responsible for anything at all." That is mere speculative investment. It is not the inventor working his way to fortune. And so it is in respect of almost every important enterprise in the United States.

There are men flocking to my State to-day to invest millions of dollars in coal and iron mines, who never saw a pig of iron cast in their lives, and were never down in a coal shaft. What draws them together? Nothing but the chances of speculation. A man who may have a little furnace or some opening in the earth for the development of coal and bringing it out and sending it to markets, lives in the neighborhood of one of these immense corporations that assemble together under the privileges of the law, in my State for instance. This man understands mining coal; he understands making iron, it is his business, his pursuit, to which he has been trained and in the active manual exercise of which he is trying to earn bread for his family. The immense corporation sits down by the side of such men and demands that they shall sell out to it. "Wherefore," they say; "are not we here delving in the bowels of the earth or working on the surface in order to make an honest living for our families under trades and pursuits that we understand and to which we have been brought up from our childhood?" "Yes; but you are in the way of associated capital; you are not a corporation; you are responsible for every dollar of money that you owe; any creditor you have can take the last rag off your wife's back to pay the debt you may contract. We are differently situated; we are incorporated with a capital of $1,000,000. We have paid in that million dollars; we have bought, adjoining you, this property; we are working it; and we intend to put prices down so that you can not compete with us; and we intend to compel you to submit to us and our aggregated capital and associated power. We intend that you shall submit to us or else see your little establishment go to ruin on your hands. You must take our terms from us."

The small operators have no option; they are compelled to submit to a privileged class. That is the practical operation to-day of this aggregation of capital in the hands of stockholders in their efforts and in their practices, and in the results that they achieve, also, in breaking down those men who are trained to industrial and mechanical pursuits, and in compelling them to bow their necks to the yoke of capital. More of this trouble has come from this one cause than from all others that can be enumerated in the land. Men who speculate in cotton spinning, in iron and steel making, in the building of cars, in the running of lumber mills, in fact in everything, men who have no knowledge of these pursuits, but who have money enough to get a controlling power over them for mere speculative purposes, go and invest their money, and they compel the men who are trained and skilled in these pursuits to become their employés and their servants in executing their will.

Sir, there is no one mechanic in the United States to-day, I do not care how skilled he may be in his trade, who can start out with the labor of his own hands and build him a shop and successfully conduct his business against the power of incorporated capital; I do not care what business you name. That man can not be named, unless it is a village blacksmith, in all this land to-day, no matter how skilled he may be, no matter how industrious, who has the power under the existing condition of affairs to build up his little establishment and go along with it in the presence of associated capital, which has monopolized the same line of business in his neighborhood or somewhere else in reach of his market. Instance after instance of this kind arises to my own memory.

I remember in the State of Alabama where three or four enterprising gentlemen, private parties, established a small mill for the rolling of cotton ties, and one of the number had invented a very excellent buckle, just as good as any that had been invented, and they set themselves down at the mouth of a coal mine, and within 10 miles of an iron furnace in Alabama, with every facility of cheap water and fuel of every description for the conduct of their business, and then went to work to manufacture these cotton ties with this new invention of one of the partners. They made a most excellent tie, which was received by the planters with approbation and used whenever they could get them. What was the result? An immense establishment at Pittsburgh first, and afterwards that had to give way to a great establishment in England, sent their cotton ties over to this country, and they went around the localities where this firm were in the habit of selling their ties. They absorbed the market; they put the price down in all the region of country they reached to such rates that the private parties could not make them, and they had to close up their shop.

Look at the Standard Oil Company; that is another illustration. By an immense accumulation of capital this company has got the power to control every oil well in the United States from Southern New York to California. What do they do? A California man drives a well upon his own land and he strikes oil and it flows in abundance. He has it shipped to San Francisco. He undertakes to refine it. The Standard Oil Company, with its immense power, sells refined oil at a cheaper rate in California than he can afford to sell it, and it can well afford to do it to keep him out of the market. The result is that there is no value to that oil well. The owners have to sell these wells to the Standard Oil Company to get rid of them or to get anything at all out of them, or else agree to a standard of prices prescribed by the Standard Oil Company.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has called my attention to the cotton-seed oil manufacture. Until within the last four or five months the manufacture of cotton-seed oil was in the hands of various different people in various cities and towns in the South. A corporation was organized in the city of New York with a capital of $30,000,000, the object of which was to buy up every cotton-seed oil mill in all the Southern States. They went through the Southern States and bought them all. I do not know of a single exception. They came to the town in which I live——

Mr. GEORGE. And to mine; and paid stock.

Mr. MORGAN. Sometimes a little money, but more frequently a large amount of stock The result was to combine the whole of the cotton-seed oil production in the hands of one immense corporation. They came to the town in which I live, which had been rather the pioneer of the oil production from cotton-seed, out of which some very enterprising and very excellent gentlemen had grown wealthy. They made propositions to them to sell property for about $300,000 that had been offered for $60,000. Of course these gentlemen took the offer, part in stock and part in money. They went into the general organization of the cotton-seed oil syndicate in New York, as it is termed. I do not know what the precise name of the corporation is.

Now, what has been the result? By thus putting in the hands of one corporation all the cotton-seed oil production in the South, and thereby cutting off all enterprise of any private person or any small corporation in the direction of manufacturing cotton-seed oil, they got the control of the market for cotton seed, and seed fell at once from 15 cents to 10 cents a bushel. The loss fell most heavily on the negroes, because they were the greatest patrons of the cotton-seed oil mills.

These are illustrations that show that the power which is being and has been heretofore granted to incorporations in this country is the power that is producing the mischief in the land. I suppose it would hardly be beyond the bounds of reason to say that there are many hundreds of thousands of incorporated money-making establishments in the United States. The census statistics do not give the list of the corporations, or their numbers, or the amount of capital that they have, either actually or nominally, in their possession, or the amount of capital stock, but we know that the number and the amount of stock is immensely great and all the time increasing, and yet there is no restraint upon them. They have fairly taken possession of every great mechanical and industrial pursuit except agriculture, and in the South they are largely engaging in cotton production. They are absorbing this pursuit by the lending of money on mortgages to the planters, and soon they will become great landholders, with the negroes for tenants.

It is time when we commence to incorporate bodies politic and corporate in this country that we should also commence putting some limitations upon them of a practical character, and especially ought we to direct our attention to that feature in every moneyed corporation that when they are allowed to have $2,000,000 of capital stock they shall be required to pay taxes upon that as capital stock and as property, as my amendment recites, without reference to what taxes may be imposed on their other personal or real estate. If the privilege is worth anything it is worth that, and if we can afford to give it in the presence of the dangerous state of facts that exists in this country to-day, the terrible dilemmas that we are in, it ought to be upon the ground that they can afford to place themselves where the law can get hold of them and make them contribute to the support of the Government. Why, sir, a tax of one-fourth of 1 per cent. on the capital stock of the moneyed corporations in the United States to-day would greatly relieve every poor man in this land of taxation, and give him a better chanee to support his natural progeny, while we are compelling him to support artificial creations that we produce by acts of incorporation.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask if he provides for the taxation of stock according to its nominal value or on the amount paid in?

Mr. MORGAN. Nominal value.

Mr. GEORGE. That is right. It should be the face value.

Mr. MORGAN. If there is any doubt about that, I will say "face value," but I have not put in those words.

I have said all I desire to say, sir.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] has discussed one of the most important questions connected with the condition of this country at this time, the question whether or not the combination of individuals for business purposes should be allowed, or whether restrictions should be placed upon it, and, if so, how far; whether the legalized association of persons as corporations, with the right to contract and own property and other personal rights, and the right of succession, shall be forbidden by law, or whether it shall be encouraged. The manner in which he proposes to limit and restrain this power of association—for a corporation is nothing but the combination of two or three or more individuals for some common purpose with the personal rights given to it by law and with the right of succession—the manner in which he proposes to accomplish this is by taxing the stock.

Now, what is the stock of a corporation? It is nothing but the shares of its property divided into parts and the certificate or title or statement of the individual right to a certain proportion of interest in this common property and in the receipts which may be obtained from it. You tax the earnings of property. There is nothing else to tax. You may tax lands or houses to the end of time, but unless there be some receipts from them, some earnings, or from some other source in the individual who owns them, the tax will be fruitless. You can not take the house nor the property. It is not useful to the Government. The only use of it to the Government is that it shall be occupied and used and made valuable by labor.

I do not think that the method the Senator from Alabama proposes of restricting corporations by taxing the interest in them of the individual or the citizen, that is to tax two or three or four times the worth of the property, to tax its dividends or receipts, and then tax its certificates or evidences of title to the property, is advisable. It does not seem to me that there is any reason or wisdom in that method of taxation, for it is not an honest method of taxation.

If the Senator from Alabama is right, and this power of association in corporations is an evil to-day in the body politic, if it should be forbidden, let there be some positive enactment of law, so far as we have the power forbidding corporations. Let the States do the same. But I apprehend that great as the evils are which have arisen from the unrestrained power of corporations, this power of association, this legalized power of association given to corporate bodies, is eminently useful. Who shall say to the owner of the Alabama furnace, of which the Senator spoke, that three, four, five, ten, or twenty neighbors shall not associate and contribute to the operation of that furnace means sufficient to make it profitable? And if it be a right for them to do so, why should they not have that right permitted by such legislation as will give them secure possession of their earnings, the right of succession, the right of perpetuity, with the power in the legislature to repeal it at any time, to limit it if it becomes too great?

It seems to me that this great question is one deserving mature consideration, the power and the duty of the legislatures of the several States and of Congress to restrain corporations, to limit them and to protect the public against them, and to protect that portion of the public who become members of them. It is a most useful power, the power of association in the shape of corporations. It is one which is necessary to our business system. The poorest man in the country who has $100, under a proper system of legislation creating corporations, may make his investment of that $100 in this associate body and derive the results from it. It is as much in the interest of the poor people as it is in the interest of the rich.

Now, as to the Senator's suggestion in regard to the cotton-seed oil company, there is great force in it, and so in regard to the other. But let us take the other side of the question. What interest shall the consumers of these productions derive from them, and what proportion does the interest of the consumers, the great body of the people, bear to the few producers in having those things which they consume produced upon the cheapest and most economical basis for them? The interest of the great body of the people who are consumers is largely concerned in the cheapening of every production. This is too large a question to be determined in regard to the stock of a hotel corporation. The corporations which have by law the power to tax locomotion and all transportation, as the great railroad and transportation companies have, and exercise that power of taxation upon all the productions of the country, and imposing it so as to pay the interest upon two, three, four, or five times the money actually invested, produces the great evil and oppression in the country of which there is much complaint. But a simple hotel corporation, which has no power of taxation, which can only derive its earnings from those who voluntarily avail themselves of its hospitality and become guests there, that can be of no concern to the public. It is the great transportation companies who by law have the power of taxation upon all locomotion and all transportation and upon the entire production of the country, and who impose that to pay the interest upon millions and millions of bogus securities, which have never had any actual value, and for which no money has ever been paid; but as to the class of hotel corporations I can not see that there is any great importance to be attached further than to see that they are so constituted that they will be upon an honest basis and an honest investment of money.

There is no reason why the stockholders should be liable personally for the debts of the corporation. The corporation is an artificial person, and its property should be the basis of its credit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. VEST. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add a new section to the bill, as follows:

SEC. 9. In consideration of the privileges conferred under this act the said Windsor Hotel Company shall pay annually a tax not exceeding 1 per cent. on its capital stock, to be assessed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, for the benefit of the poor of the District, which tax shall be assessed and collected in the same manner as other taxes on personal property are or shall be collected in the District of Columbia; and said tax shall not exempt the other personal or real property of said corporation from taxation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It strikes me that that will be in the nature of a contract incorporated into their charter which would exempt them from any further measure of taxation which Congress hereafter might see proper to impose. I call the attention of the Senator from Alabama to that point.

Mr. MORGAN. I have provided against that. If the Senator will listen to the last clause in the amendment he will see that that is provided for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chief Clerk will read the last clause of the amendment again.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And said tax shall not exempt the other personal or real property of said corporation from taxation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. True, it does not exempt the other property, but it is entering into a contract in the charter with this corporation by which Congress hereafter, if it see proper to impose an additional amount of taxation to that which you have provided, will be precluded. That is the point.

Mr. MORGAN. The tax is to be not more than 1 per cent. on the capital stock.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yet it would be a question as to whether Congress designed that this should be the full measure of taxation to which they might at any time hereafter be subject. I do not know as to the proper measure of this taxation, but I do not want to see Congress put into a position where it could not impose an additional tax to that proposed by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama if in the judgment of Congress hereafter such an increased taxation should be necessary. I do not know but that this is ample taxation.

Mr. MORRILL. It would also be two-thirds of the present amount of taxes. I think it would be very much.

Mr. PLATT. It is in addition to all other taxes?

Mr. MORRILL. If it is in addition to all other taxes it would seem to me to be unjust, but if it is only intended for personal property it would be only two-thirds, because for years the tax has not been less than 1½ per cent. on such property here.

Mr. MORGAN. When I offered the amendment I made the inquiry of gentlemen who I supposed would know the fact, whether the capital stock of money corporations was now taxed under the laws of the District of Columbia. I infer from what the Senator from Vermont says that the capital stock is taxed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As capital stock?

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator from Vermont whether the capital stock of corporations in the District of Columbia is taxed as capital stock?

Mr. MORRILL. All the property they own here is taxed.

Mr. MORGAN. I understand about the tax on real property and personal property, upon the things real or personal, but what I desired to know was whether there was a tax upon the capital stock as stock of any corporation in the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL. I am not informed.

Mr. INGALLS. The capital stock of course is represented in these corporations by their real estate and personal property, and when that is taxed the capital stock practically is taxed. The money that is represented by the stock is put into the plant. In the case of a street railroad corporation it is put into the rails, the road-bed, the horses, and the vehicles. The Senator, I presume, would not insist that it would be just that the money which merely passes through the hands of this corporation and is put into visible, tangible property, should be subjected to double taxation.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, that is precisely the purpose of my amendment. My object is to tax that which we make property by this franchise. We make property out of the capital stock independently of the amount of personal and real estate that this corporation may own. We make for them property out of the privileges that we give them, and I want to tax that sort of property.

Of course it is a very old argument, one that has been made time and again in almost every forum in the country, certainly in a great many courts, that when you tax the real estate and the personal estate owned by a corporation, then to tax the capital stock in addition is a double tax. Nevertheless the States do that thing in a great many instances. We do it in the national-bank act. We put a tax upon the national banks in addition to the value of the real and personal estate that they own, and we do it because we have granted to them a privilege of a valuable character for which they ought to pay a tax to the Government of the United States. That is done by act of Congress.

The precise object of this amendment is that, in addition to the value of the real estate and the personal estate owned by the corporation and represented by its capital stock there shall be a tax upon the capital stock itself in consideration of the benefits which we confer under this franchise. That was the object of my amendment, and that was the reason why I made the inquiry whether under the laws of the United States the capital stock of a money incorporation within this District was liable to be taxed as capital stock notwithstanding the whole property, personal and real, of that corporation was taxed also under the law.

My purpose is to make men pay for what they get, and if you create property values in their favor with which they can go into the market and sell, and perhaps sell at a large premium, that ought to be taxed. I could name stocks now in my own State which have gone from 15 cents in the dollar to 250 cents within the last two months, or perhaps a shorter time than that. Those stocks ought to be taxed by the State government, and they ought to be taxed by the Federal Government in proportion to their actual face value, to say the least of it. We can not follow the value of it up and down as it may fluctuate in the market, but we can say, and in my judgment we ought to say, whenever we grant a charter of this kind, that a tax ought to be imposed on the capital stock.

The Senator from Delaware suggests that this may be in the nature of a contract. I do say in the amendment "a tax not exceeding 1 per cent." upon the capital stock. I put it at that because I think that is a high tax. After you have taxed the property, real and personal, of a corporation, then to tax its capital stock at 1 per cent. you have got as high a tax as ought to be imposed upon it; but I beg to say to the Senator from Delaware that it is not in the nature of a contract.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The amendment reads "in consideration of the privileges conferred."

Mr. MORGAN. I can strike out the word "consideration," if that has made any impression; it would not alter the sense of the law at all; but it is not in the nature of a contract. More than that, the provision has already been incorporated in the bill that this act may be amended or repealed by any subsequent act of Congress, thus taking from every right that is conferred in this charter the nature of a vested right, except so far as the company have accumulated property in virtue of the enactment.

I do not know that it is necessary for me to explain any further my position in regard to the amendment and what I desire to accomplish by it.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I have no interest in this bill and do not care anything about what may be its fate, but the Senator from Alabama should see at once that he might as well deny the passage of the bill as to make the proposition he does if it shall be accepted. In looking around upon the various sites now owned by hotel-keepers, it will be noticed that they are constantly enlarging as they can, making additions to their present establishments. It may be very desirable, I should rather think it was, that we should have at least one first-class hotel here, but if the hotel that is now proposed should be subject to a double taxation or a taxation beyond what all the other large hotel-keepers are paying, it is obvious that it can not live, the stock will not be taken; it will be an end of the bill.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this bill has already consumed more time of the Senate than I supposed it would; and had I anticipated the debate that has arisen I should not have moved its consideration to-day.

A certain number of reputable and responsible gentlemen of this city and the city of New York desired the opportunity of becoming incorporated for the purpose of erecting a hotel in this city that will be commensurate with the needs of the traveling public and the wants of the national metropolis. I presumed that any Senator familiar with the condition of affairs here would readily understand that an investment of that kind would be fortunate if it paid 1 per cent. on the capital employed. They desired incorporation for the advantages that it would afford them, to which the Senator from Alabama has alluded, and I do not propose to follow him into the very interesting subject that he has treated of with regard to the relation of corporations to the business of modern society or the evils that have resulted from their injudicious creation.

I have not any interest whatever in the passage of this bill. The Committee on the District of Columbia having examined the matter, it having been referred to them by the Senate, concluded, in view of all the facts, that as these persons could not become incorporated under the general law, it would be wise to give them the powers named in this bill. If the Senate see fit to decide in the negative it is a matter of entire indifference to me personally. It is a question which concerns solely the convenience and accommodation of the public not only of the city of Washington, but that great public which has occasion from time to time to visit the metropolis.

The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama is absolutely destructive to this bill. He knows it. Everybody who has heard it read knows it. I do not assume that that is the purpose or object of the Senator from Alabama. At a proper time I should be glad to consider with him the propriety of a general bill that should impose generally upon all corporations, this as well as others, the burden, of which he has spoken, of taxation in consideration of the privileges which have been granted to them by Congress. But the Senator from Alabama must be aware that this is not the time to consider that subject. This is not the way to consider it. If this incorporation is granted it does not escape the power of Congress to tax it, if we see fit to do so.

Therefore, I hope the Senator from Alabama will see fit to withdraw his amendment, because I think in many ways it has reason to commend it, and that something should be done to exact an equivalent from corporations chartered by Congress for the privileges we grant; but the Senator from Alabama must be aware, as I say, that this is not the manner to deal with a great topic like that, involving the rights not only of this corporation, but prospectively the rights of all other corporations.

I will call his attention to one other fact, that if his amendment should become a law it would impose absolutely a special tax on this corporation, on its capital stock, because it declares that it shall be for the benefit of the poor. Taxes generally are levied for the purposes of revenue, for the payment of the ordinary expenses of Government; and if we should ever see fit to pass a law imposing a specific tax upon the capital stock of corporations for general revenue purposes, the amendment he proposes, declaring that this tax shall be for the benefit of the poor of the District alone, would inevitably be a special tax in addition to the others which would or might be authorized.

As I said before, this matter has occupied too much attention. It is a matter of indifference to me whether the bill passes or whether it does not pass. It concerns the public, I think, that there should be additional accommodation of the kind contemplated by this charter in this city, and why there should be imposed upon it any particular, any odious obligations I can not comprehend. It certainly is not one that threatens the peace or the welfare or the prosperity of the nation. It is not like a great railway corporation that may fix its grip upon the business and the passenger traffic of the country. It is strictly a local affair, confined perhaps to a single square of ground, entirely within the immediate purview and supervision of Congress at any and all times.

I have only to say about this amendment that having, as I think, pointed out its impropriety, its invidious character, and the want of necessity for it, considering the local and circumscribed character of this incorporation, I shall leave the Senate to vote upon it, if the Senator from Alabama does not think best to withdraw it, which I hope he will do, because I shall be glad at any time to unite with him in some measure that shall look to the general subject of taxing all corporations upon their capital stock.

But I may add that if this amendment should prevail, the charter would be absolutely valueless. The amount of tax that is permitted to be imposed upon the capital stock of this company is more, I believe, than would be the annual profit upon the investment which these people would be compelled to make.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, it seems that the general laws of incorporation in the District of Columbia do not include this case.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. The laws on the subject of general incorporation will be found in the Revised Statutes relating to the District on page 63. The purposes for which incorporations may be made are restricted, first, to institutions of learning; second, to religious societies; third, to societies, benevolent, educational, &c.; fourth, to societies for manufacturing, agricultural, mining, mechanical, insurance, mercantile, transportation, market, and savings-bank purposes; fifth, to cemetery associations; sixth, to boards of trade; and, seventh, to railroad corporations; within none of which would this association be included.

Mr. MORGAN. The better proposition, then, would be to amend that statute so as to make it apply to hotel companies. Then all of the citizens of the District of Columbia or persons who might wish to come here and invest their money would be upon an equal footing in respect of their rights of incorporation. But this company prefers to get a special charter, not simply to remove that difficulty, but to get other advantages, among which is the opportunity of selling two million dollars of bonds. That is a valuable privilege granted by the Government of the United States to any corporate body. They come then asking the Government of the United States to grant them a privilege.

We are informed by the Senator from Kansas that all the profits of this establishment will probably not exceed 1 per cent. I must confess that I am amazed at this sort of benevolence which brings a set of capitalists from New York and from the District of Columbia into the city of Washington and causes them to build a vast hotel out of which they can not realize a profit of more than 1 per cent. I do not comprehend it. It is not in accord with the money-making spirit of the age. There must be something else about it, either in the nature of glory or in the nature of money-making, that I do not understand. There must be some privilege.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Alabama will read the first section of the bill he will see that instead of being from New York all the incorporators are from the city of Washington.

Mr. MORGAN. I do not know any of the gentlemen interested personally at all; I do not know their names. Their names have been read here to-day, but I did not catch them. Some one said that gentlemen from New York and from the city of Washington were engaged in this enterprise. But no matter where they come from; suppose they all reside here; do they desire to put $4,000,000 or $3,000,000 in the building of a vast hotel in the city of Washington for the mere sake of adorning the town? Is that it; and that therefore they can not afford to pay 1 per cent. tax, or whatever less sum the Commissioners of the District of Columbia may think is proper upon their capital stock?

Mr. President, I must be excused for not taking to that idea. I suppose that when gentlemen associate themselves together and control such large masses of money as are put within the purview of this bill there must be some motive in it besides the mere desire to decorate the town or provide accommodations for first-class people.

Sir, we had just as well incorporate ten companies to build hotels in the city of Washington for fourth-class people, for there are a great many more fourth-class people in the city of Washington to-day than there are first-class in respect of the amount of money they own, or the fashionable lives they lead, or the amount of luxurious indulgence they have in their living.

If I were going to confer a benefit upon the people at large, instead of trying to ornament the city of Washington and make a great caravansary here in which fashion, and state, and wealth might assemble and glitter I would prefer to go and make reasonably fair accommodations for those people, many of whom have to sleep out of doors when they get here, or have to throw themselves upon the mercy and charity of the police for a night's accommodation.

When we come to talk about legislating for people let us legislate for all alike. If this company were desirous to make these great sacrifices for the purpose of having this vast establishment to cost $4,000,000 or more located in the city of Washington for the accommodation of the class of people who will go there, what objection can there be to their consenting to a provision, or to its being put into this measure, that while they are looking out for themselves and for their friends and for their classes of society they shall under the tax laws of the District of Columbia also make some provision for the starving poor of this District who are too proud to go to poor-houses, and who would rather starve in many cases than to expose their misery? The hand of charity fortified by an act of this kind, which should attend upon every measure of the sort that comes before Congress, would distribute benefits among these people that would make the hearts of thousands of poor people very glad, and I prefer to do it.

The Senator from Kansas wants some great measure brought forward first to tax all the corporations of the country. I happen to have been the only Senator, I believe, in this body who ever brought forward a resolution of that character. I had the honor at the last session of this Congress to introduce a resolution, which by the way has not been acted upon, instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the expediency and the practicability of assessing a tax upon the capital stock of all moneyed corporations in the United States, to go into the Treasury of the country, believing that thereby we could get a contribution out of these corporations which would be some equivalent for the privileges they enjoy and some equivalent for the expenses the Government of the United States has to be at too frequently in marching armies backward and forward to protect them against the assaults of men in their employment, and men who would never assail them if they did not have some good, substantial reason for it.

So I have been waiting for a measure of this kind to come up. But the only way to reach a matter of this kind in the District of Columbia is to take the bills as they arise and put the provisions in the bills themselves, and then you are sure that you have got it. For my own part, I shall never vote for another act incorporating a monetary corporation in this country unless it is upon the terms and conditions that the capital stock of that corporation, as contra-distinguished from its personal property and its real property, shall be a subject of taxation because of the value that we give to the privilege, the franchise, in making the enactment for the incorporation.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, the proposition of the Senator from Alabama is a proposition to increase the burdens upon property in this country. It is simply a proposition to impose an additional tax upon every man who shall go to this hotel and avail himself of its comforts. It is a proposition to increase the rates of fare and transportation upon every railroad in the United States when he proposes a general tax upon all corporations. It is a proposition to increase the price of oil manufactured by the Standard Oil Company and every other company in the United States.

If the Senator from Alabama wishes to relieve the poor people of their burdens he can not do it by imposing an additional tax upon them. If he wishes to make this tax upon this hotel corporation he should say that their property, their real estate, their personal property, and their dividends shall be taxed 1 per cent. in addition to all other taxes, because "stock" means nothing but the property of the company.

If you mean to say you are going to tax their property because you give them certain privileges, then say they shall pay 1 per cent. more taxation upon their real and personal estate, for that is nothing but the proposition. As to the effect of it, it is simply a declaration that every person who shall be a guest at this hotel shall pay in the proportion of 1 per cent. more for his entertainment.

I can see no justice and no propriety in a system of taxation of that kind. I will go with the Senator from Alabama to the furthest extent that is just in taxing the large gains of corporations or of individuals, for you can not make a distinction between them. The question is, whether the corporate principle is a benefit to the country; should it be encouraged or should it be prohibited; should it be restrained or limited, and if so, how? You can not deal with that question by imposing an additional tax upon the property of persons who are members of a corporation, and discriminating between those citizens who are stockholders in it and those who are not. You can not discriminate between them. It is the citizens of this country who are stockholders in all corporations, and they are taxed as citizens upon their interest in them. The artificial body is not a member of the State, and the taxes that you gather come through the citizens, through the individual stockholders.

There is no such thing except in the use of the phrase as taxing a corporation. You must tax the citizen who owns an interest in it, and you can not make a proper system of taxation by saying that his stock, his share of the property of a corporation, shall be taxed higher than other property of the same description.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. GEORGE. As the yeas and nays were not called on the amendment offered by the Senator from Alabama, I desire to put on record the statement that I am in favor of it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARICOPA AND PHŒNIX RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senate to consider for a moment a bill to which I think there is no objection, which passed the House of Representatives at the last session and would have passed the Senate in a few moments then if it had been reached. It seems to be very necessary that it should go through as early as possible. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, which was to add to section 2 the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That before any such lands shall be taken for the purposes aforesaid the consent of the Indians thereto shall be obtained in a manner satisfactory to the President of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, were appointed.

CORINTH NATIONAL CEMETERY.

Mr. WALTHALL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2725) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Corinth, Miss.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was in line 6, after the word "road," to insert the words "or a road partly of gravel and partly of stone," so as to read:

That the sum of $10,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of constructing a macadamized or gravel road, or a road partly of gravel and partly of stone, from the town of Corinth, Miss., to the national cemetery near that town, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, or so much of the above sum as is necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That the right of way for said road, not less than 60 feet wide, shall first be secured to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES A. RUFFEE.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2408) for the relief of Charles A. Ruffee.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to pay to Charles A. Ruffee $1,350, being the balance due to him for pay as agent of the White Earth agency consolidated, from July 1, 1879, to September 30, 1881, inclusive.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

GEORGE W. SAULPAW.

Mr. HOAR. The bill (S. 474) for the relief of George W. Saulpaw was in my charge, reported from the Committee on Claims, and it came up and was partially discussed at the last session. It was reached the other day on the Calendar and went over on the objection of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] on account of the absence of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. I inadvertently failed at that time to ask the Senator from Iowa to permit it to go over without prejudice. I should like to have it restored to its place on the Calendar. It will be liable to a single objection whenever it comes up as now. I trust the Senator from Iowa has no objection to that course.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection to that order being made.

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be restored to its place under the eighth rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the bill (S. 474) for the relief of George W. Saulpaw be placed upon the Calendar under the eighth rule, to take its place as before. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. HOAR. To stand in the order where it formerly stood. The Secretary will note that.

AUSTRALIAN INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION OF 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State in relation to the invitation from Her Britannic Majesty to this Government to participate in an international exhibition which is to be held at Adelaide, South Australia, in 1887.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 20, 1886.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 372) Order of Business 852.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. HALE. What bill is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read by its title.

Mr. CAMERON. As this bill is likely to provoke considerable discussion—I am pretty sure that it will—I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT. That will leave it the unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON. That will leave it the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator to yield a moment until I make an inquiry. I ask if the bill (S. 372) has been taken up, and if it will be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the unfinished business for to-morrow at 2 o'clock. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to take up the bill indicated by him? I do not understand that it is up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now pending.

Mr. HALE. The motion is now pending? If so, that is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 21, at 12 o'clock m.

Whereas the founders and the recent defenders of our Government were so impressed with the importance of this truth that Jefferson, speaking for the former in his celebrated report on commerce, declared that establishments in readiness for ship-building are indispensable to the protection of our commerce and the defense of our seaboard, and Admiral Porter, speaking for the latter in his testimony before the Senate Naval Committee of the Forty-eighth Congress, affirmed that, in case of a war with a naval power, "the salvation of the country would depend upon our private ship-building yards" and "their plant accumulated during peace," for which reason, he added, we should encourage the establishment of such yards by means of favorable Government contracts, as Great Britain has done: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of authorizing the Secretary of the Navy, in the construction of vessels for the Navy hereafter, to invite proposals for the building of a part of such vessels, on such special terms as will best secure the end sought, by responsible citizens or companies, who will undertake to establish new iron and steel ship-building establishments at desirable points on our Atlantic, Pacific, and Gulf coasts, and to provide for these establishments such suitable plants as will make them available for the building of iron and steel vessels for the Navy as well as the merchant marine.

Whereas it is reported that the propagation, increase, and growth of said fish are greatly retarded by injuries received from imperfect and illy-devised fish-ladders, fish-ways, nets, seines, fish-traps, fish-wheels, and other devices, and often from poisonous matter deposited in the navigable streams of said State, and that great quantities of said fish not matured are caught, killed, molested, and injured by said wasteful methods of capture and unhealthy deposits, thereby depleting the great supply and seriously interfering with the proper maturing of the young fish: Therefore,

Resolved, That the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries be, and he is hereby, directed to investigate the methods of fishing pursued in said States, and to ascertain those which are most injurious to the preservation of this industry, as well as to the regulations and stringent measures deemed necessary to prevent future waste and wanton destruction; also to inquire as to the authority and constitutional power of the Government to regulate and protect the fish and fishery interests on navigable waters of the nation, or on any waters forming the boundary between States, or States and Territories, and to report to this House.

DUTIES ON LEAF-TOBACCO.

The SPEAKER. This being the third Monday, under the rules of the House motions to suspend the rules by direction of committees are in order; but there comes over for to-day a pending motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] on the 5th of August, to suspend the rules and pass a bill which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill relating to duties on tobacco.

Be it enacted, &c., That the paragraph beginning with the words "leaf-tobacco," being the second paragraph in Schedule F, section 2502, chapter 121 of the statutes of the United States of America, passed at the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, is hereby amended so that said paragraph shall read as follows:

"Leaf-tobacco in any bale, box, package, or bulk, any part of which is suitable for wrappers, if not stemmed, 75 cents per pound; if stemmed, $1 per pound, upon the whole contents of such bale, box, package, or bulk."

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect on and after its passage.

The SPEAKER. The fifteen minutes allowed by the rules of the House for debate in support of the motion was exhausted when the subject was before the House on the occasion referred to. Fifteen minutes remain in opposition to the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I hope that by unanimous consent I may have a little time allowed me on the bill.

The SPEAKER. How much time does the gentleman ask?

Mr. HISCOCK. If there are fifteen minutes in opposition to the motion, I hope I may be allowed fifteen minutes in support of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must object.

Mr. MILLS. Let him give an additional fifteen minutes on this side.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to that.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman will yield to me five minutes of his time.

Mr. MORRISON. I have not the time to yield. I have but five minutes myself. I will not hurt you. You do not want any tariff agitation or tariff legislation, and that is what I am now trying to prevent. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, since this proposition was introduced, and only as late as our last legislative day—on Saturday last—the House decided not to consider revenue bills—bills to revise the tariff or change existing rates of tariff taxation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire right here to make a suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it, on the day when this question was up no one availed himself of the fifteen minutes in opposition, and the time was waived. The fifteen minutes in support was exhausted, and the only question at the time, had not the time fixed for adjournment arrived, would have been a vote on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is that when the gentleman from New York had exhausted the time allowed him under the rules of the House it was suggested that the matter should go over until the reassembling of the House in this session, and that was agreed to. The RECORD, however, will show just what occurred, and the gentleman will suspend until the Chair causes the RECORD to be examined.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand this is the day when committees are permitted to move to suspend the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The motion of the gentleman from New York was made on the day when individuals are entitled to move a suspension, and I desire to ask whether it can be brought up to-day, even if it is unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. It is the character of the business which determines whether or not it is in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the character of business depends on whether it comes from individuals or from committees.

The SPEAKER. A committee or an individual might have made this motion. It is a motion to suspend the rules, and belongs to that class of business.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the motion was made on the first Monday of the month.

The SPEAKER. The motion was not made on the first Monday of the month. It was made on one of the last six days of the session. But even if it had been made on the first Monday of the month it would have come over as unfinished business in the class of business to which it belongs. That class of business is a motion to suspend the rules, and two motions to suspend the rules could not be pending at the same time. Moreover, the point of order is made too late, because the unfinished business has been taken up and debate has commenced upon it.

The Chair will cause to be read the report in the RECORD, from which it will be seen that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] exhausted his fifteen minutes, and by consent the matter went over, the gentleman stating he did not desire to give up any advantage he had.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] has two minutes remaining.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I object to the gentleman yielding to anybody.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not propose to yield the position I hold with reference to this bill. By constant watchfulness I have succeeded in obtaining this position [applause], and propose to hold it until I obtain a vote from this Congress upon this bill. I believe a vote will be obtained during the next session; and I congratulate myself on holding this position. Without expecting to procure a vote to-day I propose to give up no advantage which I have secured.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEAKER. The Chair will state that a few minutes afterward the House adjourned for the session without transacting any other business, except, perhaps, receiving a message from the President announcing the approval of certain bills. Certain requests were made by gentlemen for leave to print, which were objected to, and nothing further was done. So the matter comes over as unfinished business.

Mr. MORRISON. When interrupted I was about to say that the House no longer ago than last Saturday, with the concurrence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], decided not to have any revenue legislation.

Several MEMBERS. No! No!

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, just that. It decided neither to increase nor diminish any rate of duty; in fact, decided not to consider the subject at all, and I had hoped that in obedience to that decision and the will of the House so expressed, with his concurrence, the gentleman from New York would withdraw this proposition to increase this duty already enormously high.

The purpose of this bill is to impose on all imported leaf-tobacco suitable for cigar wrappers a duty or tax of 75 cents per pound if unstemmed, if stemmed $1 a pound. The greater portion of that now imported pays a duty of 35 cents a pound. A smaller portion, the Sumatra leaf, requiring one hundred leaves to weigh a pound, now pays what by this bill will be laid on all—75 cents a pound.

The pretext for this amendment of the gentleman from New York is that the law as now framed is evaded. This law was enacted without ever being considered or even so much as read in this House, under what was known as the Keifer-Reed device, scheme, or contrivance, or a change of rules. [Laughter.]

The Tariff Commission was asked to impose that duty, and after investigating the whole question, declined to report in favor of any change in the law which fixed the duty on all imported leaf-tobacco at 35 cents on the pound. So much of the present law as lays this 75 cents and $1 to the pound duty first found its way into a bill at the other end of the Capitol. It was then passed here in the manner indicated, after the Tariff Commission of 1883 had rejected it upon full investigation and inquiry. What that commission would not lay on in duty or tax when asked in the name of protection by its advocates, prudent legislators might well have shunned.

The alleged purpose of this proposition for a 75 cents per pound duty is to protect the farmer and farm laborer and compensate them for the difference in the cost of producing a pound of tobacco in our own country, for which the authors of this scheme tell us the 35 cents per pound rate now laid on all leaf-tobacco is not enough. We exported last year 292,773,890 pounds of leaf-tobacco, valued, as shown by our own Bureau of Statistics, at $27,158,457, or less than 10 cents a pound. If all the labor, capital, and profit in a pound of tobacco is less than 10 cents it would seem that our labor in a pound of 10-cent tobacco is fairly well-protected with a duty of 35 cents a pound on imported tobacco.

The price of last year was low, but the ordinary leaf-tobacco is a very profitable crop in this country at 12 cents. There are higher qualities of leaf-tobacco grown, chiefly in Pennsylvania, some in New York, Connecticut, a little in Wisconsin, and it is chiefly in the interest of the growers and dealers in these States, where the wrapper-leaf is worth from 12 to 25 cents, that this measure would operate if by any possibility it could become a law.

This measure is aimed at the Sumatra tobacco, grown in the East Indies and controlled by the Netherlands. That country sends to us in all less than 4,000,000 pounds, on a small part of which 75 cents duty is paid; on most of it 35 cents per pound is paid. While that country sends to us this comparatively small quantity at this already high rate of tax, we export and sell to that country 17,000,000 pounds of leaf and more pounds of stems than all the tobacco they sell us, and all our tobacco is admitted into that country and sold there at a mere nominal rate, substantially without being taxed at all. Such further discrimination against that country as this bill proposes is unfair to its people and unjust to our own.

The government of the Netherlands has complained to ours by way of protest against such discrimination as is proposed by this bill. The President, in his annual message, calls our attention to the subject and I desire to have read, and will ask the Clerk to read what the President says.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. While that is being sent to the desk I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. This tobacco affected by this bill, if I am correctly informed, is the kind used by all the manufacturers of cigars. Am I correct?

Mr. MORRISON. I think most of them use the Sumatra tobacco when they can get it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It will increase, therefore, the cost of the production of cigars.

Mr. MORRISON. As a protectionist, you do not object to it on that account, do you?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read what has been sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The government of the Netherlands has exhibited concern in relation to certain features of our tariff laws, which are supposed by them to be aimed at a class of tobacco produced in the Dutch East Indies. Comment would seem unnecessary upon the unwisdom of legislation appearing to have a special national discrimination for its object, which, although unintentional, may give rise to injurious retaliation.

Mr. MORRISON. This message of the President upon the unwisdom of such further discrimination as this bill proposes is addressed to us with considerate caution, and in conclusion I beg to call attention to the enormous duty which this bill proposes to lay, under the pretense that there has been some evasion of the old law.

The SPEAKER. What gentleman demanded a second?

Mr. MORRISON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] demanded a second, and by arrangement yielded his time to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] to whom I am indebted for so much as I have occupied.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, in the debate upon this bill at the close of the last session of Congress the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] remarked that if this bill passed the effect would be to reduce the revenue received from the importation of tobacco. In other words, it is a proposition to double the duty and halve the revenue; or, to express it in still other terms, it is simply a case of protection for the sake of protection.

Now, sir, in calculating the benefits that these gentlemen already enjoy, and what they still desire, we should recollect that the production of this character of tobacco is some 1,500 pounds to the acre, while the average production of the tobacco crop of the Middle, Southern, and Western states is only some 800 pounds to the acre. Upon the latter crop, which is the great tobacco crop of the country, the crop grown by the millions and not by simply a few thousand people, as is the article for "wrappers," which we are now considering—upon that crop, I say, there is no protection, there can be no protection, and it gets no benefit whatever. Some 500 pounds per acre of a "wrapper" crop goes as ordinary tobacco, all the leaves not being fit for wrappers, while some 1,000 pounds per acre is protected. These are the people, then, and this is the extent of their crop, two-thirds, that get all the protection that does or that can inure under the law, either as it is or as it can be made, for our tobacco crop proper is grown in great surplus, and it does and must meet the competition of the world.

Now, having seen the scope, let us take a look at the amount or per cent. of protection these gentlemen enjoy, and that also which they still desire. Their cost of production for domestic "wrappers" is given at 7 cents per pound. The competing article, imported from the Netherland colony of Sumatra, is taxed 35 cents a pound. Internal taxes on the cigars are the same, and as there is no internal tax on leaf, but only on manufactured tobacco, the internal taxes can be left out of the calculation. It is just and proper to say that it is claimed by the growers of "wrapper" tobacco that 1 pound of Sumatra leaf will wrap as many cigars as will 4 pounds of our domestic leaf. We will divide 35 then by 4, and that gives us $8\frac{3}{4}$. A 7-cent pound of tobacco, then, is now protected $8\frac{3}{4}$ cents per pound, or 125 per cent. For aught I know the other 500 pounds per acre is thrown in as a bonus. If not, it at least takes care of itself, as other tobacco has to do. But a 125 per cent. subsidy is not enough. They want the 35 cents a pound duty increased to 75 cents a pound. They want the subsidy increased to 321 per cent.—more than double what it now is—and this avowedly for subsidy, for we have been told, and we did not need the telling, that by this step, while taxes are more than doubled and are only to be paid to these privileged gentlemen, revenues to the Government will fall off.

Now, for the use of what class of our fellow-citizens is this character of wrapper employed? It is very well known that it has become customary of late years to make the cigars that are consumed by the workingmen and the people of small means in this country by machinery. To a large extent a medicated preparation of paper was at one time employed as a wrapper of sufficient strength to bear rolling by machinery, but that has gone out of use, and this Sumatra-tobacco wrapper, which has greater strength than our better-flavored but more brittle American wrapper, is employed to make the cigars that are consumed by that class of our fellow-citizens. Already that class of people alone in this country pay an annual tax upon their cigars, growing out of the use of this character of wrapper, to the amount of nearly $1,000,000. It is proposed, sir, to further deprive those people of the opportunity they now have of indulging in the comfort of an occasional cigar, although they are already paying for the wrappers, upon any computation that may be made, a subsidy of 125 per cent. to some seven thousand people in this country, in addition to the regular tax to the Government. This proposition will not run as respects this wrapper alone, but will run as respects the great body of the wrappers that are produced in this country, thus making a far greater increase of tax than appears at the custom-house, and falling almost exclusively upon the laboring people and the people of moderate circumstances in the country.

I was very much struck, sir, during some of the proceedings in this connection before the subcommittee (which are here in printed form). One gentleman who appeared before us was asked why, if his industry, subsidized as it now is, while other people engaged in raising other kinds of tobacco and in other employments enjoyed no benefit whatever from taxation—why, if the subsidy was not sufficient, he did not go into some other branch of business. "Why," said he, "I can not go into the growing of wheat, for there is no money in that; I can not go into the growing of pork, for there is no money in that." And when asked how, then, he expected the people, who were already so loaded down with burdens as to be almost unable to live, to pay this increased subsidy that he asked for, his humane reply was: "That is a question that it is not for me to answer."

Mr. Speaker, there is no commercial reason, no financial reason, relating to the interests of the public at large, for the passage of a bill of this character. It is a proposition of subsidy pure, simple, unadulterated, and I trust, sir, that the day will come when the people of this country will view in its proper moral aspect a proposition to the American Congress to subsidize one class of citizens of this country at the cost of other citizens of this country. Give it, sir, such garniture and sophistry as you may, and after all it is but human servitude and robbery under the forms of law. I hope, sir, soon to see a public sentiment of such robust integrity of purpose and of such high and firm sense of justice to all classes of the people, that it will lash these subsidy-mongers from the corridors of the Capitol as the money-changers were scourged from the Temple.

Sir, if there were any necessity of a public character, any obligation arising from good faith as to the original intent of the law, I would be perfectly willing to agree to a bill, but no such necessity or reason exists that can excuse the bill before us. The proposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] is peculiar. It is not simply to tax 75 cents or $1 per pound, if stemmed, all wrapper-tobacco that is in the bale, but it is a proposition to tax at that rate all the tobacco that is in the bale where there is even as much as a single pound or a single leaf of it which is suitable for wrapping purposes.

Mr. BUCK. Can not they import wrapper tobacco separately?

Mr. MORRISON. They can, at additional cost.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. They can, but if they make the slightest mistake, if there is any portion of the bale which is suitable for wrappers, or which anyone in authority chooses to consider suitable for wrappers, the entire bale is to be treated as subject to this proposed duty and inquisitorial treatment. Provisions in the tariff bill of the Ways and Means Committee, now on the Calendar, cover the original intent of the law—provisions drawn by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] on my right. It omits these pains and penalties and traps uncalled for, and searches out all that the law meant to reach, and that is more than ought really to be.

Sir, this hostile bill, so far exceeding anything ever contemplated by our past laws, is a thrust at a country of fruitful commerce and honest people. We should cultivate feelings of amity instead of engendering social and commercial antagonisms. The Netherlands and its dependencies take yearly over twenty million dollars' worth of our products, and we take only nine million dollars' worth of theirs. Have we not subsidized selfish classes enough in this country, at the cost of money direct from the masses and to the provocation of many foreign consumers of our staples? We provoked and suffer from the commercial hostility of Germany and France. Shall we leave the people neither cash nor commerce?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed under the rule for debate on this question has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK I should like to have five minutes to reply to the gentleman who has just taken his seat.

A MEMBER. Your side has already had fifteen minutes.

Mr. HISCOCK. If a request like this were made to me by any gentleman on the other side, I would cheerfully grant it. [Cries of "regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 90, nays 164, not voting 67; as follows:

ARMS AND EQUIPMENT FOR MILITIA.

The Committee on the Militia being called,

Mr. FORNEY said: I am directed by the Committee on the Militia to move to suspend the rules so that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union may be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia; and that the bill be now passed with the amendment reported by the Committee on the Militia. The bill has already passed the Senate, and has been favorably reported by the Committee on the Militia of this House with a single amendment.

The bill with the amendment of the Committee on the Militia, striking out, in line 6, "six hundred thousand" and inserting "four hundred thousand," was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1661 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the sum of $400,000 is hereby annually appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms and ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage for issue to the militia.

"SEC. 2. That said appropriation shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories, under the direction of the Secretary of War, according to the number of Senators and Representatives to which each State, respectively, is entitled in the Congress of the United States, and to the Territories and District of Columbia such proportion and under such regulations as the President may prescribe: Provided, however, That no State shall be entitled to the benefits of the appropriation apportioned to it unless the number of its regularly enlisted, organized, and active militia shall be at least one hundred men for each Senator and Representative to which such State is entitled in the Congress of the United States. And the amount of said appropriation which is thus determined not to be available shall be covered back into the Treasury.

"SEC. 3. That the purchase or manufacture of arms and ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage for the militia under the provisions of this act shall be made under the direction of the Secretary of War, as such arms, ordnance, and quartermaster's stores and camp equipage are now manufactured or otherwise provided for the use of the regular Army, and they shall be receipted for and shall remain the property of the United States, and be annually accounted for by the governors of the States and Territories, for which purpose the Secretary of War shall prescribe and supply the necessary blanks and make such regulations as he may deem necessary to protect the interest of the United States.

"SEC. 4. That all arms, equipments, ordnance stores, or tents which may become unserviceable or unsuitable shall be examined by a board of officers of the militia, and its report shall be forwarded by the governor of the State or Territory direct to the Secretary of War, who shall direct what disposition, by sale or otherwise, shall be made of them; and if sold, the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States."

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded on the motion to suspend the rules?

Mr. HOLMAN. In order that we may have an explanation, I ask a second, which, I hope, may be ordered by unanimous consent.

There being no objection, the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

Mr. FORNEY. Mr. Speaker, this bill proposes to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that—

The annual sum of $200,000 is appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms and equipments for the whole body of the militia, either by purchase or manufacture, by and on account of the United States.

The pending bill as reported by our committee proposes to amend this section by increasing the annual appropriation to $400,000. The section was enacted in 1808, when we had a population of 8,000,000. Now, when we have some fifty or sixty millions of people, it is proposed to make this increase in the appropriation. The real object is to encourage the organization of the militia of the country, to give them tents and camp equipage when they meet in their encampments for their annual drill, and also to give them arms of light caliber, so that, in the event of disturbance, we may have a large body of organized militia.

To-day we have about 85,000 organized militia and over 7,000,000 of unorganized militia. This bill, if passed, will, it is expected, encourage the organization of the militia. In New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, and Connecticut those States aid and assist their militia.

New York has over 12,000 well organized militia, Pennsylvania over 8,000, Massachusetts over 4,000, and Connecticut over 2,000. If this bill shall pass we think it will encourage other States, because it aids and assists the young men of the country, who are ready and willing to organize companies, by giving them tents, &c.

The bill also changes the law in another respect. It shows how the money appropriated is apportioned in other States. It is in section 2. It is to be according to the number of Senators and Representatives to which each State is entitled in the Congress of the United States, and to the District of Columbia, under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed, provided no State shall have any portion unless the number enlisted, organized militia, shall be one hundred men for each Senator and Representative. Section 3 also cures a defect in the present law by requiring the governors of the States and Territories annually to account for all the property turned over to them.

That is really, Mr. Speaker, about all there is in the bill. I will yield now to my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Before yielding will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORNEY. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does the bill provide for the exchange of new for old arms, or must the cash be paid to the State for that purpose?

Mr. FORNEY. It is intended to be given to the State. Section 4 provides—

That all arms, equipments, ordnance stores, or tents which may become unserviceable or unsuitable shall be examined by a board of officers of the militia, and its report shall be forwarded by the governor of the State or Territory direct to the Secretary of War, who shall direct what disposition, by sale or otherwise, shall be made of them; and if sold, the proceeds of such sale shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then the old arms, as I understand the gentleman, are to be replaced by new arms from the General Government?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Will the gentleman from Alabama be kind enough to state how much this increases this appropriation?

Mr. FORNEY. Two hundred thousand dollars annually. If the bill shall pass this will become a permanent appropriation of $400,000, instead of $200,000.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Have numerous petitions from the North and South asked for this?

Mr. FORNEY. We have received petitions from every part of the United States asking for the passage of this bill. I will yield now to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not seem to be in the Hall.

Mr. FORNEY. Then I will yield to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Committee on the Militia I desire to say a few words in behalf of this bill. I think it needs but little advocacy. In the first place, the militia of the country was specially favored by the Constitution. Gentlemen will recollect it is a part of the organic law of the land that the militia shall be fostered and encouraged. It provides for organizing, arming, and disciplining the militia, and governing such part of them as may be employed in the service of the United States. It simply shows that the founders of the Government were specially concerned there should always be a special militia of the Government. This is merely reformatory of the former law. Under the old law $200,000 is given for the militia, but no machinery is provided for the distribution of that fund. It is simply an appropriation of money without any means of carrying out the intention of the law in any orderly way. This bill increases the amount from $200,000 to $400,000. The Senate propose to appropriate $600,000, but the Committee on the Militia of this House thought that the amount should not exceed $400,000.

Mr. WILSON. Why?

Mr. MCADOO. I think a majority of the members of the House will agree with me this bill is an admirable one. Petitions have poured in to our committee from all portions of the country asking for its passage. You will have a just distribution of this fund, and under it you will have uniformity in the arms and accouterments of the militia. In one State now they have one style of arms and in another State another style of arms. Under this bill the distribution will be fairly apportioned and the militia will be uniformly and effectively armed throughout the United States. I hope sincerely the bill will pass.

Mr. WILSON. How is the amount to be distributed?

Mr. MCADOO. It is to be distributed equally to the States according to population.

Mr. WILSON. Is the whole amount of the annual expenditure consumed, or does any portion of it go back to the Treasury?

Mr. FORNEY. I understand the whole amount is expended.

Mr. WILSON. If the whole amount is not expended, I do not see the necessity of doubling it.

Mr. FORNEY. We want a larger body of militia. We only have 85,000, and we want to increase it to 200,000. We have about 25,000 men in our Army, and only 85,000 in the militia, while we have about 7,000,000 fighting men in the country.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. What is the necessity of having any fighting men now?

Mr. FORNEY. "In time of peace prepare for war;" that is the only reason I know. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEELE. I notice in section 2 of this bill it provides that the States and Territories are to have these arms. Then further along, in line 19, it says "no State shall have the benefit of this act unless it has a number of regularly enlisted men, &c.," leaving out altogether the word "Territories."

Mr. FORNEY. What is the gentleman's suggestion?

Mr. STEELE. I think in line 18, after the word "State," there should be added the words "or Territory," so as to make it comply with the preceding provision in line 12.

Mr. FORNEY. The gentleman will discover before the word "provided" that the arms to be distributed in the Territories and the District of Columbia are to be distributed under regulations to be prescribed by the President of the United States. The following are the words of the bill:

> And to the Territories and District of Columbia such proportion and under such regulations as the President may prescribe.

I think it is safe as it is.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Why has this committee cut the appropriation from $600,000, as reported by the Senate, down to $400,000?

Mr. FORNEY. Because they thought $400,000 was sufficient for the purpose. You will bear in mind that this is a permanent appropriation, and that there is a steady improvement going on in arms. If you purchase a large quantity under the terms of the bill, and improvements are made hereafter, such purchase will have to be thrown aside.

Mr. ROGERS. And you think $200,000 is too little?

Mr. FORNEY. The committee think $400,000 a proper sum.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. How much does our standing army cost the Government now?

Mr. FORNEY. About $25,000,000 annually. We have somewhere about 25,000 men, so that the cost is about $1,000 a man.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Four hundred thousand dollars is the amount fixed in the army appropriation bill, I believe. Now, do I understand this is to be in addition to that?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir. This is given to the militia of the country, and to provide them with tents. The real object is to give them tents, or protection when they are in their annual encampment.

At present those who are able to do so purchase their own tents, and those who are not must do without. This is to encourage them when they enter the encampment.

Mr. ROCKWELL. If you appropriate annually $400,000 in the army bill and pass $400,000 here, do you think it would be sufficient to carry out the object the committee had in view?

Mr. FORNEY. I do certainly. I believe that it will be sufficient.

Mr. STEELE. I believe I have the floor, and while I do not insist upon occupying it, I do insist upon the right to hear what is going on. [Laughter].

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been endeavoring to preserve order. The gentleman from Indiana is entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEELE. As I understand section 3 of this bill, the militia or the governor of the State, or the adjutant-general, will make requisition upon the General Government for all the arms and ordnance stores and tents they need. This still remains the property of the United States. It goes into the hands of the militia for their temporary use. Say to-day the Government issues $200,000 worth of arms and camp equipage, and it goes into the hands of the militia. They may go on a "bender" to-morrow, and allow the tents to be put away in a wet condition and no care taken of the ordnance stores. The tents will be damaged by the wet, become rotten and worthless, and then they have only to call a board of militia officers and say, "here, we have destroyed these tents and we want others;" and yet the very board of officers that permitted them to be destroyed will pass upon that question and say it is necessary and desirable that they should have new tents and stores. The old ones are turned back to the United States Government and a new supply furnished. Where is the protection afforded to the Government?

Mr. FORNEY. It is left to the Secretary of War to say what he will do. He can approve or disapprove the issue.

Mr. STEELE. There is no provision that they shall care for the property. They may take it, leave it out in the wet to become useless, rotten, or mildewed, and there is no provision requiring that any one shall be responsible for its care. It seems to me that there ought to be a limit to the time. They should not have the privilege of getting new tents every day, or every other day.

Mr. MCADOO. I think the bill is sufficiently guarded as it is. The United States would not accept property which had been destroyed by carelessness.

Mr. STEELE. What provision do you make for protecting the property?

Mr. MCADOO. The provisions of the third section impose certain duties upon the officers of the Government in charge of the stores. The Secretary of War is to examine and approve or disapprove the requisition.

Mr. STEELE. I am in favor of the organization of the militia, and believe in encouraging it; but it seems to me there ought to be some limitation here.

Mr. HERBERT. The amount of the appropriation here is so small that there can not be any loss. There will not be enough in fact to go round, and it will necessitate the best possible care of this property.

Mr. STEELE. But it is the property and still remains the property of the United States, and ought to be turned back to the United States in good condition.

Mr. LONG. But that is already the law.

Mr. HERBERT. There is a standing appropriation now for this purpose. That has been the rule for seventy-five years.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. This only increases the amount.

Mr. STEELE. I have not been here for seventy-five years; if that is the law now I shall not object.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like permission to ask the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. STEELE. I am informed it is the law now. If it is I am surprised it is in the bill; but if so I shall not object.

Mr. HERBERT. I am informed that that is the law; that it is substantially the same now as it has been heretofore.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will state to the gentleman that it is the law now. These arms are given out to the governors of the States, and are issued by the governors to the companies under rules and regulations adopted by the State government. The governor of the State is responsible to the Federal Government.

Mr. STEELE. The language of this bill is:

> They shall be receipted for and shall remain the property of the United States, and be annually accounted for by the governors of the States and Territories, for which purpose, &c.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is in keeping with the whole bill. The whole bill is wasteful in its character and unnecessary.

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Alabama if the Secretary of War asks for this additional $200,000, or is it recommended by any Department?

Mr. FORNEY. It is, sir. If the gentleman will read the report he will find that the Chief of Ordnance has been asking for this for a number of years.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The Chief of Ordnance?

Mr. FORNEY. The Secretary of War generally adopts what the Chief of Ordnance recommends.

Mr. BURROWS. Is it in the interest of any manufacturer of arms?

Mr. FORNEY. They are to be American arms.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will ask the gentleman from Alabama a question. He said: "In time of peace prepare for war." What war are you preparing for now?

Mr. FORNEY. I hope the next war will be in the distant future, perhaps some fifty years hence.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution of the following title:

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 20, 1886.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5878) to amend the act entitled "An act to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883.

A bill (H. R. 3504) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes relating to inspectors of hulls and boilers.

A bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe.

JURISDICTION IN PATENT CASES.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the Committee on Patents I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill which I send to the desk.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter the United States district and circuit courts shall have no jurisdiction to hear or to try any case arising from the actual use of any patent right, or its infringement by such use, by any person in or citizen of the United States or the Territories, wherein the amount in controversy does not exceed $200 against one person or citizen.

SEC. 2. That purchasers of any patent right for actual use shall not be liable to damages, royalty, or for value of the same, or for infringing the same in any manner, who at the date of such purchase had no knowledge of the claims of any third person, or that the inventor of the same has an interest therein adverse to the seller thereof. That no person who shall in good faith purchase, use, manufacture, or sell without previous knowledge of the existence of a patent therefor, any article, machine, machinery, or other thing for the exclusive use, sale, or manufacture of which any patent has been or hereafter may be granted to any person, persons, or corporation whatever, shall be liable, in damages or otherwise, for an infringement of such patent until after written notice of the existence thereof shall have been personally served on such person or persons or corporation, as the case may be, and such infringement shall be thereafter continued.

SEC. 3. That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

SEC. 4. That nothing herein contained shall affect any pending suit or proceeding in any of the courts of the United States or in any court of any of the several States.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, before demanding a second I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether this bill comes from the Committee on Patents.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not permissible until a second has been ordered.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought I had a right to know whether the gentleman was reporting this bill from a committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to say to the gentleman from Georgia that I am familiar enough with the rules of this House to know that on the third Monday of the month no one has a right to move to suspend the rules without authority from a committee; and I would state further to the gentleman that the Committee on Patents authorized me to present this bill to the House and move to suspend the rules and pass it during the last session. That resolution of the committee has not been altered in any degree whatever, and I stand here now representing the majority of that committee; and further, I will say to the gentleman that the bill which I have presented was shaped by the committee and I was instructed to present it.

Mr. HAMMOND. The word "yes" would have answered my inquiry. I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. A second being demanded, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to act as tellers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask that there be unanimous consent for a second.

Mr. HAMMOND. I object.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 108, noes 60.

The SPEAKER. There is a second, and, under the rules of the House, thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of the motion and fifteen minutes in opposition. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] to control the time in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] in opposition to it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, the bill is so plain and so easily understood that I have no disposition to discuss it, unless there be a desire upon the other side to debate it. I am willing to submit the question without discussion.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to discuss it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will say generally of the bill at this time that the object and purpose of it is to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles who have bought them in the open market, without knowledge or intention of infringement upon the rights or privileges of any patentee. The purpose of the bill is to protect such innocent purchasers from abuses which are now practiced upon them. There is no design in the bill to interfere with or to injure in any degree honest patentees of any honest invention, nor is its intention to interfere with the value of the patent rights of any individual, but that the sole purpose of the bill is to protect the masses from prosecutions for infringements or fancied infringements which have occurred from ignorance of the purchase of patents.

Speaking for my own section of the country, I can say that the people have been greatly vexed and greatly annoyed by black-mailers and those who have or who claim to have patents upon articles which have been purchased innocently by farmers and other innocent purchasers in the open market under the belief that they had a right to do so, but who have been compelled at great inconvenience and hardship to respond to suits in the Federal courts upon charges of infringements.

I do not intend to enter upon a discussion of the details of the bill at this time. I desire simply to state my position and to emphasize the statement, that the sole purpose of the Committee on Patents, who have carefully studied the subject and prepared this bill, is to protect such innocent purchasers from the persecutions which they are now subjected to at the hands of black-mailers and other unjust claimants. I reserve the remainder of my time. How much time have I consumed, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Four minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Speaker, in the four minutes consumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] he stated four times that the object of this bill is solely to protect innocent purchasers against "black-mailers." If that be the object, the gentleman who framed the bill understands neither the use of the English language nor the law of patents. Let us look at the matter for a moment. The first section seems to undertake to take away from the United States courts jurisdiction in all cases of patents in which the amount of damage is not at least $200 against each individual defendant. The last section declares that—

Nothing herein contained shall affect any pending suit or proceeding in any of the courts of the United States or in any court of any of the several States.

It has been held over and over, until it is laid down as familiar doctrine in Curtis on Patents, and every other book on patents, that a State court has no jurisdiction whatever of the infringement of a patent. The section on this subject in Curtis is 496. This bill seems, therefore, a declaration that in all cases where the damages do not exceed $200 against each person sued there shall be no suit for the infringement of a patent right. I do not know the statistics on the subject, but I will venture to guess that seven-eighths of the patents granted in this country are of such character that individual infringements will not amount to $200 damages each. This bill seems, therefore, a declaration that the constitutional protection which is thrown around patent rights shall belong only to those great and magnificent patents involving thousands of dollars, while the men who by their brain and toil have brought forth the small patents shall have no protection from this Government.

Mr. Speaker, the section from which I come has very little interest in patents so far as the protection of the patentee is concerned. I can, therefore, have no wish in opposing this bill but to protect the rights of American citizens wherever they are involved. The Constitution declares that Congress shall have power—

To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

The Supreme Court of the United States has more than once declared that a patent is a solemn contract between the patentee and the Government, by which the exclusive use is granted to him for a limited time in consideration of public use ever afterwards, and which, like any other contract, can be set aside only for fraud. This bill, therefore, in effect seems to declare that seven-eighths of all the patents in the United States shall by these three sections be cut down so as to be practically valueless. For, mark you, the bill gives no jurisdiction to a State court, and under the present law no State court has jurisdiction of any suit for the infringement of a patent.

This first section, it will be observed, has nothing to do with good faith or bad faith. Under it a man may in open market buy or sell a patent without authority in the patentee's face, and answer, "I damage you only to the amount of $199, and you can not sue me anywhere." That is the first section of the bill as it seems to be intended.

Mr. ROWELL. Suppose, in a suit, damages to the amount of $250 were claimed, but only $50 damages proved; would that defeat the jurisdiction of the court?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do not know whether that is the intention. Nobody can answer with certainty what is the intended effect of this bill in that particular. But here is the declaration that no court of the United States shall have—

Jurisdiction to hear or to try any case arising from the actual use of a patent right or its infringement by such use, by any person in, or citizen of, the United States, or the Territories, wherein the amount in controversy does not exceed $200 against one person or citizen.

In reply to the gentleman's question I will give my own opinion. I think that "the amount in controversy" in such cases must be determined by the declaration, and that, therefore, this bill, while it seems to hold out a promise to individuals that they may infringe patents and avoid suits in this way, is a trap in which they will be caught, for the amount necessary to give jurisdiction of the controversy can, in each case for damages, be stated in the declaration.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. If jurisdiction is given by the amount claimed, then of what value is that first section?

Mr. HAMMOND. None in the world, but to mislead the country, if the provision means what I understand it to mean.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me ask the gentleman, and I hope he will be candid enough to reply, whether the Supreme Court of the United States has not already declared that the jurisdiction of the court is fixed by the verdict, by the amount which may be found due upon the final trial, and not by the amount claimed in the declaration?

Mr. HAMMOND. For damages in patent cases?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In any case where the jurisdiction of the court is involved?

Mr. HAMMOND. No such decision was ever made in a patent case for damages, and I venture to say no such decision will ever be made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; because the United States courts have exclusive jurisdiction in all patent cases.

Mr. HAMMOND. Therefore the question of limitation of amount in a patent case is out of consideration.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But may be governed by the rule generally established, that it is only the amount found due that fixes the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. HAMMOND. I mean to be perfectly respectful when I say, that is nonsense.

Now, let us look at the next section, the section as to bona fide purchasers. I have shown that the first section has nothing to do with good or bad faith. Here is the section in regard to bona fide purchasers:

SEC. 2. That purchasers of any patent right for actual use shall not be liable to damages, royalty, or for value of the same, or for infringing the same in any manner, who, at the date of such purchase, had no knowledge of the claims of any third person, or that the inventor of the same has an interest therein adverse to the seller thereof.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when a man obtains a patent, he is required by the law to have marked on it that the article is patented. His letters patent are of record here, just as our title-deeds to real estate are recorded in the proper offices.

There is no such thing as a bona fide purchaser of a patented article without notice that it is patented. If the mark of patent right is on the thing, the man who buys it with his eyes open can not be an innocent purchaser against the right of the patentee.

Again, that declares if he buys it for his personal use he may infringe it in any way whatever and not be liable. He may buy an article to use it personally and put men all over the country to manufacture it, and yet not be liable in damages, because he was an innocent purchaser without notice.

The next paragraph of that section declares that no person who shall in good faith purchase, use, manufacture, or sell, without previous knowledge of the existence of a patent therefor, any article, machine, machinery, or other thing for the exclusive use, sale, or manufacture of which any patent has been or hereafter may be granted to any person, persons, or corporation whatever, shall be liable, in damages or otherwise, for an infringement of such patent until after written notice of the existence thereof shall have been personally served, &c.

All a scoundrel has to do is to infringe a patent and run faster than the marshal. The greater the rascal and the better the racer are all the tests whether there can be recovery. He is a witness in court. He can swear to his good faith, after he is caught; before he is caught he he will not be liable at all, because he is liable under the bill only for damages occurring after personal service of notice of his wrong.

I have said all I wish to say about this matter. I repeat that in my section of the country there are very few patentees. We have but little enough concern, care little for them in any such sense as that. And if I were seeking to place myself upon the side which the gentleman from Illinois calls the "masses," I would go in for depriving patentees of their constitutional right. They are decidedly in the minority. But I understand that the same good faith, that the same high consideration which should actuate us in keeping treaties with foreign nations, ought, with double force, to compel us to keep constitutional contracts with our own fellow-citizens. For these reasons I hope this bill will not pass.

I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thought I was reserving much more time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is a matter with which the gentleman from Ohio is somewhat familiar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has four minutes remaining.

Mr. HAMMOND. I yield that time to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, four minutes is not time enough to discuss this bill as it ought to be discussed. I submit if ever there was a bald attempt to kill the goose that lays the golden egg this is such an attempt. The industries of this country depend for their origin and growth more upon the encouragement given to the inventor by our patent system than upon every other influence and all other causes combined. It is due to our patent system that we to-day excel all others as a manufacturing nation. This bill practically "wipes out" our patent system; and, as my honored friend on the left [Mr. HAMMOND] said, while it may leave in a degree unimpaired some monopolies, if such a thing as a monopoly can in fairness be said to exist in this country—and there is what is near allied to a monopoly—while the provisions of this bill leave them unharmed, they at the same time not only leave unprotected but practically confiscate the property of thousands who by lives of thought and toil have laid the foundation of our magnificent industries. It legalizes the robbery of these, the most deserving and most numerous class of inventors.

As has well been said by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], not one in a thousand need be swindled unless he consents to be, and is in fact, consciously, a party to it. The law requires that each patented article shall be so stamped, including the date of the patent, that no one need be imposed upon if he exercises care. It is true there may be devices covered by patents which are parts of a machine and so located as not to be observable, but these are rare exceptions, and fraud or imposition in such cases is unheard of. Every intelligent person knows that under every system of laws, however perfect, some hardships will result. It is impossible to conceive of a system so perfect as to be free from hardships in individual cases, and our patent laws, in their practical operations, may, in isolated instances, be the instrument of wrong and frequently of annoyance, but compared with the inestimable blessings the patent laws, as administered, confer with lavish hand upon all our people, the inconveniencies a few may suffer are as nothing, and certainly can offer no semblance of justification for the wholesale confiscation of property in patents as would result from the enactment of such a law as is here proposed. What does this bill propose? To take away the remedy in case of trespass upon and injury to the class of property created by our patent laws. It in effect authorizes A to appropriate to himself the property of B, without compensation and without redress. The right is left, the remedy taken away.

In my judgment this bill could not be more offensive to justice unless it literally legalized the calling of the foot-pad, and afforded immunity to pickpockets. Since it must be evident that the acts named differ from those permitted by this bill only in this, that the foot-pad places the victim under duress before he robs him, while this bill authorizes the appropriation of the property of another without violence, and leaves the victim without remedy and without redress. In each case the victim loses his property, but in case the foot-pad takes it, it may be recovered, but the individual who is robbed under the provisions of this bill is remediless.

Not to exceed 10 per cent. of all the patents issued by the Government of the United States prove valuable to the patentee. Why? Because the larger per cent. of patented machines and devices mark so slight an improvement, although an important improvement, in the art that the inventor is unable to reap substantial profits. Nevertheless, each improvement marks an advanced step in the art to which it belongs; and while it is usually the men who make great strides, extraordinary improvements in an art, who realize great profits, yet it is the seemingly less important improvements that have built up and made prosperous the vast and varied industries of our country.

This bill has for its manifest object to deprive the honest inventor, whose labors have added to the wellbeing of the whole people, of his remedy to recover from the person who has willfully and knowingly taken from him his property, that which the Constitution and the laws of the country say shall be his property for a term of years. I say you prevent his recovering from the man who willfully and in violation of the Constitution and the laws of the country takes possession of his property and converts it to his own uses. Pass this bill and you authorize every man to seize upon and convert to his own use the property of his neighbor. The product of the brain and hands of one of our citizens—if it is a new and useful improvement in any art—is by law property as much as a horse or cow, and the offense of taking the one without compensation is as great as taking the other, and is in conscience, and should be in law, as censurable.

This bill, if it should become a law, wipes out at one stroke of the pen property rights of more than one hundred millions of dollars in value. It is, in fact, impossible to calculate the mischief it will do. Ninety per cent. of the present thriving industries of the country are built upon inventions covered by patents. "But then," says some friend, "we are being robbed by the system."

Mr. Speaker, I can show you—can demonstrate that instead of that being true this system has cheapened every product that is used in the house, in the barn, in the field, in the mill, in the shop, the forest, the factory, and on the ocean. It has cheapened all the articles we use. Instead of imposing burdens it has scattered blessings, and this covert attempt to steal the blessings while destroying the source from whence they proceed is utterly indefensible. I wish I had time to examine this bill in detail in order to show its enormities.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I will ask unanimous consent, in view of the importance of this subject, that the gentleman from Ohio be permitted to have five minutes more.

Mr. RANDALL. There ought to be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I object; for the reason that I want the bill to be disposed of as soon as possible.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield now three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN].

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me almost impossible to make any satisfactory explanation of this measure in the short space of three minutes; but it is due to the House to say this much: that there was brought before the Committee on Patents information of an unlimited number of abuses of the patent laws of the United States, which this bill is designed to remedy.

This bill is not intended to affect the patent system of the country, or the rights of patentees under it, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Ohio. It has no such object in view. It is intended to prevent abuses which have been perpetrated under the patent laws of the country and upon innocent purchasers or users of patented articles. The committee have information of the fact that owners of patents in numerous instances have knowingly and without protest seen their rights infringed, and then have gone before the courts and brought suit against the innocent purchasers of the patented article with a view of obtaining damages for the alleged injury. This bill only prohibits damages in such cases; and if a man sees that an infringement is going on of his rights let him take out an injunction and restrain such acts, or else prevent him from recovering damages from innocent users.

But gentlemen say that these patents are registered, just as in a court of registry in our counties, and that all persons have legal notice. Why, sir, it is 3,000 miles or more to California; and parties claiming to have rights under patents and making sales, on examination of the records here in the city of Washington, where alone they are kept, it is found there never was a valid transfer perhaps, and hence suits are instituted for damages.

Now, the meaning of all this is to put a restraint upon such abuses, not to interfere with the law or to prevent the encouragement of the system of patents. It is to promote the patent system instead of bringing it into disrepute before the people of the country. It will protect the people while it protects the rights of the patentee, by preventing the injustice and abuses of the present law.

The gentleman from Georgia on my left refers to the courts and the construction of the law as laid down in patent cases. Of course it is well known that no court has jurisdiction except a United States court; but it has it for even 5 cents in amount, so that there is no difficulty upon that point. But when a party stands up and sees his rights infringed by an innocent purchaser this prevents any recovery for damages in such cases beyond the amount fixed in the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Georgia takes exception to this bill on account of the remedy being defective. In reply, I have simply to say that the lawyers who represent a patent right would have no trouble in shaping their pleading to give jurisdiction to the Federal court. They are ingenious fellows. He also makes objection because, he says in section 4, it refers to pending cases in the State courts, and will not interfere with them.

He makes fun of the fourth section, because the last clause in it makes this reference to patent cases in the State court; but he must admit that the purpose of that section is fully stated when it prevents interference with any suits now pending. That is the sole purpose of the fourth section, and he will not contend that the section does not guard pending cases.

I concede that the last clause might be omitted because only the Federal courts have jurisdiction; but it does not hurt the bill and should not be a stumbling-block in the way of any gentleman, whether he be a constitutional lawyer or not.

The real purpose of the bill is this: that the masses of the people, those who do not enjoy the benefits of the "golden egg" referred to by my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], but who buy the patented instruments, shall not be involved in damages and dragged into the courts by wealthy corporations until served with written notice. That is the central point in the bill, and that legislation is needed. Take for instance one or two counties in my own district. Hundreds of farmers have been led by oily-tongued gentlemen to invest in the drive-well patents, and other patents of that class, and supposed, having made the purchase, that they were entitled to use them. These farmers have been carried from the United States circuit court to the United States Supreme Court, and are here now trying to protect themselves at the national capital, in that court-room, from the injury sought to be inflicted by speculators in patent rights.

The purpose of this bill is to prevent this gross injustice to poor, ignorant men, who can not judge of the question whether patents have been properly issued or whether there is a good title in the man who comes to them with a patent. The purpose of the bill is that, and that alone. And now those who are fighting that object simply carp and make fun of a section which may be a little broader than is necessary to protect present pending litigations.

I say, Mr. Speaker, this bill provides much-needed legislation. The patent system is becoming too powerful. My friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] who is always eloquent, and who can always put things in the superlative, talks about the "golden egg," and would convey the impression that the very foundations of the Republic would tumble from beneath our feet if this bill becomes a law. Yes, sir, this is the golden egg to powerful corporations. We know that often in these inventions it is not the genius of America that is protected. The brainy man who gets up the invention is taken hold of, his inventions and discoveries are taken out of his hands and fortunes are made by men of wealth. And not only does he lose the fruits of his invention, but farmers and poor men all over the country suffer from the inroads made upon them by the power of these wealthy men. I submit this is a good, safe bill to vote for, and is an additional guard for the masses of the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. O'DONNELL].

Mr. O'ODNNELL. Mr. Speaker, while the House is considering the measure before it I desire to call attention to some facts in regard to our patent laws.

THE INGENIOUS NATION.

That this is an ingenious and inventive nation is attested by the fact that since the organization of our system of government 343,451 articles have been patented in this country, embracing about everything which can be thought of. In this number are not included 14,451 designs, 10,677 reissues, 12,910 trade-marks, and 4,695 labels, but the more than a third of a million embrace only valuable inventions and discoveries. Up to the year 1836 there were only 9,957 patents granted by this Government.

In 1840 there were 1,445 issued, the intervening years producing many thousands. The rate kept growing, and in the year 1850 6,981 inventions covered by letters patent. This was followed by accretions each week, and in 1860 there were 26,642 granted. In the next decade the number increased each year, 1870 showing 98,460, to be swelled to 223,211 in 1880, and up to the beginning of the present year the total is, as I have stated, 343,451 articles of about every name and device, protected by letters patent from the Government of the United States of America. In fifty years our people invented and obtained patents on 333,494 improvements. During last year nearly 2,000 patents per month were granted, the exact figures being 23,331. The inventive genius of our people has brought into being and maintains a great department of the Government, whose cost last year was $1,024,378.85; but it is but fair to state that notwithstanding this outlay the department paid a profit of $163,710.30, and that division has a balance in the Treasury of very nearly $3,000,000.

THE INVENTIONS OF THE WORLD.

In all the governments of the world during the past year 62,894 patents were issued under governmental sanction. More than a third of this number were inventions by the people of the United States of America. I have taken occasion to obtain the figures, and I find that during the last calendar year patents were granted as follows by the nations of the earth: United States of America, 23,331; Great Britain, 16,101; France, 6,722; Germany, 4,018; Belgium, 3,682; Austro-Hungary, 2,470; Ontario, 2,239; Italy, 1,350; Spain, 500; Sweden, 200; Russia, 181; Norway, 100; China, Japan, Turkey, Mexico, and the British colonies each issued a few, aggregating about 2,000. You will see the universal Yankee nation nearly beats the world in the march of improvement. The inventive genius of our land has contributed wonderfully to man's enjoyment, lightening labor and making many hard tasks easier.

THE INCREASE OF PATENTS.

The people of all the world are turning attention to inventions. I have noted the increase of patents in this country. In England, Scotland and Ireland in the year 1700 but 2 patents were issued; fifty years after the number had increased to 7; in 1800, to 117; in 1850, to 1,281; in 1866, to 6,363, and last year the number issued, as already stated, was 16,101. Invention has engrossed the faculties of all peoples, but in no land has the spirit been as prevalent or as productive of good as in our own favored country.

LIBERAL PATENT LAWS.

Our laws are generous in their protection to inventors, which is simply right and just. An inventor fairly earns governmental protection for that improvement evolved from his study, thought, and genius. Very many patents have conferred great benefits upon humanity and aided progress. The first patent granted was in 1591, in England, for the exclusive privilege of printing books, an excellent commencement of great results. The inventor who brings a new device or invention that shall aid man and lighten his burdens, is a benefactor of the race, and is so regarded in law and in fact. The statutes secure to him the exclusive benefit that may arise from his invention for seventeen years. There is but one Government (Belgium) which is more generous with the inventor than ours.

Invention has been termed an exact science, and the Government designs to throw strong protection about the rights and property of the inventor. No one desires to disturb the patentee in the enjoyment of his rights in reaping the golden fruit of his toil and brain. Many inventions are the product of a lifetime of study, and no one feels that the law is unjust in that it gives the minimum advantage to the inventor and inflicts the maximum disadvantage on the public. It is conceded that a person who has worked out an original and valuable process from his own brain, and may have incurred great expense in bringing it to a practical issue—it may be after years of protracted toil and anxiety—should have secured to him by law during a reasonable time the exclusive privilege of gathering the substantial reward of his own invention. That is only just and reasonable. The law provides for that; no one questions the propriety of the statute. Inventors earn the gratitude of mankind. For years their lot is filled with failure and distress, often a bitter experience. This can be summed up in the statement that not one patent out of the hundred granted ever returns value to the originator.

PATENT WRONGS.

Having spoken thus of patent rights, I desire to call attention to patent wrongs. The patent laws of this nation are the occasion of much injustice and rapacious injury. In every section citizens are persecuted and swindled by the provisions of the patent laws. The burden of wrong is becoming unbearable, and the people are growing indignantly restive under the infliction of this patent plunder under the form of law. This species of legalized robbery is carried on under the guise of infringements. A citizen buys an article from a dealer, pays him for it, uses what he has bought and paid for, and in a few years thereafter is called upon by a stranger, who acquaints him with the fact that for years he has been violating the laws of the land by using an implement or machine, as the case may be, which he has bought and paid for, but which, it is alleged, is an infringement on some patent.

The manufacturer and dealer should be made responsible, but frequently their whereabouts is unknown, and in consequence the purchaser and user is made amenable. His violation of law can be compromised easily, for the owner of the infringed patent does not worry about the law so long as he can be reimbursed; and he generally extorts a good price, which is paid to avoid litigation. There is not a member of this House but who can recall a constituent who has been plundered by the infringement device. In Michigan the farmers especially have been mercilessly plundered, and I have no doubt the same wrong obtains in other States. In the majority of cases the money thus obtained does not inure to the benefit of the inventors or their representatives, but is enriching speculators who have obtained control of the patent and gone forth on their conquering infringing war. They reap where others sow. They swim freely and profitably among the windings of the law.

In the district I have the honor to represent the farming community have suffered grievously from this legalized wrong. I know of many cases, but cite but one: A farmer ordered through an agent a certain machine; the demand that year was far in excess of the supply, and the farmer was induced to take that of another manufacturer, as it was guaranteed to do as good work as the one he preferred. He accepted it on trial, and finding it unsatisfactory, returned it. The product passing through the machine in the brief time it was used sold for $10. Afterward the manufacturers of the machine the farmer wanted and ineffectually endeavored to obtain notified him the one he had used on trial was an infringement, and after investigation the farmer found that under our patent laws he was technically liable for having used the machine a few hours, and to save the costs of law paid at the rate of about $5 per hour for his infringement of a patent. This is one of the thousands of cases of legal extortion coming under notice everywhere. The person who unwittingly infringes is subject to expensive prosecution and is liable to punishment for violation of the law of the land when he never dreamed that he was transgressing any statute.

The patent speculators gather their greatest returns among the farming community, the honest tillers of the soil, who seek to deal fairly and justly, but are, under our patent laws, made victims of gross wrong. The word "patent" is from pateo (I lie open), but often the word is a misnomer. Under the present system a purchaser is not safe in buying a patented article until he secures a first-class patent attorney to explore the chambers of the Patent Office to ascertain if the machine or device he intends securing is an infringement on some one's invention. All citizens are not able or willing to retain attorneys versed in the intricacies of patent law, as the fees might amount to more than the cost of the article they designed buying. Owing to this circumstance the people, in the presence of the manifold and numerous abuses they have been compelled to endure, ask relief from Congress, and they should be heard.

THE REMEDY.

Knowing the injustice the people had suffered these many years, and, desiring to lift that burden from them, on the 1st day of February I offered a bill in this House providing immunity for innocent purchasers of patented articles from prosecution for damages and infringement. This bill is numbered 4965, and I believe is a very good one. Its provisions are simple and calculated to right a wrong. I quote the section designed to relieve the people. It enacts:

That the purchaser of any device, implement of husbandry, machine, article, compound, process, discovery, or other invention covered by existing patents in whole or in part, or for which patents have been or may be hereafter applied for, where said article was purchased for a valuable consideration, for the personal use of said purchaser, without knowledge that said article was covered by patent or patents, or patents on the same applied for, shall not be liable in any manner for damages, royalty, or otherwise for an infringement of said patents by having used the same; and no suit at law for damages, royalty, or for the value of said patented article shall be sustained in any court against any person or persons for alleged infringement where the defendant purchased said invention in good faith for his own personal use.

Such a law is imperatively demanded. The purchasers are not the only ones who suffer from our patent laws. The manufacturer should also be friendly to the bill I have offered, for at present a competitor who sets up a claim of infringement on an article another manufacturer is making can frighten people to such extent as to deter them from buying, for they do not want to hazard a lawsuit even when they are convinced the claimant possesses no rights. As a rule manufacturers are responsible; and if there is any question of infringement raised let the patentee seek redress from them. The bona fide purchaser should in no way become liable; the farmer, especially, should not be involved in these "nice, sharp quillets of the law." The great producing classes deserve better treatment.

UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Many gentlemen of ripe legal minds tell me the bill 4965 will, if passed, be unconstitutional. No member of this House has a more sacred regard for that grand instrument than I have. If the Constitution is a league with patent sharpers and despoilers and this proposed enactment is contrary to its provisions, then an amendment is in order, for it should not be the source of such rank injustice—such oppression and legalized wrong.

TIME TO ENACT.

Mr. Speaker, this bill 4965 went to the Committee on Patents over nine months since, and, I understand, has been considered. A somewhat similar measure has been agreed on, and is before us, but strong objections are urged against it.

I have been in hopes the bill I have quoted from would be reported favorably and placed on its passage. The Committee on Patents has not been heard from, I understand, until to-day, for many sessions. Now that they offer this measure let us enact it though another bill is preferable. This House owes it to the nation that some measure be enacted that shall take away the legal right to inflict great wrongs. The people should not be compelled to suffer longer. Shall this just measure be passed, and thereby remove causes for litigation and expense? I grant that the bill reported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] has a feature that is objectionable to some. Strike out that portion and give the relief an oppressed community ask; or, as I think, better still, enact the bill 4965, which I had the honor of offering, and which, like the one now before us, has but one design—to protect innocent purchasers of patented articles from prosecution for infringement.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is the old struggle between monopoly and anti-monopoly which I have witnessed on this floor on patent bills during the last ten years I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have never known a case where the interest of the people came in conflict with monopoly on this floor but some one would arise and endeavor to create the belief that the bill protecting the rights of the people was unconstitutional. That was done in the case of the interstate commerce bill, it was done in reference to the bill which passed last session known as the oleomargarine bill. What we witness to-day is but a repetition of what has heretofore taken place on occasions when the same bill in substance has been under consideration.

There are some gentlemen who put on a Sir Oracle air, and who take it for granted that none but themselves have ever read or are able to comprehend the Constitution.

This bill, or substantially the same bill, was introduced into this House in 1882 by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CASWELL], and the vote then taken, notwithstanding the flings and sneers at those who have been seeking to obtain this relief, notwithstanding the objections, constitutional and otherwise, of members, passed that bill by over two-thirds majority.

But, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], that he is mistaken when he asserts that an inventor has any constitutional right in his invention. The Constitution simply clothes Congress with the power to protect inventors under just such conditions as Congress in its discretion may prescribe. The bill before the House simply seeks to provide a remedy, for abuses practiced upon those charged with infringements. As I said in my opening remarks, the bill does not seek to protect any wrongdoer in willful infringement of an invention. It simply seeks to protect the honest and innocent purchaser and user who buys an article in the open market without any previous knowledge whatever that he is infringing on the rights of any one.

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for debate has expired.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not let us have filibustering over this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House do now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 87.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 38, noes 124; the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote.

Mr. MILLS. I call for tellers or the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. MILLS and Mr. TOWNSHEND were appointed.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 52, noes 88.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I move to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit the question to the Chair, whether the motion to reconsider is in order when the yeas and nays have been ordered on a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. It is. But there can not be another motion to reconsider if the House shall again order the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPRINGER. Is not this the rule that where the original motion can not be reconsidered, a subsidiary motion to that can not be reconsidered?

The SPEAKER. But the original motion here can be reconsidered.

Mr. SPRINGER. A motion to adjourn can not be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. That motion has not yet been voted on. It has been always held that the House can reconsider a vote once. By the Constitution one-fifth of the members present can order the yeas and nays. The vote ordering them can be reconsidered by a majority, and the ordering of the yeas and nays is then subject to the renewed demand of one-fifth of the members present.

Mr. MILLS. I withdraw the motion to reconsider the vote ordering the yeas and nays.

A MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 263) providing for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass.

The message also announced that the Senate returned to the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

A bill (S. 2982) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of streets by a railway for the purpose of transporting materials to fill about the base of the Washington monument.

Joint resolution (S. R. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands near Chicago, Ill.;

A bill (S. 2806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed or to be filed by the State of Missouri or her agent or agents for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, and examined and accepted by, the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress;

A bill (S. 1189) for the relief of Bessie S. Gilmore; and

A bill (S. 2725) to construct a road to the National Cemetery at Corinth, Miss.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendments the bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 1813) for the relief of Pattison & Caldwell; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 67) for the relief of William B. Isaacs & Co.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette, and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company, of Arizona, the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation, and had appointed Mr. DAWES, Mr. HARRISON, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas, as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. MILLS to adjourn; and there were—yeas 122, nays 127, not voting 72; as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 21, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the Supervising Architect of that Department as to the necessity of an additional vault for the storage of silver; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect of that Department in regard to an appropriation for additional ground at Saint Paul, Minn.; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and calling attention to suggestions as to legislation affecting that company and its interests contained in that report; which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BECK. I present the petition of John E. Clements and 20 others, citizens of Louisville, Ky., praying for a reduction of the special tax on oleomargarine. It ought to go to the Committee on Finance, I think, after reading it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Similar petitions have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; that committee has nothing to do with the subject-matter. The petition is very brief, and reads thus:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, respectfully represent that we are consumers of oleomargarine in our own homes. We respectfully petition your honorable bodies that the annual license tax charged against dealers in oleomargarine, both wholesale and retail, be reduced to correspond with the annual license taxes on dealers in whisky, beer, tobacco, and cigars. And we also request that permission be given to dealers to take out license for the sale of oleomargarine by the month, such privilege being always granted to dealers in spirits and tobaccos. We call your attention to the manifest unfairness which compels a marketman, or provision dealer, or grocer, or any one who sells necessary household supplies, to pay from five to fifty times as much license for the sale of oleomargarine and butter substitutes as is required from a dealer in whisky, beer, tobacco, or cigars. Also, a dealer who needs a license for one or two months should not be compelled to pay for an entire year. The tax of two cents per pound on oleomargarine, when sold by the manufacturer, is ample and abundant to carry out the objects of the statute without the unreasonable hardships caused by the exorbitant license-fees imposed in the law as it now stands.

That, I insist, is purely a matter for the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit to the Senate the motion of the Senator from Kentucky to refer this petition to the Committee on Finance. Similar petitions have heretofore been referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BECK. I can not help that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so referred.

Mr. HOAR. I present several similar petitions of E. W. Blanchard, and 89 others, citizens of Boston, Mass., which I move be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts presents similar petitions and moves that they be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That reference will be made, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a similar petition signed by several citizens of Davenport, Iowa, and move its reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented the petition of Harman Combes, Charles B. Shaw, and 105 other citizens of New York, praying for legislation authorizing the Secretary of War to contract with Charles Stoughton and his associates for the entire work of improving the Harlem River, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Francis Rotch, of Morris, Otsego County, New York, in reference to the service of his father in the Army during the late war. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a petition of 69 ministers (representing 5,000 church members) of the North Nebraska Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the passage of the Chinese indemnity bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GIBSON presented a petition of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, State of Louisiana, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1579) relative to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented a petition of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge of the Independent Order of Good Templars, State of Delaware, praying for the favorable consideration and early passage of the bill (S. 1579) granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right to determine by ballot whether intoxicating liquors may hereafter be legally manufactured and sold in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of a very large number of leading importers and merchants of Saint Louis, Mo., favoring the early enactment of the bill (S. 1877) the object of which is the enlargement of the provisions of the present act, commonly called the immediate-transportation act, approved June 10, 1880, so that the facilities of importation to merchants at the interior ports may as nearly as possible correspond with those at the outer ports, and suggesting that the bill referred to affords many such needed reforms and relief, and at the same time as amply protects the revenue as does the present law; and they urge speedy action upon that bill.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present the memorial of J. Goldsborough Bruff relative to a national coat of arms. It is accompanied by certain explanatory papers and memoranda, together with illustrative drawings. I ask that the memorial and explanatory papers and memoranda (excluding the drawings of course) may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Library.

The subject is a very interesting one, and the papers accompanying the memorial which I have looked over show very great research upon the part of the memorialist and are very interesting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa presents a memorial and certain papers and asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that they may be printed, without the drawings, in the RECORD. If there be no objection that order will be made, and the memorial and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The memorial and accompanying papers are as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

This memorial doth most respectfully represent: That as during the period of our country's infancy the art of heraldry was unknown, and standard works on the subject unattainable; in consequence thereof the new Republic was unable to obtain a proper device for its national signet until June 20, 1782, and that the device then adopted of admirable symbolism is defective of the first principle of an heraldic achievement, is a baseless fabric, not being blazoned upon an escutcheon or shield, and hence we have never had a national escutcheon of heraldic arms, unprecedented in the annals of heraldry. Being thus deprived of that basis, the prerequisite of all heraldic achievements, Government utilizes a subcharge of the arms proper, and it is popularly denominated the national shield or escutcheon, which it is not nor can ever be. The legitimate shield being withheld, other unprecedented irregularities were consequent, as the commingling of the crest with the arms proper, &c. Most respectfully referring to the accompanying papers, a complete and lucid explication and exemplification of this important national subject with illustrative drawings are appended, including a device for a Great Seal upon which is delineated the justified arms: heraldically perfect.

And your memorialist, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

J. GOLDSBOROUGH BRUFF.

CITY OF WASHINGTON, December 15, 1886.

The national arms of the United States:

The baseless and otherwise unheraldic blazonry as adopted and perpetuated. See graphic illustrations Nos. 1 and 3.

"The device of an armorial achievement and reverse of a Great Seal for the United States in Congress assembled is as follows: Arms: Paleways of thirteen pieces, argent and gules, a chief, azure, the escutcheon on the breast of the American bald eagle displayed proper, holding in his dexter talon an olive branch and in his sinister a bundle of thirteen arrows all proper, and in his beak a scroll inscribed with this motto: E pluribus unum." "For the Crest: Over the head of the eagle which appears above the escutcheon a glory or breaking through a cloud, proper, and surrounding thirteen stars forming a constellation argent on an azure field."

REMARKS.

Heraldic laws governing the blazonry of coat-armor throughout the civilized world are very concise, precise, and inviolable. In all descriptive blazonry of arms the shield or escutcheon on which the arms are to be blazoned (delineated correctly) is, in brevity of its technical terms, named first simply by its tincture or color, omitting the presupposed fact of the shield's being a prerequisite; hence the terms, escutcheon, shield or field, are never used; in the oldest heraldic works such terms were employed.

Then the coat of arms supporters, if any, the crest (invariably placed above the shield of arms), and lastly the motto, as invariably below the completed coat of arms.

The small escutcheon upon the breast of the national bird is properly an inescutcheon, added as an augmentation of honor [the ægis of the bird of Jove]. But in the quasi blazonry of the arms, the true arms as correctly blazoned in accord with heraldic laws and usages, see graphic blazonry.

Arms—argent: An American bald eagle displayed, in dexter talons an olive branch, in sinister thirteen arrows, all proper. On the eagle's breast an escutcheon, paley of thirteen, argent and gules, a chief, azure; crest; azure, a six-pointed star of thirteen argent, environed by a circlet of clouds, proper, a glory breaking through; or, motto—E pluribus unum.

Your memorialist has assumed for the tincture of the national escutcheon silver, emblematic of purity and worth. Gold (or) represents riches and high worth, regality, &c., and would be too dark a ground for our purpose. Heraldic laws forbid putting of color upon color, or metal upon metal.

On reference to the graphic illustrations, the eagles of the corrected arms represent sufficient characteristics of our national bird to identify the precise specie required; the original and all others are of the generic species denominated heraldic or conventional eagles.

It is rendered emphatically an "escutcheon of pretense," being first described as though it were the arms proper, yet astonished with the explanation the escutcheon on the breast of the American bald eagle displayed. And this "escutcheon of pretense" has been by the necessities of the case applied and represented as the national shield or escutcheon notwithstanding the unfortunate fact that the Republic never had one. Everything—governmental and executively official; documents of state, &c., the national currency, coinage, seals, stamps, &c., all bear the impress of the falsely assumed escutcheon.

The description of the crest is of the same imperfect and transposed ambiguous character as the arms; that which should be first is last, and vice versa. The term "constellation" is indefinite, unless precisely expressed as I have done above. Of the arms: a "bundle" of arrows is inadmissible, because a bundle must fail to express the number—13.

The absolute disadvantages and the injustice to the State from the want of a Government standard in reference to the seals, currency, coins, &c.

The national cognizance of sovereignty of the United States of America with few exceptions ranges from indifferent and peculiar to absurd, as misrepresented upon the national coin. All nations of the civilized world save our own have enstamped upon their gold and silver coinage the true heraldic arms of their individual sovereignty, and with strict numismatic propriety exclude unrelevant, fanciful ideas. "The American bald eagle" is displayed in every conceivable attitude and position, and degenerated to numerous species of the United States mint genus.

The peculiar style of distributing the elements of the National Arms over the faces of the coin, including mottoes and legends, unregardful of significant propriety, is a remarkable art exhibition of the genius of our free institutions. Compare the dignified propriety represented in the devices upon some of the earlier coinage: Obverse, a classic bust with legend "Liberty," and reverse, the National Arms as adopted, which compare with the handsome female head filleted "Liberty," though crowned with grain, &c., as if also to represent the goddess Ceres or Abundance, doubtless a multifold genius, as the motto overhead would intimate, "E pluribus unum." Upon close examination a small cap is seen amidst the redundant ringlets, apparently falling off. Reverse, a crucified eagle (severely "displayed," minus "the escutcheon upon his breast," or the eagle volant (without its appropriate motto, "Excelsior.") As though disgusted with his vicissitude and general bad treatment by the ruling powers he has discarded his "shield of the Union," olive branch and three arrows (typical we suppose of thirteen) and ascends to the starry regions of purity and truth. (The square, heavy perspective is good, but why extend his legs, as storks and herons do?) In another issue an enraged eagle has discovered the discarded "American shield" prostrate in the weeds, and having picked up the arrows and branch pounces upon the debased escutcheon, defiantly warning off the despoilers. Mottoes become legends, and legends mottoes. The Goddess of Liberty, duly labeled, rests herself upon a rock, with staff and cap and escutcheon, but looks back apprehensive of some mishap. This is another phase of the ever-varying obverse. Reverse of which may be one variety (there are several of them) of the lame eagle; dexter wing horizontally extended, and sinister, or left, nearly closed and vertical, and the usual distribution of stars, motto, &c. The latest absurdity, so eminently puritanical, not in keeping with the times, unauthorized by enactment, is the Gothic legend between the wings of the crucified eagle of "In God we trust."*

Our patriotic fathers put their trust in God and kept their powder dry. Oliver Cromwell had engraved upon some bronze guns, "Teach us to shower forth thy praise, O, Lord." Too lengthy for our coin, but so applied more beneficent—in diffusion of wealth. The most appropriately consistent devices for embellishment of the coin of our country would be—obverse: A bust of the laureated head of the Father of His Country, with motto of Liberty. Reverse: The precise heraldic arms of the United States of America, and no other stellar ornament than the constellated crest, and no other legend than the title, value, and date, and motto of arms. Such would be creditable to our nationality, and place us among the most favored nations of Christendom.

With profound respect,

J. GOLDSBOROUGH BRUFF.

MEMORANDA.

Dollar, 1792.—A small bird flying across the field; has the appearance of a grouse.

Dollar, 1794.—A small bird intended for the American eagle, encircled by a laurel wreath.

Gold $20, 1795.—An eagle standing upon a palm branch, outstretched wings, in beak a wreath.

Dollar, 1796.—National arms as known, but branch and arrows transposed.

Dollar, 1796.—Eagle standing upon a rock or cloud within a wreath of palm or laurel.

Dollar, 1797-'98.—The arms as known.

Gold $5, 1803.—An eagle displayed behind a great shield, in style of the seals.

Dollar, 1803.—Similar to that of 1796.

Dollar, 1803.—An eagle squatting, arrows and branch; right wing up, left wing down.

Dollar, 1815 and 1835.—Same.

Dollar, 1836.—The eagle volant (the flying fancy).

Gold $20, 1840.—Emerging from behind an immense square shield an eagle, displayed over him the crest of thirteen stars, ovally environed by clouds; radiations on the field; on each side a heavy sculptured architectural S (scroll), upper part overlaying the bird's wings—an inexplicable deformity.

Octagonal gold $50 piece, 1851.—Eagle with expanded wings, standing on left foot, with right holds out to the front nearly horizontally an immense "American escutcheon," perspectively inclined. He holds in beak a scarf, part of which has blown over and around his right wing. The national significance of these peculiarities unknown.

Dollar, 1853.—A reproduction of that of 1835.

Dollar, 1854.—An exasperated and alarmed eagle, with expanded wings and head low, looking to the rear with open mouth, stands upon another prostrate (debased) escutcheon. Perhaps this is symbolic of the recovery of the escutcheon of 1851, dropped soon after by the exhausted eagle of that date.

*The emphasis given to this new faith (unauthorized by act of Congress) is paramount to E pluribus unum, Liberty, and the bird of Jove, exemplified in old English Gothic.

Dollar, 1877.—The renowned trade-dollar. Ob., a female seated upon a bale of goods, looking to her right. (Her emaciated arms seemingly indicate delicate constitution.) Her extended right hand to the front holds a bunch of leaves and berries, somewhat in imitation of the figure of Britannia, on the pennies. Her left hand down at her side holds a ribbon inscribed "Liberty." At her back another bale of goods supports a sheaf of wheat. In background a shipless ocean. In exergue that remarkable inspiration of somebody—"In God we trust"—and the thirteen stars of the exploded crest around the circumference. The drapery of the infirm genius of liberty is well executed. Rev., an eagle standing, wings partly open (such in Heraldry is called "close"); is not our American bald-eagle, but another species of the mint eagle; has a hairy neck, like unto the cassowary, a swelled throat, and very square body; slightly in perspective, left leg crippled, the talons grasping a laurel branch, and the right three arrows. In label overhead the national motto; in exergue "Trade-Dollar."

1878.—Dollar popularly known as the "dollar of our dads." Ob., the head of Ceres, and Liberty with falling cap, &c.; a small, acute, tongue-like projection from throat seems to be the fragment of a bust.

N. B. In numismatic art, exclusive of the heraldic portion, emblematic and symbolical forms are significant of appropriate nationalities.

J. G. BRUFF.

WASHINGTON, December, 1886.

THE CITY OF WASHINGTON, December 20, 1886.

The undersigned, now advanced three months in his eighty-third year of age, is the eldest employé of the Government of the United States, having given the best abilities of his faculties, in drawing and designing, to the service of the State, and for very moderate pay, for a term of about sixty-three years. Subjects of design, seals, medals, vignettes, &c., swords, buttons, and other insignias; military, naval, revenue marine, &c., architectural ornamental work of every kind, &c. It was a necessity to become acquainted with heraldic art fifty years ago, by which and the fact so evident that our country only of all the nations of Christendom did not have a shield or escutcheon for the basis of her arms, and the crest was confusedly added to the device for the arms. For many years it became an anxious concern, I may say, patriotically, that such was the case, yet hoping on, from year to year, that such patent errors would be seen to be presented in due form for our national legislature to consider and have corrected. Many years since, deeming it a high duty to my country, I did have a memorial, rather hurriedly engrossed, presented. It was referred to the Commitee on the Library, and slept. Now (that which must inevitably hereafter, otherwise) I have the honor to submit this very important national subject to the sovereign fount of promoting national progress and prosperity and sustainer of national rights among the nations of the world. Of course, the basis and standard of the regeneration of our national arms must unquestionably be in the national signets, the great and the lesser seals of State, and the reform in the Executive Department of Government must soon ensue. An act for a new great seal of State, and smaller ones, on the obverse of which to be properly delineated, in the best style of art, the true heraldic arms of the United States of America correctly emblazoned.

With the highest considerations of respect, I am, obediently, &c.,

J. GOLDSBOROUGH BRUFF.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition of the Atlanta (Ga.) Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the port of Tampa, in Florida. This petition states that a saving of many million dollars can be made to the citizens of the South and West and Southwest on goods now consumed by them, coming from the Island of Cuba and city of Havana and the northern seacoasts of South America. It also states that a large amount of work can be given to the Southern and Southwestern railroads, amounting in imports to nearly $66,000,000, and in exports to nearly $30,000,000. It also states that the distance from Tampa Bay, Fla., to Chicago, the great inland market of the United States, is the same as it is from Tampa Bay to New York, and that these goods could be placed in Saint Louis and Louisville and Chicago long before they could reach New York by the way they are now shipped.

It also states that a very large part of the products which are the subjects of this commerce are perishable and require speedy transportation to enable the consumer to obtain them at a small cost. It also states the imports of fruit through New York in 1885 were of the value of $4,686,710, leaving out sugar, rice, coffee, and rubber, and that $1,343,305 in value perished in the long shipment. It also states that vessels and cargoes in value amounting to $100,000,000 have been lost on the route now taken by this commerce, and that $7,000,000 of insurance has been paid in ten years, amounting to $107,000,000, which will be avoided and saved in the future by improving the channels of Tampa Bay, Fla., so as to enable vessels requiring deep water to enter there easily and safely. Mr. President, the port of Tampa is now connected by an excellent railway system, under the best management, with all parts of the United States. A superior class of vessels of the finest construction, all built in the United States, are now engaged in this commerce with the West Indies; and others only await assurances that Congress will give proper consideration to the necessity of adequate appropriations for deepening the channel of Tampa Bay before engaging in the Central and South American commerce.

Mr. President, I earnestly urge the Committee on Commerce to give immediate attention to the necessity of making an appropriation for the port of Tampa.

The petitioners pray that Congress may make an appropriation adequate to the improvement of the port of Tampa in such a manner as to admit vessels suitable for that commerce, and that they will immediately report favorably a bill making Tampa a full port of entry.

The large foreign commerce now carried on at that port, and capable of very large development, imperatively demands the passage of these bills without delay.

I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1776) for the relief of Faran & McLean, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1075) to provide for marking with a monument the grave of General Daniel Morgan in the cemetery at Winchester, Va., reported it, with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

PASSPORT FEE.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3014) to fix the charge for passports at $1, to report it without amendment.

As the bill is very brief, and has been favorably considered by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Finance, I ask for its present consideration.

The bill was read, and by unanimous consent the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider it.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the fee now?

Mr. MORRILL. Five dollars.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. BECK. I ask that the report sent in by the Secretary of State, and which accompanies the bill, be printed in the RECORD, so that the House of Representatives may see it. It is very short.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the report of the Secretary of State accompanying the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The document is as follows:

To the Senate:

In response to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, inquiring as to the necessity for the continuance of the present charge for passports for American citizens desiring to visit foreign countries, I transmit herewith the report of the Secretary of State on the subject.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, May 17, 1886.

To the President:

The Secretary of State has received from the Senate a resolution bearing date the 5th instant, of which the following is the text:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate what necessity, if any, exists for the continuance of the present charge for passports to citizens of the United States desiring to visit foreign countries, and whether in his opinion the charge now made can be reduced or dispensed with without detriment to the public service."

In reply the Secretary of State has the honor to state that the possession of passports by American citizens traveling in Russia, Germany, Turkey, and Spain, and the dependencies of these countries, is still there a subject of legal requirement. In addition, it is desirable that all naturalized citizens of the United States visiting the country of their origin should carry passports as proof of their acquired citizenship.

The present legal fee for a passport is $5, and in the year commencing March 7, 1885, and ending March 7, 1886, there were issued 4,600 passports, and from the fees charged a revenue of $23,000 was derived.

I am disposed to recommend a reduction in this charge to $1 for each passport, as the fees derived therefrom would fully pay for all the clerical force, stationery, and postage made necessary.

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 17, 1886.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION FOR PRINTING, ETC.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa ask for the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have it considered at this moment, or considered immediately after the routine morning business is disposed of. This bill ought to be considered to-day.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations will be stated.

The first amendment was, at the end of line 21, to insert:

To be expended for the foregoing purposes ratably and in the proportion provided in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the current fiscal year.

So as to read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, Library of Congress, the executive office, and the Departments, including salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $85,000; to be expended for the foregoing purposes ratably and in the proportion provided in the act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 24, after the word "counters," to strike out the words "one captain of the watch, four," and insert

"five;" and in line 26, after the word "superintendent," to strike out the words "and necessary expenses;" so as to read:

For paper, including transportation, salaries of register, two counters, five watchmen, one laborer, and expenses of officer detailed from the Treasury as superintendent, $17,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT SCOTT, KANS.

Mr. MAHONE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., to move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia desire to have the amendments read?

Mr. MAHONE. No, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In that case a committee of conference is desired.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order for a conference has been made.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. MAHONE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. VEST were appointed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 3030) granting an increase of pension to James B. Phillips; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3031) granting a pension to Edwin Miller; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3032) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue certificates to certain persons who owned buildings on Hot Springs reservation for the value thereof, which buildings had been condemned and afterwards burned; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SAULSBURY (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3034) supplementary to the acts relating to naturalization, prescribing the mode for persons of foreign birth to become citizens; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that this bill was prepared by a member of the judiciary in a very large city, who has to deal very largely with naturalization. I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Delaware that the bill might be appropriately referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, of which the Senator is a member. That class of subjects has of late years gone to that committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It seems to me proper to have it referred to the Judiciary Committee. I have introduced the bill by request. It was prepared by a distinguished member of the judiciary of another State from my own, with the request that I should introduce it. Of course I know very little about it.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator that it go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think myself that the appropriate committee is the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR. Well, I make no point on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE introduced a bill (S. 3035) granting a pension to Lovinia Reves; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWELL introduce a bill (S. 3036) granting a pension to William Moneypenny; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3037) for the relief of Margaret Callanan; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3038) to provide for a light-house at Newport News Point, Virginia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KENNA introduced a bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the Falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3040) to establish an additional land district in the State of Colorado; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3041) granting the Spokane and Palouse Railway Company the right of way through the Cœur d'Alene Indian Reservation; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3042) granting the right of way to the Yankton and Missouri Valley Railway Company through the Yankton Indian Reservation in the Territory of Dakota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 3043) to authorize the Wisconsin Railway and Navigation Company, its successors and assigns, to construct a bridge across Sturgeon Bay at any accessible point in the county of Door, State of Wisconsin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 90) appointing James B. Angell a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOLPH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries, and ordered to be printed.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION REGENT.

Mr. SEWELL. I am directed by the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 90) appointing James B. Angell a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, to report it without amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear what it is?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the existing vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class "other than members of Congress" shall be filled by the appointment of James B. Angell, of the State of Michigan, in place of John Maclean, deceased.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection. It is a very good selection.

By unanimous consent, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NICARAGUAN SHIP-CANAL.

Mr. MORGAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, if in his opinion it is not incompatible with the public service, to communicate to the Senate any correspondence with the Government of Nicaragua since February, 1885, relating to the construction of a ship-canal through that country, or relating to the treaty on that subject which was pending in the Senate on March 4, 1885.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. INGALLS. I move the adoption of the resolution that I send to the desk.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 35, to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears of pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, as this resolution is somewhat unusual in its terms I take occasion to say that it is presented with no design of making any reflection either upon the diligence or the patriotism of the members of the Committee on Pensions.

I introduced this bill on the 8th of December, 1885, and it was referred on the same day to the Committee on Pensions, where, so far as I know, it has since been reposing.

The bill concerns a subject which has been exhaustively debated in this body and elsewhere for many years. Every pensioner now upon the rolls who filed his claim prior to the 1st day of July, 1880, had his pension adjudicated and allowed to date from the time of his disability or discharge, or, if a dependent relative, from the death of the person on whose account the pension was granted.

It appears to me that thirteen months is sufficient time for deliberation, and I assume, as the committee have taken no action, either that there is an irreconcilable difference of opinion, or else a disinclination to allow the Senate to vote on this measure.

My mails are burdened with supplications from those who think that they are entitled to the relief which this bill would grant. I owe them a duty which I want to discharge by asking a vote of the Senate upon the proposition, whether they favor this measure or whether they do not.

I therefore hope that the Senate will allow the resolution to be acted upon this morning, and I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection to the present consideration of the resolution, the question is on its adoption.

Mr. BLAIR. Before there is action on the resolution I desire to say a word.

Mr. HOAR. If this matter is to be debated——

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to speak but a moment—not as long as the Senator from Kansas has spoken.

Mr. HOAR. I propose to interpose an objection unless a resolution merely providing for the printing of a document which comes over from yesterday can be first considered. That is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. HOAR. No; I shall not make an objection if the Senator from New Hampshire will allow my resolution for printing a document to pass in the first place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] will proceed.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to occupy but a moment. I do not propose to take any time.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolution which went over yesterday—to print a document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts is understood to object to the present consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. For the present; I shall make no objection after that is done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions? If not, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the resolutions which have come over under objection.

Mr. INGALLS. What has become of the resolution that I offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to object to its present consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. No, he expressly said he did not object to it.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood him to object unless it could be waived for a moment until a resolution offered by him yesterday was acted on.

Mr. INGALLS. He desired action upon his resolution calling for the printing of a document.

Mr. HOAR. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. But disavowed any desire to make objection to this resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Massachusetts as objecting to the resolution offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. Merely for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not understand the rule as allowing an objection for a moment.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the resolution offered by me yesterday may come up as of right. I desire to be absent at the meeting of a conference committee. It may be called up and passed, and then I make no further objection to the resolution of the Senator from Kansas.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, with an amendment; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 22, 1886, they stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 4, 1887; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 3504) to amend section 4414 of the Revised Statutes relating to inspectors of hulls and boilers;

A bill (H. R. 5878) to amend the act entitled "An act to modify the postal money-order system, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1883; and

A bill (H. R. 5890) for the relief of Grafton Monroe.

MAJOR POWELL'S REPORT ON ALASKA.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which comes over under objection.

The resolution was read, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the report of Major Powell to the Secretary of the Interior in relation to Senate bill No. 1907, to facilitate the settlement and develop the resources of the Territory of Alaska, and to open an overland commercial route between the United States, Asiatic Russia, and Japan, be printed for the use of the Senate.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I now make no further objection to the resolution submitted by the Senator from Kansas.

Several SENATORS. Let the resolution be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 35, to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears of pensions.

Mr. BLAIR. That bill was introduced early in the last session and referred to the Committee on Pensions, of which I was acting chairman. The chairman himself is now in the city, but I do not see him in the Chamber this morning. The committee has considered the bill several times. Personally I have made strong efforts to get it reported favorably. A majority of the committee is against the bill. I have always been in favor of it; and I join with the Senator from Kansas in his effort to bring the Senate to a vote upon the merits of the bill by his motion to discharge the committee from its further consideration.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. GORMAN. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule, and will be printed.

USE OF COLUMBIA RIVER APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], which comes over under objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas it is alleged in the public prints of Oregon that a steam-vessel known as "The Cascades of the Columbia, United States Engineers," was heretofore built under the direction of the United States engineer then in charge of work at the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia, under the direction of the Chief of Engineers and Secretary of War at a cost of about $70,000, and paid for out of money heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of continuing the construction of the canal and locks at that point; and

Whereas it is further alleged in such public prints that such vessel is not used in carrying on said work, but is used as a transport and tender to the jetty works now being constructed opposite to the Saint Helen's Bar in the Columbia River, some 80 miles distant from said canal and locks; and

Whereas it is further alleged in such public prints that a steam-launch, now alleged to be used as an excursion boat for the army officers at Vancouver, Washington Territory, was also constructed under the direction of the United States engineers and paid for by a misappropriation of money heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of constructing said canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia; and

Whereas it is further alleged that the cost of maintaining these boats has been and is about $10,000 a year, which sum annually, it is alleged, has been paid out of the funds heretofore appropriated by Congress for the purpose of carrying on said work at the canal and locks aforesaid: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to advise the Senate at his earliest practicable convenience whether any such steam-vessel known as, licensed, or called "The Cascades of the Columbia, United States Engineers," or any steam-launch, has at any time heretofore, and, if so, when, been built on the Columbia River for use on said river, under the authority or direction or with the approval of the Chief of Engineers or Secretary of War, and, if so, for what purpose was such vessel or vessels built, the date when commenced and when completed, under what authority constructed, the cost of the same and each thereof, if more than one, and out of what appropriation paid for; also in what particular service such vessel or vessels have been employed since their completion, at what particular place or places and how long at each place employed; also the cost and expense of maintaining such vessel or vessels per annum since completed, and from what fund or funds have such cost and expense been paid.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I simply desire to say that so far as the charges recited in the preamble are concerned I know nothing personally in reference to them. I do know that the charges have been made and reiterated in the public prints of Oregon. If they are false it is nothing more than right that the War Department should have an opportunity to answer them. If they are true then it is due to the people interested in river and harbor improvements in Oregon and due to Congress that the truth should be known.

The resolution simply calls for information, and I presume there will be no objection from any source to a resolution of that character under the circumstances.

Mr. GORMAN. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from Oregon that I make the motion for this reason: The Senate has within the last ten days or two weeks passed a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for information in relation to the construction of these works and a change of the engineers. I think under the circumstances we had better wait until an answer to that resolution is furnished to the Senate. Therefore I have moved the reference of this resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I hope the resolution will not be referred. I regret very much that the Senator from Maryland should move the reference of the resolution. What is there to be considered by a committee? There is a recital in it that certain grave charges have been made in the public prints in reference to the use of money appropriated by Congress for the purpose of carrying on a great public improvement. The preamble simply recites the fact that such charges have been publicly made in the public prints, and the resolution concludes by calling upon the Secretary of War for information, first, as to whether these boats have been constructed; second, out of what funds they have been paid for; and, in the third place, whether if constructed out of the funds appropriated by Congress for a specific purpose, with a view of using the boats in carrying on the work for which such funds were appropriated, whether it is true as alleged in the public prints that the vessels are not used for the purpose for which they were constructed, but are being used for some other and different purpose.

I regard that as a very grave charge. I hope it may turn out that there is not one word of truth in it. If there is no truth in it, as I stated before, then it seems to me the War Department would be glad to have the opportunity of replying to it and stating the facts in connection with the whole business; but, as I said before, if the charges are true, it is the right of the people interested in these works, and it is a right that the Senate has, to know the facts. I hope the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his motion to refer and allow the resolution to be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not wish to advise the Senator from Oregon in this matter, but I beg to observe that it is quite a common thing that rumors get into circulation in the public press concerning public business which could be set entirely at rest by a single personal inquiry if it were thought worth while to follow it up. I do not know whether the Senator has made any such inquiry in this case; but I can say that, for myself, I sometimes, when I deem a matter of that sort of sufficient consequence, write as a Senator to the proper officer of the Government, and I receive an ordinary formal communication which disposes of the whole subject. It is possible it may be so in this case. Here is rather a formidable series of charges or intimations that there has been something very wrong. It is possible that a single page from the War Department would set the matter entirely right. I do not know whether this is giving the matter undue dignity or not, but I know that is often done.

Mr. GORMAN. I have serious objections at any time to the passage of resolutions in such a form as this.

The Senator from Oregon knows very well that there was a resolution adopted on his motion some ten days ago calling on the Secretary of War for all the information relative to the construction of these works. I voted for it with great pleasure. I think the resolution then offered will bring out all the facts in relation to the change in the character of this work and the change of the officers in charge.

Now I submit to the Senator from Oregon that to bring in here a resolution with a number of whereases and based alone upon statements in the partisan press is not a proper way to reach this matter, and will only tend to obstruct this great work on the Columbia River.

The War Department, for some reason not yet communicated to the Senate, has seen proper to consolidate both these works at the mouth of the Columbia River and the lock at the Cascades under one engineer. The Government owns these boats. The engineer officer unquestionably needs them for either purpose, at the mouth of the river or at the Cascades. When the information in answer to the resolution the Senator before offered comes from the War Department, the Committee on Commerce, as a matter of course, I take it, will be bound to examine the whole subject, and then will be the time for the consideration of these allegations made in the public press.

I can not therefore withdraw my motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Maryland that there is an almost universal belief among the people of Oregon and Washington Territory interested in the speedy opening up to free navigation of the Columbia River that there is not that expedition, to use a very mild phrase, that there might have been or ought to have been, on the part of the executive officers of the Government, in expending and properly utilizing the money which has been appropriated from time to time by Congress with which to carry on these improvements. Whether that belief is well founded or not I am not prepared to say just now; but it is expected, I can state to the Senator and to the Senate, by the people of Oregon and Washington Territory, irrespective of party, that the Department should be called on by the Senate to make explanation. As I said before, I hope the answer and the explanation may be entirely satisfactory as to the various statements that are being made in the press in Oregon and Washington Territory in regard to this matter.

Now I will say to the Senator from Maryland, because I know he takes a deep interest in the improvement of the Columbia River, if he thinks that it is proper, and he has suggested that it is proper, that action should not be had on this resolution until an answer comes in from the War Department in response to the other resolution which passed the Senate some days since calling for information, I will agree that this resolution may lie on the table until the answer to the other from the Secretary of War is received, reserving the right, after we have examined that answer, to press this resolution further or otherwise as I may think proper, and as I may think the facts justify.

I ask, therefore, that the pending resolution lie on the table until the answer is received from the Secretary of War to the former resolution adopted by the Senate in reference to the work on the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

There is another resolution on the same subject, offered by the Senator from Oregon yesterday. Does the Senator ask action on it?

Mr. GORMAN. I suggest that the Senator had better allow both resolutions to go over.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask the same order on that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. PAYNE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of E. C. Garlick be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ARMS, ETC., FOR THE MILITIA.

Mr. SEWELL. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. 222) which was returned from the House of Representatives with an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia; which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was, on page 1, line 3, before the words "hundred thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "four;" so as to read:

SECTION 1. That the sum of $400,000 is hereby annually appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms and ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage for issue to the militia.

Mr. SEWELL. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. SEWELL, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—CONFERENCE REPORTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is now closed, and the Calendar is in order.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2589) being Order of Business 1453.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 1532).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not now in order until the question is taken on the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the title of the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill the Senator from Mississippi proposes to take up will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (S. 2589) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo."

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Missouri will not ask the Senate to take up that bill to-day. There is a contest respecting the manner of constructing this bridge, as the Senator knows, and many people are interested in it. I understand an examination is now being made by the engineers of the War Department respecting the proper mode of constructing a bridge at this point, having reference to the preservation of the navigation of the river. I think that report will be in after the holidays. I trust the Senator will allow the bill to go over without prejudice until after that time.

Mr. VEST. I can not agree to that. The bill has been pending here now several months. It was reported by the Committee on Commerce months ago. I know there is a contest about it; but I want that contest settled. If the bill is put off until after the holidays it delays the construction of the bridge; there is no other result.

This is a bill of the very greatest importance to the people of the West, not only to the city of Saint Louis but to the States beyond. It is a proposition to construct a free bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Louis. I know the interest the Senator from Iowa speaks of that is opposing it. All we want is a fair discussion and an immediate decision. Therefore I insist on my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. GEORGE. If that motion prevails, what effect will it have on the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. None at all. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to say that I think this matter will lead to a prolonged discussion. There is a report of the committee in favor of this bill, but it is not a unanimous report. There was a decided conflict and difference of opinion in regard to the matter in committee, so that it will lead to a long discussion, and on the eve of an adjournment for the holiday recess I think it had better not be taken up.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator.

Mr. HARRIS. The question that I want to propound is, is not the motion of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] a privileged question, and does it not take precedence of the motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that under the rules the motion to take up bills must be taken in their order without debate. Debate is out of order.

Mr. HARRIS. The motion of the Senator from Illinois was to take up the report of the conference committee on the interstate-commerce bill. My opinion is that it is a privileged question, that he has a right to call it up at any moment he chooses to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will examine the rules. [A pause.] The Chair will have Rule IX read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE IX.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Immediately after the consideration of cases not objected to upon the Calendar is completed, and not later than 2 o'clock, if there shall be no special orders for that time, the Calendar of General Orders shall be taken up and proceeded with in its order, beginning with the first subject on the Calendar next after the last subject disposed of in proceeding with the Calendar; and in such case the following motions shall be in order at any time as privileged motions, save as against a motion to adjourn, or to proceed to the consideration of executive business, or questions of privilege, to wit:

First. A motion to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation or revenue bill.

Second. A motion to proceed to the consideration of any other bill on the Calendar, which motion shall not be open to amendment.

Third. A motion to pass over the pending subject, which, if carried, shall have the effect to leave such subject without prejudice in its place on the Calendar.

Fourth. A motion to place such subject at the foot of the Calendar.

Each of the foregoing motions shall be decided without debate, and shall have precedence in the order above named, and may be submitted as in the nature and with all the rights of questions of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Chief Clerk to read the rule on the subject of conference reports. That is the rule to which I referred.

Mr. FRYE. Rule XXVII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Rule XXVII will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RULE XXVII.

REPORTS OF CONFERENCE COMMITTEES.

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received, the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put, and shall be determined without debate.

Mr. CULLOM. That indicates, I think, that I have a right to make the motion whenever I can get the floor to do so; but it is in the power of the Senate to determine whether it will consider the subject or not.

If I may be allowed to make a statement in reference to this subject at this time, I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will determine the point of order in the first place. The Chair is of opinion that pending a motion to proceed to the consideration of a bill, under the last clause of the eighth rule, it would be in order to move to proceed to the consideration of a conference report. The two rules when construed together give to a conference report the privilege of being taken up at the pleasure of the Senate as against every other question except a motion to adjourn or when the Senate is dividing. So when the Senator from Illinois shall make such a motion—the Chair does not understand that the Senator has yet made the motion—the Chair will put it.

Mr. CULLOM. I rose to make the motion, and I only want to say, if I may be allowed, that I desire to call up the report of the conference committee on the bill (S. 1532) for consideration to-day for the purpose of giving the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] an opportunity to make some remarks upon the bill, after which, in accordance with the suggestion of very many Senators on both sides of the Chamber that it would be impracticable to consider and vote upon the conference report before the holidays, I have determined that, so far as I am concerned, I shall consent, after the remarks of the Senator from Iowa, to let the bill go over until after the holidays, with the announcement now that whenever the Senate shall resume its sessions I shall call up the report again for consideration, and shall insist upon its consideration from day to day until it is disposed of.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator submit a motion now to proceed to the consideration of the conference report?

Mr. CULLOM. I make the motion now to proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the motion is in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Illinois to proceed to the consideration of the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The conference report is before the Senate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President——

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. HOAR. I think it would be exceedingly convenient to the Senate, in reference to the arrangement of business, and also to many individual Senators, to know at as early a time as possible what disposition is to be made of the House resolution of adjournment; and with the leave of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] I should like to ask his colleague [Mr. ALLISON] whether that may not be determined now, as he is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. It is proper, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, to say that the Committee on Appropriations in an informal way have considered the question of adjournment for the holidays, such resolutions usually having been referred to that committee. I do not know that that course will be pursued now by the Senate; but I will say that the Committee on Appropriations do not intend to interpose any obstacle in the way of the passage of the resolution as it came from the House.

Mr. HOAR. On that statement I will take the liberty to ask the Chair, with the leave of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WILSON], to lay that House resolution before the Senate now and have it acted upon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield for that purpose?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. For that purpose, if it will not consume time, as I presume it will not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 22, 1886, they stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 4, 1887.

The resolution was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas; and

A bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The message also returned to the Senate the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes, with the amendments of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 7536) to extend the free-delivery system of the Post-Office Department, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1813) for the relief of Pattison & Caldwell; and

Joint resolution (H. Res. 67) for the relief of William B. Isaacs & Co.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the Committee on Commerce on the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, it is more than a decade since the agitation which finds a result in the report now commanding our attention became active in Congress. It had moved upon the minds of the people and made its presence felt by the instrumentalities of State governments before it appeared here. At its inception it manifested staying powers which portended ultimate success. It was an assertion, by disturbed conditions and interests, of sections, localities, business, of the forceful doctrine of equality on which our system of government is founded. It was a cumulative declaration that that doctrine is not confined in its application to the individual and his distinctive personal relations, but extends to all of the affairs, interests, and relations that are evolved and established by organized communities and movements of government. It was an assertion that the equality which has been our boast and pride from the beginning is a principle of society applicable to all things upon which government can act. Hence, the agitation, in the very nature of things, had staying powers equal to all of the exactions which the struggle precedent to success might impose.

A comparatively new system of transportation had, in effect and substantially, reversed all of our methods of domestic trade and commerce. It had assaulted all of the doctrines of our long established law relative to the duties and responsibilities of common carriers. It had asserted a masterful control of the doctrine of equal rights, and established in its stead a practice of discrimination that at last shocked the people's sense of justice and fair play. It laid its usurping hand upon sections, localities, associations, and individuals, and all of their interests of trade, commerce, and business of whatsoever kind. It has steadily and unreasonably refused to recognize the simplest business principles, and marked out lines of action for itself, which have excited the resentment of almost every interest it was created to serve. It has made itself an intermeddler in almost every department of business and in almost every detail thereof. It has refused to admit that it was created to serve the proper purposes and interests of society, and has assumed to direct and control them. Not the public interests, but its own have been its study, forgetting that the true method of conserving the best conditions of both is to recognize the equal rights of each.

The managers of this system, while admitting great defects in it in respect of its own affairs, have resolutely opposed all efforts of the State and National Governments to project and establish reforms which would tend to assure justice and promote the common interest, and this explains why some conservative and proper legislation for the regulation of the unsatisfactory conditions existing in the interstate commerce of the country was not years ago enacted by Congress. There has been no disposition on the part of the managers of our transportation system to aid in the formulation of legislation which would tend to correct the abuses that they, in common with afflicted individuals and communities, admit to exist. They have tried among themselves to find remedies for some of these things in so far as they affect themselves and the immediate interests committed to their charge, and have uniformly failed. They will neither keep faith with each other or allow the public to aid them; and in all this they have done violence to their own interests and have intensified the demand of the people for some legislative remedy. It will not be wise to longer delay some affirmative response to this demand.

Mr. President, the contest which has attended this subject has been long and tedious. We have now reached a point in the movement when something may be done. The adoption of the report of the conference committee which we are now considering, by both Houses of Congress, while it will not accomplish all that I should like to have done, will afford the country an opportunity to test a regulative remedy, unless objections by the President be interposed by a veto of the bill. That differences of opinion prevail relative to the various propositions embodied in the report, we all know. But this is not a new phase of the movement. From the very commencement of the agitation which has culminated in the bill now before us, these differences have existed.

The most earnest friends of legislative regulation of interstate commerce have never wholly agreed. But they have toilsomely pursued the subject. Study, investigation, earnest effort they have pursued for years. Both Houses of Congress have had their proper committees at work on the subject for more than a decade. The public press has given it prolonged attention and forceful discussion. All of these agencies of information and effort, in so far as they have tended to affirmative action, have been confronted by the opposition of the forces of the transportation system of the country. These forces are active now, pleading for further delay and more investigation. In the New York Tribune of the 19th instant I read a reported interview with the president of the New York, Lake Erie and Western Railroad, and from it I make the following extract. The question having been put to him, "What do you suggest?" he answered:

> That Congress at once pass a bill something like this, appointing five boards of commissioners of three members each, to examine all questions involved and clothed with all powers necessary to obtain thorough, accurate information, including the examination of the books and accounts of the railroad companies, one of these boards to act in the territory of the Pacific roads, one for the roads northwest of Chicago, one for the States between the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers, one for the Southern States, and one for the trunk lines; these commissioners to assume their duties immediately upon their appointment by the President and confirmation by the Senate, and be required to have their reports ready by October 1, 1887. Then these fifteen commissioners, as a board, should recommend to Congress when it reassembles next December suitable legislation to meet the requirements of the case and to settle this difficult problem.

No one need have any difficulty in arriving at the true meaning of this statement. It simply means delay. For more than ten years this has been the policy of the managers of the transporting companies of the country. Their constant and ever repeated declaration has been that Congress is not sufficiently informed in respect of the intricacies of the transportation problem to act with due caution and wisdom thereon. But Congress has for years been informing itself concerning all of the phases of the question. Committees have spent months of time in the investigation. They have visited various sections of the country, examining hundreds of witnesses, and given to all parties and interests ample opportunity to present their views. Report after report has been made, accompanied by thousands of pages of printed testimony, all of which have been open to the inspection of whomsoever cared to devote their time and give their attention thereto. There is not a proposition either important or unimportant in the conference report now before the Senate that has not been considered in the investigations of the committees of Congress time and again and year after year. During all this time the demand has been for more delay, and it has been allowed until the public has become tired of it and now demands action.

But it is urged that there is great diversity of opinion relative to what ought to be done in the premises. This is true. It has been true from the beginning of the agitation. Will delay change this feature of the case? Will the practices of the transporting companies in respect of the things complained of by the people and concerning which this report proposes remedies cease? Answering these questions in the light of past experience, a negative must be given to each of them. How are we to resolve this conflict of opinion except by doing something? Theories have been having free course of assertion for years. They are as divergent now as ever. Delay will not change this fact. Another committee, whether it be composed of Senators and Representatives or of Commissioners of inquiry, will bring us no more definite result than we now have before us. And so, in my judgment, there is but one way to an effective resolution of this conflict of opinion.

We must have affirmative action. We must enact a law for the regulation of interstate commerce, and by experience under its administration come to a knowledge of the right and wrong of the war of opinion now obstructing our way. We may investigate and debate forever and still be apart. But action and the experience it will enforce are sure to bring an end to the contention that will conserve the true interests of all concerned. If we elect the opposite course then will we invite into the case the elements of danger; for a continuance of the many real iniquities which have found lodgment in our transportation system may induce a resentment on the part of the people that may not be satisfied with the character of experiment it is now proposed to try.

Mr. President, no one who has studied the railroad problem and has come to a knowledge of the men who manage our railroad corporations can doubt its difficulties, nor dispute the very great aggregation of commanding ability found among those who handle the great interests involved. But while these men possess very great ability and are marked intellectual forces, they have, it seems to me, fallen short in one essential element. Had they possessed this at its best, I doubt if the railroad problem with its present involvements could have appeared in this country. That one element is what is usually denominated common sense. Most of the facts on which the complaints of the people relative to the management of the transportation of the country are based may be accounted for by the absence of this essential element.

There is no other way by which to account for the present unfortunate involvement of the transportation question. The average amount of prudential action found in ordinary business affairs of men would, if applied to railroad management, have avoided our present predicament. This is apparent not only in their relations with the public but also in those pertaining to the corporations themselves. Let a man step out of active railroad management, though still retaining his investment interest, and he is very apt to acknowledge the truth of all that I have said in this regard. I found such a case reported in the Chicago Tribune a few days ago. An ex-railroad manager, still largely interested in Eastern and Western roads, in talking with a reporter of that paper in respect of the very measure we are now considering, said:

> It would prevent reckless competition between the various roads and stop the craze for constructing useless lines in territory already sufficiently supplied with railroad facilities. He was particularly enthusiastic about the provision prohibiting pooling. This, he said, was the best feature of the bill, and he could not see why any particular opposition should be shown toward it by Senator Platt. The law itself would accomplish all and much more than was expected of the pools. There being no longer any reckless competition, no unjust discrimination, and the publicity and uniformity of rates assured, there would no longer be any use for pools. Those pools had proved a most expensive experiment, and no adequate results were gained. Enough would be saved by having no longer to support high-salaried commissioners, assistant commissioners, arbitrators, armies of clerks, and from office rents, advertising, commissions, rebates, &c., to pay the dividends for many of the lines which are now barely able to meet the interest on their indebtedness.

This statement of the case is forceful and true. It comes from a man who has had experience as a railroad manager, and who, as such, doubtless participated in the very follies which, as an investor, he now denounces. He sees how great reform would come from the enactment of this bill. No one thing has given the railroads greater cost and more trouble than the pool system. No one thing has done more to demoralize railroad managers, officers, agents, and all involved either directly or indirectly in its administration than the railroad pool. Indeed, it has come to be expected that the pool of to-day will be disregarded by some of its members to-morrow, and it has come to be the basis of the hope of reward to railroad officers and agents to successfully enlarge business in violation of such arrangements. But such practices can not be kept under cover forever, and then comes the rate war and loss of revenue from points of competition.

Under the present system, however, these losses are unloaded on to the business of intermediate or local points. This practice, in itself an outrage, is a most fruitful source of complaint on the part of the people. But even when the obligations of the pool are observed the traffic is often conducted on a basis of rates less than fairly remunerative, when compared with those charged at the local stations. A vast amount of the railroad traffic of the country is done from so-called competing points at rates less than half those charged at local points on the same lines. This is an inequity that ought not to be tolerated, and which the bill we are now considering will prevent, if it shall become a law. Let this be done, and no one can fail to see that it will go very far towards correcting the bad state of feeling existing between the railroads and the people. It will serve the true interests of the railroads, because it will prevent the foolish, wasteful, and demoralizing rate wars; for no railroad company will grant a less than remunerative rate for through freight if it can not unload its loss on the local stations along its line. It will serve the interests of the people whose business goes to and from the local stations, because it will assure them at least as reasonable rates as are given to others, and this is one of the most desirable results that can be found in the entire field covered by the present controversy. If it can be reached and established it will go far towards restoring that equality to localities that has been so perfectly eliminated from our transportation system.

The two sections of the bill reported by the conference committee which most tend to bring about this result are the fourth and fifth. They read as follows:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and, in any case, of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

The fourth section is a modification of the provision as it originally passed the Senate. It preserves the clause of that bill which declared that the provision relative to the shorter and longer distances shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of the act to charge and receive as great compensation for the former as for the latter. It is also modified so as to make it more effective in respect of the prohibition against greater charges being made for the shorter than the longer distance; and it limits the power of the commissioners to authorize the charging of less for a greater than a shorter distance to special cases. Each one of these modifications is in the line of the original bill as it passed the Senate, and, it seems to me, improves it.

The two sections quoted have been sharply criticised by the representatives of the railroad companies by letters, in the public press and by telegrams from the day they were first given to the country in the report of the conference committee. It is objected that the provision of the fourth section in respect of distances will, if enacted into law, establish a rule of mileage rates; that it can only be obeyed by the companies by charging the same rate per mile, no matter what the distance may be. I shall not stop to discuss the subject presented by this objection. It is sufficient to say that the section presents no such proposition, and I shall discuss what we have before us instead of wasting time on what is not here. The language of the section is:

That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge and receive for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included in the longer distance.

What does this mean? Let me answer this question by an illustration. In round numbers it is, say, 500 miles from Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, to Chicago, Ill. Suppose the railroad companies operating lines between these points should, in the event of this bill becoming a law, fix a rate on any particular class of freight at $40 per car for the entire 500-mile haul, what would result as to intermediate points? Why, that each of such points could not be charged more than $40 per car for a shorter haul of like class of freight over the same line.

The charge for the haul over the entire line would be the maximum rate for carriage over a part of the line. If the charge be $40 per car from Council Bluffs over the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy line, then no more than that can be charged from Red Oak, Chariton, Ottumwa, Fairfield, or any other station on the line in Iowa to Chicago, or from any of them to any station on the same road in the State of Illinois. The establishment of this rule by law will be a great relief to all of the people and business on all of said lines, and like results will come to the people and business of every other State, and the Territories as well, on every railroad in the country within the terms of the act. The experience of intermediate stations, under this rule, would be very different from that which the practice of the railroad companies now inflicts them with.

Now it is not uncommon for intermediate stations to be forced to pay for the transportation of freight both to and from them double the rates charged between the terminal points of the roads on which they are situate. And this great wrong is one of the most forceful causes of the complaints which have come up from the people relative to railroad management. While it exists there will be discontent, and there ought to be, for the practice is in every sense wrong. It proceeds upon the theory that it is the privilige of the railroad companies to unload upon the hitherto helpless intermediate stations all of the losses and burdens which have resulted from the bad management of the administrators of the affairs of the corporations.

Another inquiry relative to the fourth section has been made in respect of the rates which may be charged under its provisions. Does it authorize a railroad company in all cases to charge as much for a shorter as for a longer distance? If this question were directed against the bill as it came from the House of Representatives it would admit of none other than an affirmative answer; for it simply declared that no railroad company subject to its terms should charge and receive any greater compensation for a shorter than for a longer distance, thus clearly raising the implied power to charge as much by virtue of the terms of the bill itself. But when the question is applied to the bill as it passed the Senate, and to the terms of the report now before us, the answer must be in the negative; for the implication created by the House bill is expressly avoided by the declaration of both the Senate bill and the report that the language employed by them—

Shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance.

Hence the charge fixed for the greater distance will not, by operation of law, become the indisputable rate for the shorter carriage. The question of the reasonableness of the rate is left just as it now exists. So that, if the rate for the long haul of 500 miles be fixed at $40, as put in the illustration I have used, it will not conclude the shipper from contesting a charge of the same amount for a carriage of 200, or 100, or 50, or any other number of miles.

The first office of the section in respect of its limitation on rates is to protect the people and business of intermediate points from being forced, as they are under present practices, to make good the losses which result from mismanagement or wrong practices, of whatsoever kind, of the administrators of our railway system. The second is to preserve to them the right to contest the reasonableness of the charges imposed just as they now possess it. These are simply the proper rules of conservative business, and are not obnoxious to the criticisms aimed at them by those who may have been engaged in their violation.

But it is objected that the fifth section, which I have already quoted, is harsh, unreasonable, and unjust. Why? Is there anything in it that applies to railroad management a new and exceptional business rule? Do not men get on well in other departments of business without resorting to the practice of pooling? Suppose the managers of our railroads should devote as much time, care, and ability in applying to their affairs the ordinary and conservative business rules which other men observe, could they not present the results of success which appear in other fields of enterprise? Do they not all know from actual experience that the railroad pool is a delusion and a snare? What is more common among them than violations of pooling agreements? What calls them together oftener than these violations?

Do they not know that the whole system and the practices under it tend to business demoralization, and to a sort of moral obliquity in the management of affairs? And are not these things sufficient to suggest to the really able and keen-witted men who control the railroads of this country that it is quite time for them to abandon a practice which hurts quite as much as it helps, is unreliable, vexatious and expensive; first to the corporations and finally to the public? If they do not know these things, then it is quite time to establish a rule of public law which shall not only instruct them but forbid their further practice of the vicious system. I have already quoted from one who has come to realize that the time has come for a change. The fifth section of the bill before us will establish the change if it shall become the law. And when the change shall have been effected, and the strong, vigorous, practical minds in direction of our railroad companies get down to the dutiful work of reforming the abuses which they have too long fostered, I can but believe that they will approve the wisdom of the action which I trust this body is about to take.

Mr. President, another section of the bill deserves special notice. It is the third, and reads as follows:

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, in any respect whatsoever, or to subject any particular person, company, firm, corporation, or locality, or any particular description of traffic, to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever.

This section, given the aid of the others I have noticed, is of very great practical value. It asserts the doctrine of equality to which I referred in the early portion of my remarks. It does not introduce a new principle of law. It merely restates the old doctrine of equal rights, which underlies and permeates our entire civil structure.

Persons, companies, firms, corporations, localities, and traffics are all factors of our civil society, and each is entitled to equality in rights and treatment, so necessary to the maintenance of our institutions. Neither the States nor the General Government may interfere with this equality. Much less can it be rightfully interfered with by the instrumentalities of society and its progress created by public law. But it has been interfered with by the railroad corporations in respect of each and every one of the matters and things mentioned in this section. Nothing has been more common in the practices of the railroad companies than the perpetration of the things therein denounced. Preferences and advantages therein prohibited have been common disbursements by the railroad companies. With them the business interests of persons, firms, companies, corporations, and localities have been made or destroyed at will.

The special rates, rebates, drawbacks, and devices denounced as unlawful by the second section of the bill have assured prosperity or enforced disaster in instances almost beyond computation. This is all wrong, and I can but hope that we have reached a time when these things are to cease by command of law; and it is a cause of congratulation, and will so be regarded by the people, that this command is to be enforced by penal sanctions. In this regard the tenth section of the bill is comprehensive, and can but receive general public commendation. This section will make it the personal interest of all those who manage our transportation system to obey the law, and I here direct special attention to it by quoting it at length. It is as follows:

SEC. 10. That any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or, whenever such common carrier is a corporation, any director or officer thereof, or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who, alone or with any other corporation, company, person, or party, shall willfully do or cause to be done, or shall willingly suffer or permit to be done, any act, matter, or thing in this act prohibited or declared to be unlawful, or who shall aid or abet therein, or shall willfully omit or fail to do any act, matter, or thing in this act required to be done, or shall cause or willingly suffer or permit any act, matter, or thing so directed or required by this act to be done not to be so done, or shall aid or abet any such omission or failure, or shall be guilty of any infraction of this act, or shall aid or abet therein, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, upon conviction thereof in any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such offense was committed, be subject to a fine of not to exceed $5,000 for each offense.

Taking this section in connection with the others I have noticed, it seems to me that the enactment of this bill will assure substantial reforms in the respects named, and, indeed, I may say that the general structure of the bill gives promise of an effective start in the matter of regulating the great subject of which it treats. It is not a harsh and vindictive bill, as some who will come under its regulative provision in the event of its enactment have alleged. In some respects it is not as radical as I would have wished; but I am willing to try it as it is, and therefore will vote for its passage. It does not seem to me that it will work the harm to the proper and legitimate interests of the carrier companies of the country that some seem to fear it will. No one can be helped by doing injustice to them. Nor do the people ask that this shall be done. They recognize the helpful aid the railroads have given to the development and progress of the country, but they insist on the enactment of a law which will aid them in recovering some of their lost rights. They are willing that the railroad companies shall prosper and be reasonably paid for their service, but they will not recognize them as masters, for they know that they were created to be servants; and it may be set down as one of the things irrevocably resolved upon that the public demand which has induced the presence of this bill here will not cease until justice shall be intrenched in the transportation system of the country.

The progress made toward effecting the demand of the people for proper regulative legislation does not seem to have impressed itself in any considerable practical degree upon the minds of the railroad managers of the country. They have thus far defeated all efforts for such legislation. But they do not seem to have improved their methods. An illustration of this statement may be found in Iowa at this time relative to the agricultural interests of the State. The western portion of the State produced a large corn crop this year. The eastern part of the State had a very light yield of this cereal. The result is that corn is selling at a low price in the western part of the State. The farmers in the eastern section need this cheap corn to feed their stock; for they have horses, cattle, and hogs without number.

Do the railroad companies take these facts into account, and adjust their rates to harmonize with these exceptional conditions? Not at all. On the contrary they go right on as though nothing out of the line of ordinary agricultural events had transpired in Iowa. On the 16th instant, corn was selling in Western Iowa at from 20 cents to 25 cents per bushel. In Chicago it was quoted at from 36⅝ cents to 36¾. At Ottumwa, in Southeastern Iowa, the price was 40 cents to 42 cents per bushel. So that Western Iowa corn was selling in Chicago at from 3 to 6 cents cheaper per bushel than the Eastern Iowa farmer could buy it for use on his farm; and these conditions have existed from the day that corn crop matured down to the present time.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa to repeat that statement. It is a very important one, and I did not catch it fully.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope that matter will be laid aside informally.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask that the unfinished business be informally laid aside in order that the Senator from Iowa may complete his remarks.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand what is the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated again.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. HALE. I do not understand that that bill has yet been taken up. When the Senate went into executive session last evening it was on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that this bill be taken up, but the Senate did not decide to take it up; and the motion to take it up, I understand, is the unfinished business.

Mr. HARRIS. I think the Chair announced that it was taken up, was before the Senate, and would be the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. I called attention, as the Senator from Tennessee will remember if he was here, to the exact status of the bill, and the Chair stated that the motion to take up was the unfinished business. Certainly no such motion ever passed the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. The remark of the Chair may have misled me as to the impression I have just stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read from the RECORD what was done yesterday.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator to yield a moment until I make an inquiry. I ask if Senate bill 372 has been taken up, and if it will be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the unfinished business for to-morrow at 2 o'clock. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to take up the bill indicated by him? I do not understand that it is up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now pending.

Mr. HALE. The motion is now pending? If so, that is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. The motion to take up I understand was not voted on. If anything else has been journalized, it is incorrect. I rose for the purpose of calling the attention of the Chair and the Senate to that particular thing, that the motion had not been passed upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair remembers that the Senator from Maine did so. The Secretary will read further from the proceedings of yesterday.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope all this will be informally laid aside, every question retaining its right to be considered after the Senator from Iowa concludes his speech.

Mr. HALE. This will take but a minute. I do not suppose that the Senator from Mississippi claims that any vote was taken on his motion to take up the bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I understood that it was. It was so announced by the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read from the RECORD.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. GEORGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 372, Order of Business 852.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. HALE. What bill is that?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be again read by its title.

Mr. CAMERON. As this bill is likely to provoke considerable discussion—I am pretty sure that it will—I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PLATT. That will leave it the unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON. That will leave it the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Then comes what was read before.

Mr. PLATT and others. Go on.

The Secretary continued the reading, as follows:

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator to yield a moment until I make an inquiry. I ask if Senate bill 372 has been taken up, and if it will be the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be the unfinished business for to-morrow at 2 o'clock. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. What has become of the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to take up the bill indicated by him? I do not understand that it is up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now pending.

Mr. HALE. The motion is now pending? If so, that is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HALE. I clearly understood, if I understood anything, that the motion to take up had not been passed. I did not desire that that bill, which would give rise to large debate, should come up before the holidays, partly because there was not time to prepare for its consideration, and partly because there were many other matters upon the Calendar which would create no debate that Senators were desirous of considering, and I did not want the time monopolized. The RECORD is clearly wrong with reference to the understanding that I had or that I think Senators generally had at that time. If it is necessary I can meet what I purpose by entering a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the Senate agreed to take up the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, or move to postpone to a day certain.

Mr. HALE. I do not know that the Senator from Mississippi desires, in view of the passage of the resolution to adjourn to-morrow, to bring up his bill before the holidays. I should be glad to know how that is.

Mr. GEORGE. I called up the bill at the request of several Senators, and I supposed we were ready to act upon it. I remember very well that this bill was on the list presented by the Republican caucus committee at the last session of Congress to be acted upon before final adjournment, and I was anxious myself, and I was under the impression that Senators generally were, to have it called up and acted on. It meets a very general desire throughout the States. Perhaps we can not get through with the bill before the holidays. I prefer, however, that the question lie over until the Senator from Iowa concludes his remarks, and then we can make some disposition of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request made by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] that——

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator from Iowa will be allowed to conclude his remarks, after which this question can be settled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to submit the proposition of the Senator from Tennessee, that this subject be laid aside informally until the Senator from Iowa has finished his remarks.

Mr. HALE. Let nothing further be done about it until after the speech of the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And that nothing further in relation to the question as to whether this bill be the unfinished business or not be done at this time.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to make an inquiry in reference to the pending question, which is whether any order of business would take the place of the pending matter before the Senate, the conference report on the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senator will delay any inquiry in reference to that subject until the Senator from Iowa completes his remarks.

Mr. CAMDEN. Very well; I shall make the inquiry after the Senator from Iowa has finished.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the Senator from Iowa will proceed with his remarks on the conference report on the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, when this interruption occurred I understood the Senator from Mississippi to ask me to repeat the statement I had made relative to the conditions existing in Iowa, as he said he had not distinctly heard my remark.

Mr. GEORGE. I made that request.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I had stated that somewhat peculiar conditions were existing in Iowa with respect to the agricultural interests in this, that in the western part of the State an abundant corn crop had been the result of the season; that in the eastern part of the State it had been practically or largely a failure, and that the corn of Western Iowa was needed for the use of the farmers of Eastern Iowa. Then I gave an illustration of the unjust effect of the transportation rates by saying that on the 16th of this month corn was selling in Western Iowa at from 20 to 25 cents per bushel, in Chicago it was quoted at from 36⅝ to 36¾ cents a bushel, while at Ottumwa, in Southeastern Iowa, the price was 40 to 42 cents per bushel. So that Western Iowa corn was selling in Chicago at some 3 to 6 cents less than the Eastern Iowa farmer could buy it for use on his farm to feed his stock; and these conditions have existed from the day that that corn crop matured down to the present time.

What results have we from this state of facts? Why, that the farmers have been forced to sell their horses, cattle, and hogs in a depressed market, and at whatever prices they could get.

From Iowa newspapers I learn that this subject was brought to the attention of the railroad companies. At a meeting of the Live-Stock Breeders' Association, held in the State, the subject was acted on by the adoption of the following preamble and resolution, namely:

> Whereas, on account of the unparalleled drought, the farmers in Eastern and Central Iowa have a surplus of stock, while Western Iowa and Nebraska have a surplus of corn; and
> Whereas the present railroad tariff is driving to Chicago corn that is greatly needed at home: Therefore,
> Be it resolved, That we respectfully ask the railroads running through Iowa to reduce their local freight rates, that farmers may be able to obtain grain to feed out their stock.

This action has produced no result. Prices range at about the same figures I have already stated, and the depression of agricultural interests continues, and this in face of the fact that the railroad companies could have extended relief without hurting themselves. If they had given the farmers of Eastern Iowa even the Chicago rate on Nebraska and Western Iowa corn, they would have tided them over the present exceptional period of depression and loss. Can there be a more suggestive illustration of the absence of the element of common sense in business management than these facts present? But this is only one illustration out of scores and even hundreds that might be cited; and while these things are practiced we may be sure that the demand for regulative legislation will not lower its tone nor reduce its exactions. Let us give the response which the bill of the conference committee presents. We will then have practiced the virtue of action, and the future will tell us whether we have done too much or too little. If we make mistakes in either the one direction or the other, we will learn which it is and to what extent. We will then have knowledge which comes from experience. This is a surer guide than all of the theories which perplex the subject of which this bill treats can give to us. For ten years and more we have debated; now let us act.

Mr. CAMDEN. I now make the inquiry as to what position this bill will occupy if it is allowed to go over until after the adjournment. In making this inquiry I would remind the Senator [Mr. CULLOM] in charge of the bill of the fact that two years ago a commission was appointed to investigate and report to Congress on this subject; that they made a very elaborate and able report after spending much time and labor on the subject. This report and the bill before Congress at the last session occupied a very large portion of the time of the session. That bill was matured and passed after due deliberation, and went to a conference committee of the two Houses. The conference committee has reported what I conceive to be a very wise and conservative bill on this subject.

The country demands the passage of some bill. The country demands relief on the questions involved in this bill, which it is the duty of Congress to act upon. This is the short session. A very large proportion of the time of the session after the holidays will be taken up in the consideration and passage of the appropriation bills which have the right of way over all other bills brought before the Senate. I wish in making this inquiry to remind the Senator in charge of this bill of the fact that unless this bill is acted upon promptly and in the early part of the session it is likely not to be acted upon at all, and will go over for want of time.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator suggests a point which I appreciate evry fully. I desire to say that my own preference would be to proceed with the consideration of this bill until the last hour before the recess, in the hope that we might get it disposed of; but there has seemed to be so unanimous a desire that the bill should not be pressed for consideration at this time in view of the fact that we adjourn to-morrow for the holidays, many Senators desiring to go home this evening, that I thought it wise and proper only to ask for the consideration of the bill to-day that the Senator from Iowa might make his remarks upon the subject.

I desire to add now that I appreciate the fact that we can very easily allow this bill to fail for want of time; but so far as I am concerned it shall not fail if I have the power to prevent it in the Senate. I shall ask the Senate to again resume the consideration of the report of the committee of conference after the Senate resumes its session, and shall insist upon its consideration from day to day until it is disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. Immediately on the reassembling of the Senate?

Mr. CULLOM. Immediately on the reassembling of the Senate after the recess.

Mr. PLATT. That is January 4.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe we have voted to take a recess until the 4th of January. I hope that Senators will be prepared, if they desire to make any remarks upon the subject, to make them without delay, so that we can get a vote upon the question as early as possible.

As I said some days ago, this is the short session; we have been upon this subject now for eight or ten years, those of the Senators who have been here that long, and we have never before come so near to the point of agreeing upon a bill as we seem to be to-day, and I hope that we may be able to pass this bill through the Senate and let it go to the other House for consideration there very early after the Senate resumes its session in January. With these remarks I have no disposition to press the consideration of the report further until after the recess of the Senate.

Mr. CAMDEN. I have but one word further to say in regard to this matter.

I can appreciate that, as the Senate will adjourn to-morrow for the holidays, there will be no opportunity of giving adequate consideration to this bill before that time, and probably no delay will arise if we have the distinct understanding that immediately upon the reassembling of Congress after the recess this bill will be taken up and pressed for consideration. That I understand to be the intention and desire of the Senator having the bill in charge, and I have no doubt that understanding will be satisfactory.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 20th instant approved and signed the act (S. 1110) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco and their grantees.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, being the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Mr. HALE. I judge from the statement of the Chair that I did not succeed in what I attempted to do and what I thought I had done last evening. I certainly called the attention of the Chair, before any motion was put and carried, to take up this bill to its status before the Senate. No motion had been carried, as I distinctly recollect. I rose simply for the purpose of objecting at that late hour in the session to the Senate passing upon the question presented by the motion of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], and the Chair stated distinctly in response to my question that the unfinished business was the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to take up this bill; and upon that, remarking that it was all right and all that I sought to accomplish, I proceeded no further. I do not care to raise any issue now with the reporters, or with the Journal, or with the Chair, but content myself with appealing to the Senator from Mississippi not to push this bill until after the holidays, as it is an important measure, upon which there are several amendments, and upon which there will be more or less extended discussion.

Mr. GEORGE. I have no desire to press any measure unduly. I believe unanimous consent is required to have the bill go over until after the holidays, to come up on the meeting of the Senate in January as the unfinished business. If that is agreeable to the Senator from Maine and others who desire a postponement, I shall not object to it. I do not want the bill to lose the right it now has as being the unfinished business.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have a statement from the Chair of his opinion as to what its status will be then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of opinion, as the RECORD shows (and it conforms to the recollection of the Chair), that the bill was taken upon motion and declared to be before the Senate in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment. Then the inquiry was made by the Senator from Maine—

What bill is that?

After some conversation, again the Chair, in response to the interrogation of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], said:

It will be the unfinished business for to-morrow at 2 o'clock. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] then made the remark:

Mr. HALE. What has become of the motion of the Senator from Mississippi to take up the bill indicated by him? I do not understand that it is up.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is now pending.

The Chair regarded it as before the Senate, having been taken up on express motion. As he sees here stated the Chair put the question and said:

The ayes appear to have it; the ayes have it, and the bill is before the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. HALE. Perhaps it was my fault that I did not make my wishes more clearly known. As I have said, I do not wish to raise any question, and it would be useless if I did wish to raise it. I only ask now what will be the status, if this bill goes over, of the bill; where will it come up, and at what time, and how will it in any way antagonize as unfinished business the subject-matter that has just passed from the Senate in charge of the Senator from Illinois?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will come up as unfinished business at the next sitting of the Senate, subject, however, to a motion made by any Senator to take up any other business. The unfinished business may at any time be displaced by a motion.

Mr. HALE. At what hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two o'clock.

Mr. HALE. After the morning hour?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. After the morning hour.

Mr. HALE. I am entirely content it shall go over under that arrangement.

PRINTING OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the interstate-commerce bill, so called, may be reprinted for the use of the Senate. There was a resolution, referred to the Committee on Printing, I believe, to print 5,000 extra copies; but for reasons which are satisfactory to that committee they have not been able to report, and the present supply of the printed bill in the form that we usually have it on our desks is about exhausted. I ask that there may be a reprint in bill form showing the Senate bill and the amendments.

Mr. HALE. How many copies?

Mr. HAWLEY. With the conference report?

Mr. ALLISON. What I wish is the form of print we have had laid on our desks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will please reduce his motion to writing.

Mr. HAWLEY. Perhaps I can give the Senate some information on this point.

The request for further copies of this very important report and bill was a perfectly reasonable one. The Senate ordered 5,000 extra copies printed. There is a demand all over the country for them. The order comes within the rule of the Senate in this, that the Senate can order that many by itself without requiring a concurrent resolution, because the cost is less than $500; that is to say, we find that it will cost only $45 to print these 5,000 copies. But some Senators may remember that in one of the appropriation bills last session—whichever one contained the appropriation for public printing—there was some legislation of a kind which I always regard as mischievous—general legislation on an appropriation bill—which provided that accompanying a proposition to print there shall be from the Public Printer an estimate of the cost of the document it is desired to print.

That is now required by our Senate rule, but it is also put into the statute. Further it is required by this existing law that the Public Printer in giving his estimate of the cost of the execution of the new order shall also state how much has been expended of the appropriation under previous orders, so that the Senate and the House of Representatives may each know what its limit is.

On sending down, in accordance with the law and our previous usage, to the Printing Office for an estimate, we are informed that it will cost only $45, and it is our practice to have that done immediately. But the Public Printer's attention was then called to this statute. He replied at considerable length that he was aware of it and had been endeavoring to execute it, but that it was an utter and absolute impossibility for him to comply with the letter of the law as he understood it, for it would take many weeks or months yet before he could make up such an account as that law seems to require. He could send in a rough estimate of the cost of printing as it was ordered, he could keep a rough account; but as to keeping anything like an accurate account, it was impossible.

I will make a single illustration. When the President's message was read, at the commencement of the session, the Presiding Officer said, "it will be printed, with the accompanying documents." That is in accordance with the statutes and usage; but it is a pretty serious business. As a matter of printing it involves twelve to fifteen octavo volumes that vary in size from two hundred to five hundred pages; and it would be quite a little matter for the Printing Office to estimate what that printing would cost. That is only one illustration of the uncertainty under which we proceed under existing laws.

The Public Printer delays executing that order for forty-five dollars' worth of those very important reports, because he can not make up the account required under the existing statute. The committee is in session at this moment, upstairs, with the Public Printer to see if there may not be some escape from it in some practicable way, so that we can get that forty-five dollars' worth of printing done.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not understand that the Senator from Connecticut in any way proposes to interfere with my suggestion that we shall have a reprint of this bill in bill form.

Mr. HALE. How many copies will that give to the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. The usual number.

Mr. HALE. What is that?

Mr. ALLISON. Nineteen hundred and fifty. I suppose I could not enlarge the motion without a reference to the Committee on Printing, and therefore I simply make a motion to reprint this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. I certainly desire that that printing shall be done. I only wished to explain to the satisfaction of the Senator from Illinois and others why those 5,000 extra copies are not yet printed.

Mr. CULLOM. May I inquire of the Senator from Connecticut whether he thinks the order for printing 5,000 copies of the report will be carried out without new legislation?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think so. The Public Printer should take a reasonable view of the statute and make a rough estimate, as he can not be expected before a thing is printed to tell exactly what it is going to cost.

Mr. CULLOM. We should have this bill some way or other, or else the demands on Senators for copies of it can not be complied with at all. I have probably fifty calls for copies of the report that I have not been able to fill.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, the copies are all exhausted now and have been for some time.

Mr. HALE. There is a very great demand.

Mr. HAWLEY. Nineteen hundred and fifty copies can be reprinted under the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that I can make myself understood. My motion is for a reprint of this bill in bill form, having no reference to the proposition now pending before the Committee on Printing. The print that I propose is the bill print, the Senate bill as amended by the report of the conference committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa submits a motion, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 1532, showing the amendments proposed by the committee of conference, be reprinted in bill form.

The resolution was agreed to.

LANDS IN SEVERALTY TO INDIANS.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the bill (S. 54) which has been returned from the House of Representatives, may be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs with the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the bill, with the House amendments, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. GEORGE. Has any disposition been made of the pending bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and the acts supplementary thereto?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask unanimous consent that it may be passed over informally until after the holidays, retaining its place as unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is liable, then, to be displaced to-morrow by unfinished business coming over from to-day.

Mr. GEORGE. If laid aside informally?

MR. HAWLEY. I am in strong sympathy with the general purposes of the bill; but I am very glad that the Senator from Mississippi has consented to the postponement. I have a substitute for the whole bill pending, and, since I offered that in July or the beginning of August, I have received numerous suggestions from persons connected with agricultural schools and experimental stations for further amendments. I should be very glad to submit them to the Committee on Agriculture, so that there may possibly be an agreement which may supersede the necessity of extended debate on each amendment in the Senate. I am glad the matter is going over anyhow, but I am afraid that those of us who desire to amend the bill will not be ready on the first day of the meeting after the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the pending bill be considered as the unfinished business after the recess.

Mr. HALE. I suppose the Senator from Mississippi will not insist on taking this bill up on the first day or two after the recess, if Senators who desire to take part in the debate are not present.

Mr. GEORGE. I propose to afford every facility for debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

TOWN-SITE OF WALLACE, KANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 1714, being the bill (S. 2837).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2837) relative to the location of the town-site of Wallace, Kans.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to consider the bill. It declares that so much of the Fort Wallace Military Reservation, in the State of Kansas, as is comprised within the northeast quarter of section 24, township 13 south, of range 39 west, and the northwest quarter of section 19, township 13 south, of range 38 west, not otherwise disposed of, shall be a part of the public domain, for the purpose of entry by the town of Wallace under the laws, rules, and regulations governing town-site entries upon the public lands of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 22, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 21, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN, D. D.

On motion of Mr. PAYSON, by unanimous consent, the reading of so much of the Journal of the proceedings of yesterday as related to the introduction and reference of bills and resolutions was dispensed with.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call the attention of the House to an error in the announcement of the vote yesterday afternoon upon the question of adjournment. The vote as passed up to the Chair showed 124 in the affirmative and 121 in the negative. Thereupon the Chair so announced it, and the House adjourned. Upon re-examination of the roll-call it appears that the vote was 121 in the affirmative and 127 in the negative; so that by the vote the House really refused to adjourn. The error, the Chair thinks, grew out of the fact that during the roll-call there was considerable confusion, and after the call was completed quite a number of gentlemen rose and changed their votes, one after another, in rapid succession, so that the tally clerk failed to get them all recorded accurately.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, then, Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question of order. This being still the legislative day of Monday——

The SPEAKER. But it is not the legislative day of Monday.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The House refused to adjourn, as the RECORD shows.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House did adjourn. [Laughter.] The Chair announced the vote; the House acquiesced in the announcement and adjourned. The Chair has simply called attention to the matter this morning in order that the fact might be disclosed exactly as it occurred.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. It is true that the House voted not to adjourn, as appears upon an inspection of the RECORD; but the Chair announced that the affirmative vote prevailed, and the House thereupon did in fact adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The members did disperse.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Parliamentarily, this is Monday's session.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, does the RECORD show the true vote?

The SPEAKER. The Journal shows the vote as it was actually cast; and the RECORD also shows the vote actually cast, but gives the numbers in the affirmative and negative incorrectly by one vote, as the Chair thinks.

VAULTS FOR STORAGE OF SILVER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates for vaults required for the storage of silver dollars; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPAIRS, ETC., OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Supervising Architect relative to the proposed appropriations for repairs and heating apparatus in certain public buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

APPROPRIATION FOR DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Attorney-General in relation to the insufficiency of the appropriation for family building and brick tank-house for the reform school of the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting report of Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT FUND, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

MARICOPA AND PHŒNIX RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House bills which have been received from the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9736) to grant to the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian Reservation was read, as follows:

On page 2, line 12, after the words "United States," insert: "And provided further, That before any such lands shall be taken for the purposes aforesaid the consent of the Indians thereto shall be obtained in a manner satisfactory to the President of the United States."

Mr. BEAN. I ask that the House concur in this amendment of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COBB. I should like to know whether this measure has the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BEAN. Yes, sir; his approval has been obtained, and the bill has passed both the House and the Senate.

There being no objection, the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was concurred in, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS SAINT LOUIS RIVER.

The message from the Senate accompanying the bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin, was laid before the House.

The SPEAKER. This bill, with the amendments of the Senate, will be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. NELSON. There is a request from the Senate for a conference on that bill. I ask that the request be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House has not yet acted on the amendments of the Senate. Does the gentleman ask consent that the amendments be non-concurred in?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, sir; and that the House agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the amendments be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, December 17, 1886.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives, No. 9987, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin," do pass with the following amendments:

Page 2, line 9, strike out "if."

Page 2, lines 9 and 10, strike out "constructed as a draw-bridge, and shall be."

Page 3, line 19, after "no," insert "greater."

Resolved, That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on said bill and amendments.

Ordered, That Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. VEST be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. NELSON. I should like to make a brief statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. NELSON. Those are merely formal amendments to correct a few errors in the House bill. I ask by unanimous consent those Senate amendments be concurred in.

There was no objection; and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SURVIVORS OF EXPLORING STEAMER JEANNETTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette, and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the Arctic seas, returned from the Senate with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 9, after the word "death," insert "Provided further, That the surviving child of Henry D. Warren, one of the crew of the Jeannette, shall in like manner be entitled to receive twelve months' pay, and also the amount due said deceased Warren at the time of his death; and that no money shall be paid the widow of said Warren under this act."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask, by unanimous consent, that the amendment be concurred in. It does not increase the appropriation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust there will be a word of explanation as to the reason for this.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The explanation is simply this: the widow of this deceased seaman has married again, and it is asked the money shall be paid to the minor child and not to the widow.

There was no objection, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. BUCHANAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the Senate were taken from the table, read a first and second time, and referred as indicated below:

The bill (S. 2806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed or to be filed by the State of Missouri or her agent or agents for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, and examined and accepted by, the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress—to the Committee on War Claims.

The joint resolution (S. Res. 78) authorizing the Secretary of War to accept certain lands near Chicago, Ill.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

CORRECTION OF ERROR.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 54) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes; returned from the Senate by request of the House.

The SPEAKER. This bill was returned to the House by the Senate, on request of the House, for the purpose of correcting an error. The bill before it passed the House was so amended as to strike out the word "five," in section 2, and insert the word "two;" but as enrolled and sent to the Senate the word five remained in the bill. It should read:

Provided, Any one entitled to an allotment shall fail to make a selection within two years after the President shall direct an allotment to be made, &c.

It was sent to the Senate with the words "five years" instead of "two years." If there be no objection the correction will be made.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. MORRISON. I am authorized by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back the following resolution for holiday recess, and ask its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, December 20, 1886.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses adjourn on Wednesday, December 22, 1886, they stand adjourned until Tuesday, January 4, 1887.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask the previous question on the adoption of the resolution. It is the usual resolution heretofore passed for the like purpose.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken on the adoption of the resolution; and on a division there were—ayes 132, noes 35.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED WORLD'S EXPOSITION, 1892.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I renew the request made a moment since for unanimous consent to submit at this time for proper reference a communication from the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, with the further request that the communication be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

It is as follows:

[National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, John Trimble, secretary, 514 F street.]

OFFICE OF SECRETARY, Washington, D. C., December 11, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I have the honor to forward to you the following resolutions, unanimously adopted at the twentieth session of the National Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, held in the city of Philadelphia from November 10 to 18, at which thirty-four States and three Territories were represented, and to ask your favorable attention to the same:

Whereas it is proposed to have at the national capital in 1889 an inter-American and inter-republic celebration in honor of the centennial of the Constitution of the United States; a world's exposition in 1892, in honor of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus, and thereafter a permanent exposition or museum of the antiquities, history, arts, and industries of the three Americas;

Resolved, That the secretary of the National Grange be directed to transmit a duly certified copy of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the United States Senate and House of Representatives, and to the governors and Legislatures of the several States and Territories.

Very respectfully,

[SEAL.] JOHN TRIMBLE,
Secretary National Grange.

Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

STEAM-VESSELS FOR TRAINING SERVICE.

Mr. HARMER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10393) for the construction of two composite steam-vessels for the training service of the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLBORN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I reserve all points of order on the bill.

HENRY NEAL.

Mr. ROGERS. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8597) for the relief of Henry Neal, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objections.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry Neal, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $120 as compensation for services rendered by him as an employé of the House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROGERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ALBION S. KEITH.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1085) for the relief of Albion S. Keith and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Albion S. Keith, late a naval cadet in the United States Navy, having successfully passed his final examination for graduation, and being found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified for promotion to the rank of ensign, has been, however, found physically disqualified for promotion by reason of a disease contracted from exposure in the line of duty at sea, which entirely disables him, and because of which he was honorably discharged: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the said Albion S. Keith an ensign in the United States Navy on the retired-list.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LONG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CLAIM OF THE STATE OF MISSOURI.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1377), and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and report to Congress.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HEARD. I hope I will be permitted to make a brief explanation, which will not take more than two minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I object. As far as my ear is able to allow me to hear, I think very much such a bill as this for the benefit of the State of Missouri was introduced and referred this morning to the Committee on War Claims. It does not seem to be just exactly the thing to bring in another bill which covers either the whole or part of the substance of that bill, and ask the House to take immediate action upon it without explanation.

Mr. HEARD. A brief explanation will show that the gentleman is mistaken, and I ask leave to make a short statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's making a brief statement?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEARD. Mr. Speaker, under an act of Congress passed in 1866, supplementary to the reimbursement acts of 1861 and 1862, the State of Missouri made settlement with the General Government on account of disbursements made for the purposes mentioned in this bill. When the Government settled the accounts then presented by the State of Missouri the Government of course required of the State the delivery to her of the pay-rolls on which these payments were made. These pay-rolls were delivered by the State of Missouri to the Government, and are now and have been ever since the time of the delivery in the Third Auditor's office.

At the time the settlement was made by the State with the General Government there were certain claims for officers and enlisted men embraced in the pay-rolls which had not then been paid by the State, and which were not paid to the State.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Was the settlement in 1866?

Mr. HEARD. It was in 1867. Since that time Congress has passed one or two acts authorizing the reimbursement of the State on account of claims paid by the State, and which were evidenced by these same pay-rolls on file.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HEARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Did not the United States appoint a commission and send to Missouri to find out what was due to the State of Missouri by reason of advances to the State militia? Did not that commission report, and did we not pass a bill at the last Congress authorizing payment?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir; no bill was passed in the last Congress for that purpose. But in the Congress before a bill was passed which provided for settlement with the State, and $234,000 were paid on account of payments made by the State, as evidenced by these same pay-rolls.

Mr. BRAGG. Was there not a bill passed by the last Congress ratifying that, or in the former session of this Congress?

Mr. HEARD. No, sir. One word further and I shall have concluded. The Forty-seventh Congress passed a bill which reimbursed the State $234,000 of this same class of claims. The State of Missouri, in 1883, provided for the payment of similar claims of officers and soldiers of the State if presented within one year from the date of the passage of the act authorizing said payment.

At the expiration of that year, when the limitation referred to attached, less than $1,000 of said claims had been paid. Under that law there were presented and paid by the State $997, for the reimbursement of which this bill is designed to provide; and a bar has been established by said law of the State of Missouri against the further presentation of claims of that character. These claims are supported by the pay-rolls already on file and in possession of the Government, and which have been accepted and repeatedly paid on by the Government. A settlement has been made except for this pittance of $997, which has been paid by the State; and the State having enacted a bar against further presentation, there can be no further demands on this account presented, although there is about $6,000 that would have been paid to the State on these pay-rolls if the State had paid her soldiers in full.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How much does the gentleman say that this bill involves?

Mr. HEARD. Nine hundred and ninety-seven dollars; and, as I have said, the State has enacted a bar against any further presentation of claims of this class.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Why include in this bill a provision for the payment of claims which may hereafter be filed without limitation?

Mr. HEARD. That only authorizes the presentation of the evidences of payment by the State of claims already paid; and, as I have stated, the State herself has imposed a bar against further payment.

A MEMBER. But she can repeal that bar.

Mr. BRAGG, and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, objected to the present consideration of the bill.

GEORGE W. COUSINS.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 2173) for the relief of George W. Cousins, and that the same be now considered.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause the records to be so amended as to remove the charge of desertion from the record of George W. Cousins, late a private in Company K, One hundred and fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that an honorable discharge be granted said George W. Cousins, with all the pay and emoluments due him at date of expiration of his term of service.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. BRAGG said: When I objected to the consideration of the bill called up by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] I was under a wrong impression as to what bill it was. I withdraw my objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CUTCHEON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I ask unanimous consent to call up from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (H. R. 8923) to amend an act in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes, approved June 10, 1880.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 7 of the general statutes of the United States, chapter 190, approved June 10, 1880, being "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes" (Statutes at Large, volume 21, page 174), be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in line 4 of said section 7, after the word "Middletown," the word "Bridgeport;" so that the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable goods extended by said act to certain cities therein named shall be also extended to said Bridgeport, Conn.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SEYMOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

NEW LAND DISTRICT, WYOMING.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1566) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read; after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the regular order be waived for a moment. In accordance with the announcement made at the time the resolutions were adopted in regard to the death of three members of the New York delegation, Hon. LEWIS BEACH, Hon. JOHN ARNOT, jr., and Hon. ABRAHAM DOWDNEY, that the delegation would ask the House to fix a suitable time for the delivery of eulogies upon our departed colleagues, I am now instructed by the New York delegation to ask that Thursday evening, the 20th of January, next, at half past 7 o'clock, be fixed as the time.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, as I shall not at that time be a member of this House, but would like to take my share in this sad duty of the occasion, I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to send to the House, to be printed in the RECORD, a few remarks in reference to my late friends and colleagues.

There was no objection.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report to the House the bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, which I submit with an accompanying report.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to reserve all points of order on that bill.

The bill was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Resolved, That the pipes beneath the openings in the floor of this hall be immediately cleansed, and that said openings be protected in some effectual manner——

The SPEAKER (interrupting the reading). The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan, that if this report be presented during the present call the resolution must, under the rules, go to the Calendar; but if presented at some other time it is a privileged matter, as it relates to the comfort and convenience of members of the House.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I withdraw the report for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I call up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 1406) together with the President's veto message thereon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Nebraska calls up as a matter of privilege a bill which has been returned by the President with his veto. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1406) granting a pension to Simmons W. Harden.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to place on the pension-roll the name of Simmons W. Harden, late a private in Company L, First Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers, subject to the conditions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $16 per month.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I now send up to be read the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions——

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I desire, under the rules, to antagonize the proposition of the gentleman from Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin raise the question of consideration?

Mr. BRAGG. I do.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is raised by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to move that the House go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. That motion can not be made while this privileged matter is before the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] simply gives notice that his object in raising the question of consideration is to go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by the gentleman from Nebraska, together with the veto message of the President thereon?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 68, noes 70.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 101, nays 109, not voting 111; as follows:

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BELMONT, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. All points of order are reserved.

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10239) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, with amendments from the Senate.

The amendments were read.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] who had charge of this bill in the House when it passed is not in his seat. So far as I know, having examined the Senate amendments, they are unobjectionable. But I do not want to interfere with business which has been in charge of the gentleman from Missouri, and I ask unanimous consent that the matter may lie over to be called up as soon as the gentleman from Missouri is present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill and amendments will lie upon the table for the present. The Chair will lay it again before the House some time during the day.

VENTILATION.

Mr. O'DONNELL. I rise to a privileged question from the Committee on Ventilation and Accoustics, and report back the following resolution:

DECEMBER 13, 1886.

Mr. BUCHANAN submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics:

Resolved, That the pipes beneath the openings in the floor of this Hall be immediately cleansed, and that said openings be protected in some effectual manner from the further deposit of dirt and filth therein.

Attest: JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the resolution. Is the reading of the report of the committee asked for?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I ask for its reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. O'DONNELL, from the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, submitted the following report, to accompany resolution introduced by Mr. BUCHANAN, and referred to said committee December 13, 1886:

The Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, to whom was referred above resolution, ask leave to make the following report: Your committee have given the said resolution careful and painstaking consideration. The terms of the resolution referred are as follows:

Resolved, That the pipes beneath the openings of this Hall be immediately cleansed, and that said openings be protected in some effectual manner from the further deposit of dirt and filth therein.

Your committee would recommend that the Architect of the Capitol be instructed to cause the pipes aforesaid to be thoroughly cleansed each day, prior to the commencement of the sessions of the House, and that the expense thereof be paid from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. Your committee are unable at this time to recommend methods to effectually prevent the deposit of dirt and filth in the openings. The perforated brass openings and registers are calculated for heating and ventilation, but many of the members of the House and its employés are of the impression that said openings are designed for cuspidors, and in consequence the openings are daily defiled by expectoration. Under the present circumstances your committee can only impress upon the members and employés of the House that the openings aforesaid are not, as their constant use would imply, promoters and depositories of sputa, but on the contrary are not designed for such purpose.

The great American habit of expectorating is fully exemplified on the part of the members of this branch of the law-making department of the Government, and your committee reluctantly, mournfully, but firmly confesses its inability to devise measures which will put an end to this reprehensible practice—a practice that lowers the dignity of this august assemblage and imperils the health and well-being of the servants of the Republic. Attention is directed to the fact that there are in this Chamber two hundred and sixteen nickel-plated cuspidors furnished by the munificence of the nation with the sole design of being employed for the purpose for which they are provided, but for some reason unknown to your committee are ignored, and the perforations in the brass ventilators employed as the receptacles of expectoration. In the premises, and to meet the exigencies of the case and obey the mandate of the resolution referred to your committee, the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics unanimously recommend that the great truth be graven on the minds of each and every member and employé of this House that the perforation in ventilators and registers in this House are not to be used as cuspidors, but the two hundred and sixteen receptacles for saliva are alone to be employed in receiving the ejected liquids with the too frequent accompaniment of nicotian refuse.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Is it in order to refer that resolution to the Committee on Civil Service Reform? [Laughter].

The SPEAKER. It is in order to move its reference to any committee of the House.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Notwithstanding the language of this report and the levity with which it has been received, this is a serious matter to members occupying seats near to the center of this Hall. The deposit of filth in these air-pipes has been going on all this session.

This practice has been growing until it has become unbearable. I know it may be the result of inadvertence and thoughtlessness; but the fact remains. The air we breathe comes up through these openings, and the openings themselves and the ducts beneath are contaminated and defiled minute by minute by the means spoken of in this report. Hence the air we breathe coming up through this filth must be filthy and unhealthy, its unwholesomeness increasing day by day.

It is a matter affecting the personal comfort, convenience and healthfulness of the members of this body, and I ask that the matter be treated not as a trivial thing, but that the committee's recommendation be concurred in. That is simply that for the present the pipes under the Hall and leading into it, the air ducts, be thoroughly cleaned each morning, in order that this filth may be taken out of the way of the air we breathe. This is a modest request, and intended to operate as a present remedy; and at some future time the committee will devise means, they assure us, by which the deposits in the pipes may be prevented.

I reserve the remainder of my time, except that I yield to the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. DUNHAM] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DUNHAM. I shall only want about five minutes.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Let me ask the gentleman from New Jersey a question.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Certainly.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. What would be the effect upon the air of the Hall if the rule which prohibits the practice of smoking were enforced?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think the enforcement of that rule would produce a decided improvement in the atmosphere of the Hall, especially if the practice of cigarette-smoking were prohibited. I may also add it is a fact that many of the cigars used are not in quality always the best. [Laughter.]

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, in a very few words permit me to say that I have had some experience on this question of the ventilation of large halls. The hall of the Chicago Board of Trade, which is a very large building, some one hundred and seventy feet square, was originally ventilated in the same manner as this Hall—that is, by pumping air into the hall through openings in the floor.

We made up our minds there some ten years ago that the plan was a failure, inasmuch as the air which was forced up through the floor carried all the dust, produced by the shuffling of feet over the floor, with it into the hall, where it was breathed by the occupants of the building, just as we are compelled to breathe it here.

We decided that the proper way to ventilate the hall was to bring the air in from the top of the building or in at the windows, and draw it out through the floor. The result of this change was that instead of forcing the dust up through the openings in the floor it was carried off by the currents of air under the floor; and I believe that if the House had an opportunity of investigating that question and saw the result, it would change the system here in the same way. I believe from the experience of Chicago that the way this is attempted to be done here is just the cause of the failure. Draw the air in at the top of the building; take it, Mr. Speaker, from the top of the Dome, as I understand a company has offered to do, and furnish it pure and free into this Hall; drive it out through the floor and it will carry the dust with it.

As now the effect of the up currents of air is to drive this dust out into the air we breathe.

Mr. O'DONNELL. May I interrupt the gentleman for a moment?

Mr. DUNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. O'DONNELL. The committee will soon make a recommendation to the House to carry out the idea expressed by the gentleman.

Mr. DUNHAM. The gentleman from Michigan states that the committee will make that recommendation soon. I think the sooner it is made the better for the occupants of the Hall.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, this is a simple matter and easily understood. The only question for the present is, shall the pipes below the floor be cleansed. Has any one any objection to that? If not, let us vote and go on with the public business.

Mr. STRUBLE. Then why don't you ask the previous question?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I have not charge of the resolution.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want a little time on this.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I will yield five minutes of my time to the gentleman.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am very much obliged to the gentleman, but I was desirous of occupying the floor in my own right.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then I reserve my time.

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. In the condition of business in which this report was permitted to come in does it open the door for general debate?

The SPEAKER. Unless the previous question is demanded and ordered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let us have a vote.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object to this report for several reasons. The first is that the report is made by what I might call an assertion of jurisdiction on the part of the committee. The report so far as it undertakes to accomplish anything good is utterly useless. Nobody objects to having the pipes cleaned out as the committee recommend.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then let us vote on the question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But I do not understand that the committee has a right to go outside of its legitimate Congressional business and reflect upon the habits, manners, or decency of other members of this body, and that is just exactly what this report does. Now, perhaps, there may be one or two gentlemen here who do not chew tobacco. I do not chew it myself, but I have yet been unable to see any such indecency or filthy habits on the part of the members of this House as would justify the committee to make any such report as that now presented. It is entirely gratuitous in its flings at members. It is outside of the business or province of the committee. They were called upon to report a mode, or method, of aiding or improving the ventilation and acoustics of the Hall, but instead of that, they go entirely outside of their business.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] has remarked upon the methods in which the ventilation in this House might have been improved. Why did not the committee report on that subject? They have not reported how better or purer air might be brought in here, but deal solely with the subject of where members spit and how often and how much tobacco they chew; surely, a very beautiful subject for a Congressional investigating committee! And I will say to my friend, as the Committee on Civil Service Reform of this House is engaged in cleansing all the civil service in all the Departments of the Government, I would suggest that we turn this matter over to that committee.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I desire to say a word in reply to the lecture which has been read by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] to the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics, over which I have the honor to preside. The committee have had the subject intrusted to them under careful consideration for a long time. We have had witnesses before us from all parts of the country, and we propose shortly after the reassembling of Congress after the holidays to make a report which will cover the whole subject.

The committee have not been idle. They have devoted themselves assiduously to their duties. This matter which has been reported this morning was duly referred to that committee; and I see no good cause for making light of the report or treating it in the manner the gentleman from West Virginia seems disposed to do.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope this matter of cleansing the air pipes will not be made a party question.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina. I trust not. If it is it came from that gentleman's side of the House.

I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted,

Mr. O'DONNELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. BRAGG. Pending that motion I desire to state I make it with the view of calling up the appropriation bill for the support of the Army, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate upon that bill be limited to one minute.

I will say in reference to that, however, if there are any gentlemen here who desire to discuss any paragraph or proposition contained in the bill at greater length than the five-minute rule permits, when that is reached and they will signify the time they desire I will consent now that it may be understood such debate may be had upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill be closed in one minute, with the statement that if any gentleman will indicate any paragraph on which he desires to speak at length consent will be given to debate when that paragraph or section is reached.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I give notice that at line 427 I shall move to amend at the proper time by striking out "$300,000" and inserting "$400,000;" and I shall desire about fifteen minutes.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG]?

There was no objection.

The motion of Mr. BRAGG was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10242) making appropriations for the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House, general debate on the pending bill has been limited to one minute.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, and read the following paragraph:

For mileage to officers when traveling on duty, not to exceed $85,000: Provided, That in disbursing this amount the maximum sum to be allowed and paid to an officer shall be 4 cents per mile, distance to be computed over the shortest usually traveled routes, and, in addition thereto, upon the officer's certificate that it was not practicable to obtain transportation from the Quartermaster's Department, the cost of the transportation actually paid by the officer over said route or routes, exclusive of sleeping or parlor car fare and transfers; making in all for pay of the Army $12,666,918.69.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

After the word "transfers," in line 130, insert the following:

"And provided further, That when any officer so traveling shall travel in whole or in part, on any railroad on which the troops and supplies of the United States are entitled to be transported free of charge, he shall be allowed for himself only 4 cents per mile as a subsistence fund for every mile necessarily traveled over such last-named railroad."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For construction of quarters for hospital stewards, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, $12,500: Provided, That the posts at which such quarters shall be constructed shall be designated by the Secretary of War, and the quarters shall be built by contract, after legal advertisement, whenever the same is practicable; but the cost of construction of quarters at any one post shall in no case exceed $800.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 351, after the word "construction," insert the words "and repairs."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and hospital department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, expenses of medical purveying depots, pay of employés, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses, including disinfectants, and the service and supply of the Army and Navy hospital, at Hot Springs, Ark., in all $210,000; and not over $36,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés of the Medical Department.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 376, after the words "is made," insert "for the proper care and treatment of cases in the Army suffering from contagious or epidemic diseases."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I beg to propose a further amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 378, after the word "disinfectants," insert the words "for general post sanitation:" and strike out the words "service and" before the word "supply" in the same line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 380.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 380 strike out the words "and ten" before the word "thousand."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I offer another amendment to come in at the end of the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 383 insert: "Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, Ark.: For services at the Army and Navy hospital at Hot Springs, $10,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical Museum and Library: For Army Medical Museum, preservation of specimens, and the preparation or purchase of new specimens, $5,000; for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $10,000; in all, $15,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of that paragraph simply for the purpose of making inquiry. I have noticed that the sum of $10,000 has been appropriated every year for a number of years past for this library, and I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to the fact that this sum is materially larger than the amount appropriated for similar purposes in other Departments of the Government. An appropriation of $10,000 each year is certainly an unusually large one for such a purpose.

The books required for such a library are, of course, to a large extent works of a scientific character bearing upon military employments, and it would hardly seem that so large a sum as $10,000 should be required annually for such a purpose.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is a legacy which has come to the Committee on Military Affairs from the distinguished committee of which my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is a member. Ten thousand dollars was fixed several years ago as the proper sum to be appropriated for the maintenance of such a medical library as it was believed should be maintained here at the seat of Government. When the Army bill came to be prepared and the estimates were examined the subcommittee requested the officers in charge of the library belonging to the Medical Department to appear before them, the object being to ascertain why it was that so large a sum as $10,000 should be asked for such a purpose. Upon the explanation made by the officers the committee became satisfied that the sum was necessary.

The money is expended, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, in procuring all the monthly issues of journals, pamphlets, and other publications as they appear in every language on the continent of Europe, in order that medical science in America may be kept abreast with discovery and improvement in the Old World. With this view subscriptions are made to every medical journal in every language. Those journals and publications come regularly to the department and are there kept on file. The library is really for the benefit of the medical profession of the whole country, because, under the rules which govern its management, gentlemen anywhere in the United States who will furnish security for the safe return of books, are entitled to take them out for use in any medical case simply, or in any legal case involving medical questions.

I must say for myself that in the outset I thought the appropriation altogether too large, but when I got through making a personal examination of the extent and requirements of the library, I came to the conclusion that scarcely any money expended by the Government would be better expended than this appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is very true, Mr. Chairman, that $10,000 had been appropriated for this purpose each year for a number of years prior to the last session of Congress when the committee which is honored by having the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] as its chairman took charge of the Army appropriation bill; but since that time, indeed while the bill was still under the charge of the Committee on Appropriations, this subject of libraries was carefully examined, and it was discovered, I think, that where the appropriation was made annually there could be a very material reduction in the amount without depriving any department of the Government of books or other publications which it ought to have. It would be interesting to know in detail just how this money is expended, what works bearing on international law or on the profession of arms, even though gathered together from all countries, could swell up the cost annually to the amount of this appropriation.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that this is for medical works. It is not for works on international law, although it does embrace constitutional works—works affecting the constitution of the individual, not of the country. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I was quoting, Mr. Chairman, from the gentleman from Wisconsin himself, repeating forms of expression that he had used. I am aware that this Medical Museum library is mainly devoted to works on medical science, but it is not confined entirely to works of that kind, as the gentleman will discover if he will examine it. I believe that Congress should be exceedingly liberal in appropriating money to keep up the libraries of the various Departments of the Government. And this is undoubtedly a field in which quite large expenditures can properly be made. Certainly the library should have the means of procuring all works bearing upon the sanitary condition of the Army——

Mr. BRAGG. I wish to say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, that this has nothing to do with the Army especially. This is for the world.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend suggests that this is something which concerns all mankind, but, after all, this appropriation is made in the main for the benefit of the Army of the United States. However, I merely wished to call attention to the subject, and if the gentleman is satisfied that this appropriation is not too large, I shall not offer any objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of arms at the national armory, $300,000: Provided, That not more than $60,000 of the money appropriated on the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to offer an amendment to correct the phraseology of this paragraph. I move to amend by striking out after the word "appropriated," in line 429, the word "on" and inserting "for;" so as to read "appropriated for the Ordnance Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 427 strike out "three" and insert "four;" so that the paragraph will read: "For the manufacture of arms at the national armory, $400,000," &c.

Mr. ROCKWELL. Mr. Chairman, under agreement I was to have fifteen minutes to discuss this proposition. I respectfully request the Chair to notify me when I have occupied ten minutes, as I wish to reserve five minutes for reply.

Mr. Chairman, in this matter the Committee on Military Affairs report in the same manner as they did last year. I wish to make a statement as to the amount of arms on hand at the Springfield Armory. On August 31, 1884, there were on hand 106,078 rifles and carbines; on July 1, 1885, 131,822; on July 1, 1886, 150,127. I make this statement in order to show that the increase in arms varies from year to year. I observe in the report of the committee the statement that the appropriation of last year will bring this number up to a little over 189,000.

It is also claimed in the report that there will be about 40,000 arms manufactured under this appropriation, and that these 40,000 arms will remain in the armory. I suggest that if the Book of Estimates and the report of the Chief of Ordnance be examined it will be seen that these carbines and rifles are distributed not only to supply the Army but to various colleges throughout the country, and to the militia, under the law of 1808; and I think I am right in this matter, although I differ with the chairman of the committee in reference to it. I simply mention this in order to show that the number of arms which will be in the armory at the expiration of the fiscal year will not be as large as that named in the report of the committee by some 20,000.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I have submitted proposes to appropriate in this bill $400,000 for the manufacture of arms at the National Armory, this being the same appropriation which has been made for the last few years. Last year, although the House did not agree to the amendment proposing this appropriation, it was agreed to in the Senate, and the provision became a law, so that the annual appropriation remained the same.

Now, one reason why this annual appropriation should remain at $400,000, as it has been for the last few years, is in consideration of the action of the House yesterday in the passage of the bill for the distribution of arms and equipments to the militia. During the consideration of that bill, as will be found by reference to page 311 of the RECORD, the following colloquy took place between the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. FORNEY], the chairman of the Committee on the Militia, and myself:

Mr. ROCKWELL. Four hundred thousand dollars is the amount fixed in the Army appropriation bill, I believe. Now, do I understand this is to be in addition to that?

Mr. FORNEY. Yes, sir. This is given to the militia of the country, and to provide them with tents. The real object is to give them tents, or protection when they are in their annual encampment.

At present those who are able to do so purchase their own tents, and those who are not must do without. This is to encourage them when they enter the encampment.

Mr. ROCKWELL. If you appropriate annually $400,000 in the Army bill and pass $400,000 here, do you think it would be sufficient to carry out the object the committee had in view?

Mr. FORNEY. I do, certainly. I believe that it will be sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, I allude to this portion of the debate of yesterday to show that these two matters go together; that the Committee on the Militia, in cutting down the appropriation of $600,000, made by the Senate bill, for arming and equipping the militia, to $400,000, did so in consideration of the very fact that there would be in this Army appropriation bill an annual appropriation of $400,000 for the manufacture of arms. The two things go together, as admitted by the chairman of the Committee on the Militia. I submit, therefore, that in consideration of the action of the House yesterday upon the amendment cutting down the appropriation for arming and equipping the militia from $600,000 to $400,000, we should, in the pending bill, appropriate $400,000 for the manufacture of arms, as we have done for the past few years.

Allow me to state another reason why this appropriation should remain at the amount which has heretofore been allowed. Upon this matter the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs seems to differ with the Chief of Ordnance. By reference to the Book of Estimates, page 108, it will be found the Secretary of War estimates that the number of arms to be reserved in store should be 500,000, differing in this respect very materially from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, who thinks that 150,000 is about enough to be held in store. I think it proper, Mr. Chairman, to state the difference of opinion, and to urge upon this Committee of the Whole the fact that the Department having this matter in charge is perfectly well qualified to determine the number of arms which should be kept in store.

I have no time to-day to go into an elaborate argument, as I did last session, in reference to the necessity of keeping such number of arms in store. I will say, however, briefly, if war arises we cannot procure arms in time. We have 6,000,000 militiamen in the United States, and 150,000 arms distributed among them would be a small number indeed.

If war arises it may end, as foreign wars have done, inside of six months, and we could not have an order filled for arms if we tried to purchase.

The difference between the Department and the distinguished chairman of the committee, and the fact that the militia bill was passed in connection with this appropriation, ought to be a sufficient reason why this appropriation should remain as usual. The chairman of the Militia Committee said in effect that this bill passed yesterday, although it is for arming and equiping the militia, was in the main to provide them with equipments, tents, &c. Although under the law of 1808 some part of the $200,000 appropriation was expended in the national armory, still the design of this increase to $400,000 in the militia bill is to throw a larger amount in other directions than for the manufacture of arms. Consequently, the surplus of arms manufactured may have to be drawn on for the purpose of carrying out the design of that bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced disagreement to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and stated it had appointed Mr. MAHONE, Mr. PLUMB, and Mr. VEST as conferees on its part.

It further announced concurrence in resolution of the House for the adjournment of the two Houses from Wednesday, December 22, 1886, until Tuesday, January 4, 1877.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. COX, of New York, in the chair.

Mr. BRAGG. The Committee on Military Affairs have reported by this bill, that in their judgment $300,000 for the manufacture of arms at Springfield is all the necessities of the Government require; and I may say for myself that I believe $100,000 is all that is necessary, and beyond the actual requirement of the Government.

The reason the Committee on Military Affairs arrived at that conclusion is this: We have an army of 25,000 men already equipped. We have 150,000 stand of arms in Government arsenals, separate and distinct from all the arms held by all the militia of the United States. So we are in condition to-day to put into the field a regular army of 175,000 men equipped, just so soon as stores could be shipped from Springfield and other places of keeping arms to the camps where the troops are situated.

When is it the war is to come to make for America the necessity for a standing army of more than 175,000 men? It is away off in the distance, and in the mean time we expend $400,000 each year for supplying the army which is to spring up in the future with muskets, and after we have gone on for ten, fifteen, or twenty years filling up our storehouses with these arms, an improved arm comes into use, and we will then be informed by the Ordnance Department the American Army, to be equipped properly, should not be equipped with a second-rate arm, and we will be asked to give a larger appropriation in order to furnish the best arm then discovered, and all the old arms will become obsolete, like all the arms they manufactured before the breech-loading musket and improvements. We think there is no necessity for any such investment.

Last year the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] used as his argument, that it was necessary to keep the appropriation up to $400,000 for the purpose of keeping the skilled labor together necessary to manufacture arms. This time I hear nothing about skilled labor. And why? Because the militia bill which passed the House yesterday makes a standing appropriation of $400,000 for the manufacture and purchase of arms, and camp and garrison equipage, under the direction and at the discretion of the Secretary of War, and as we have but one armory for the manufacture of arms, a portion of that $400,000 will be turned over for the manufacture of arms, and it will increase the sum to be expended at Springfield, and more than would be expended had we appropriated $400,000 in this bill and allowed that militia bill to stand.

But the gentleman says the Committee on the Militia said they must go hand in hand with the bill in reference to this appropriation. The Committee on the Militia speaks for itself; the Military Committee speaks for itself. By the terms of the bill we passed on yesterday the gentleman's position must fall; for we passed that bill for the purpose of purchasing or manufacturing arms and such quartermaster stores as were necessary for the militia.

Will the gentleman maintain for a moment that we have a standing appropriation of $400,000 to expend every year to buy tents to send out to the companies and squads of militia in the different States?

Four hundred thousand dollars a year for tents! Why, the thing looks absurd when you come to consider it in its proper aspect.

It is for arms and equipments, the arms being the greater, the equipments the lesser, part of the expense. So that with the appropriation as now of $300,000, and the increase of $200,000 added to the militia bill, you give Springfield $500,000 for expenditure this year instead of the $400,000 of last year; and still they are not satisfied.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word about these recommendations of the Ordnance Department. The Ordnance Office states, I know, and Congress will bear in mind, that they have a wonderful number of things to do. If the gentleman from Massachusetts were as familiar with the working of the Ordnance Department as the Committee on Military Affairs, he would know that the grouping of a great many things to furnish a great big sentence sometimes enables the office to recommend an appropriation for a very small thing. First, we are asked to bear in mind that, in addition to the supply to the Army and militia, &c., under the law of 1879 the Ordnance Department is instructed to supply or equip the Marine Corps, to furnish muskets to the few colleges that teach military tactics in the country, and furnish arms to guard the treasure of the United States when it is being moved to and fro between different points. They have had since 1879 to equip the Marine Corps. It is not a large body. It has but a few hundred men. These little squads which go with the money and the treasure to guard it—certainly it would not take more than eight years to equip them. Then the colleges have had eight or ten years to obtain the few arms that is necessary in those colleges where military training is a part of the course. So that, although the Ordnance Office makes a big paragraph of these little things, when you come to sift it down it turns out to be a very small kernel of wheat in a very large bushel of chaff.

Again, as to "supplying the Army in addition to the militia," that is true. This in addition to the militia; but the Ordnance Office were not so ingenuous as they usually are when they appended that note to the estimates, because the money appropriated here for the manufacture of arms has nothing to do with the manufacture of arms for the militia, as such.

The arming of the militia comes under the old sections of the law; that is, the law of 1808, which is a standing appropriation, and any diversion of the appropriation that is proposed here to the militia would be a malversation on the part of the Ordnance Office. This is a bill for the support of the Army, not for the support of the militia; and the money here appropriated is for the use of the Army, and not for the militia. The militia have a standing appropriation which is increased from $200,000 to $400,000 by the action of the House on yesterday; and all arms that grow out of this appropriation have to be paid for at the arsenal. So there is no need of making an appropriation by reason of the fact that the Ordnance Department supplies the militia.

This Congress at its last session agreed with the views of the Committee on the Militia that $300,000 was sufficient for this purpose. Now, when we have increased the appropriation for the Springfield arsenal, I hope that the House will stand by its action then, and support the committee in its recommendations.

Mr. ROCKWELL. In reply to what the gentleman from Wisconsin has said, I would refer him to the letter of the Secretary of War furnishing information to the House of Representatives, and embodied in House Executive Document No. 35 of the present session, in which there is an item under the head of expenditures of $46,384.79, for arming and equipping the militia. Also, for the manufacture of arms at the national armories, $395,922.84.

I would refer any inquisitive man also to the Revised Statutes, section 1667, where the distribution of arms and equipments to the militia is required to be made on the basis of the representation of the States by Members and Senators in Congress, and I claim that out of the arms manufactured at the Springfield armory the militia is supplied. That, of course, takes away from the number of arms in store, and I am sustained by the language which appears in a note appended to the estimates of the War Department, on page 108 of the Book of Estimates, where it says:

Besides supplying the regular Army, the militia, the various colleges, &c.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. ROCKWELL. If the gentleman will give further time I will yield to him with pleasure.

Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin said further that this bill which we passed on yesterday is to add to the annual appropriation for the Springfield Armory $200,000. Who can tell that?

That bill appropriates $400,000 for arming and equipping the militia. The chairman of the committee said the bill was to provide equipments for the militia, so that they might meet and have their trainings. Some of them, he said, had to provide their own tents, and that bill was especially brought in here for the purpose of providing the militia with the necessary equipments, so that they may meet and have their encampments, &c.

Now, you can not tell how much of that fund is to be expended at the Springfield Armory. I say it is fair to presume the intention of the committee will be carried out at the Ordnance Department, and that these matters, equipments, &c., will be furnished the militia, and that the output of the Springfield Armory will not be materially increased.

I am sorry, indeed, to find the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee disagreeing with the chairman of the Committee on the Militia and with the Ordnance Department. We heard last year of his disagreement with the Ordnance Department. This year he also disagrees with the Militia Committee. I think under the circumstances it is fair to say to the House that there is as much wisdom reposing in the Ordnance Department and the Committee on Militia as there is in the Committee on Military Affairs. I think it is fair to make that suggestion. And when we find the Ordnance Department in favor of increasing this surplus of arms till it reaches 500,000, having as yet only reached 150,000, and when we find the Committee on the Militia saying that this bill, which they have reduced from $600,000 to $400,000, is to be taken in connection with this annual appropriation for the manufacture of arms, I think under these circumstances we have a right to judge as a House for ourselves whether or not the weight of argument is not with the Committee on the Militia and the Ordnance Department.

The gentleman from Wisconsin has been pleased to say that I have omitted an argument that I used last year as to the four hundred and fifty-nine men employed at the national armory, many of whom were skilled laborers. That argument holds just as good now as it did last year. Those skilled workmen should be kept. If the whole of the one hundred and fifty thousand surplus stand of arms were to be thrown away to-morrow it would still be proper for this Government to carry on the only armory at which it manufactures arms, because otherwise the supply of arms required, and the skilled workmen, could never be gotten together when the emergency arises.

The gentleman talks as if an emergency would not arise for seventy-five or one hundred years. Who has given him this right to prophesy? The Ordnance Department do not prophesy in the same way. The Committee on the Militia do not prophesy in that way.

And by what divine right is the distinguished chairman of the Military Committee entitled to say there shall not be a war in which this country shall be engaged in the next seventy-five or one hundred years? I wish he were a true prophet. I wish this country could be on such a peace basis that it would not be necessary to have appropriations for the Navy or the manufacture of arms. I wish we could live at peace with all the world, but I know full well one of the best things this country can do, in the existing state of human affairs, is to be prepared for any emergency which may arise. To-day we are the laughing stock of the world and our seaboard cities can be ruined in an hour by any fourth-rate foreign power. Shall we then also neglect this department which we have hitherto kept up or have been trying to keep up to the proper standard?

I say there is propriety in our being prepared so that this great country, when she gives forth her opinion, shall be respected by the other great powers of the world. There is something more in this than is involved in the talk about the peace basis. There are the rights of fifty millions of people at stake. There are the rights at stake of a country where liberty is held in honor and respect. I believe in placing this country—not only its navy, but its army—on such a basis that it shall not fear any nation on the globe, and that its liberty and the principles which we have inherited and to which we are all loyal, shall be respected, and our words and laws shall be respected around the globe. For these reasons I favor a proper appropriation for this purpose. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. STEELE. It is due to a part of the Committee on Military Affairs to state they were in favor of leaving the appropriation at $400,000, and one of the main objects I had in view was that we might save ourselves from the Fourth-of-July speech that we have had again to-day from the gentleman from Massachusetts. He has made that speech now for the last three years, and very effectively, and I like to hear it; but when he goes to draw his comparisons between the great military chieftains of the Committee on Military Affairs and an ordinary company of militia of the other committee it is more than I can stand. I believe with the gentleman that with the bill which we passed yesterday, and which is now before the Senate, they will be able to use up the $400,000 in camp-meetings and parades without using it for the purchase of a single gun. For that reason I am in favor of the $400,000.

I do not believe there will ever be a more effective arm manufactured than the Springfield breech-loading rifle which is now manufactured at Springfield. There has been a great deal of talk about a magazine-gun; and no doubt for wholly defensive operations, where you can have the ammunition at hand, the magazine-gun would be preferable to any other arm; but for general service it has been the experience of soldiers that one of the greatest difficulties has been to get enough ammunition to the front. Should we have a war, I believe that with the use of the present Springfield gun a great problem would be to get ammunition fast enough to be fired away.

I remember that in 1861 many of us went to the front with old Harper's Ferry muskets with flint locks—guns in firing which there was about as much danger at one end as at the other. [Laughter.] I do not know that we are going to have war, I do not think we shall have war, but as we are manufacturing what I believe to be the best gun in the world, I think we ought to have a good many of them on hand in case any emergency should arise. For that reason I shall support the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. ROCKWELL, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ROCKWELL. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 71.

Mr. BRAGG. I demand tellers.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. BRAGG and Mr. ROCKWELL to act as tellers.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 73.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no quorum voting, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. After the Chair has stated that the amendment is agreed to, is it not too late to make the point of no quorum?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was on his feet making the point, but, in the confusion, the Chair did not hear him.

Mr. HOLMAN (before the count was completed). Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The tellers reported—ayes 86, noes 79.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. I shall call for a vote in the House by yeas and nays on this amendment.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the committee now rise and report this bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. COX, of New York, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the Army appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the amendments and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote is demanded upon some amendment, the Chair will put the question on the amendments in gross.

Mr. BRAGG. I demand a separate vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROCKWELL] in line 427 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. No other separate vote being demanded, the Chair will put the question on the other amendments in gross.

The remaining amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the amendment on which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] demands a separate vote.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 427 of the bill strike out the word "three" and insert "four," making the provision read: "For manufacture of arms at the National Armory, $400,000."

Mr. BRAGG. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 94, nays 104, not voting 123; as follows:

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER, during the roll-call, said: The Chair suggests that gentlemen who are paired with the understanding that they may vote in order to make a quorum had better vote when their names are called; and if it should be ascertained afterward that there is a quorum without their votes, the votes can then be withdrawn. But under the rules of the House, if gentlemen do not vote during the roll-call, they are not permitted to vote afterward.

The call of the roll was resumed and concluded.

Mr. DUNN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to withdraw my vote on this question, and also on the question under consideration at a former hour to-day in regard to a bill returned with the Presidential veto. I am paired with the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. I voted the first time inadvertently; and upon this question I have voted in order to preserve a quorum.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the vote of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. DUNN] upon the question of considering the vetoed pension bill this morning will be withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman has the right to withdraw his vote upon the present question.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. MCRAE with Mr. STRAIT, until further notice.

The following named members were announced as paired for the rest of the day:

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. MORGAN.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. LAFOLLETTE.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. WILKINS with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, with Mr. MORRILL.

The result of the vote was announced as aboved stated.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SEWELL, Mr. HAWLEY, and Mr. COCKRELL.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2837) relative to the location of the town site of Wallace, Kans.; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed, all points of order being reserved by Mr. NELSON.

DISTRIBUTION OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Ways and Means to report back the ordinary resolutions for the distribution of the President's message and ask that they be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. The report is in the usual form, and unless somebody demands the reading of the resolutions, I ask their reference without reading, but request that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. They are as follows:

URGENT DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again lay before the House the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in an appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate.

The amendments were read.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the three amendments adopted by the Senate are merely verbal and formal in their character, and need not be explained particularly to the House, as they make no material change in the bill. In view of the fact that this is an urgent deficiency, unless some gentleman desires to make some inquiry, I will ask the previous question on the adoption of the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would like to ask the gentleman one question with reference to the amendment changing, as I understand it, the title of the captain of the watch.

Mr. BURNES. There is no change except in the mere title. We appropriated for five watchmen, and in this bill we appropriated for one captain of the watch and four watchmen. The Senate simply strike out the one captain and make it five watchmen. In other respects there is no change.

The SPEAKER. Unless there be a separate vote demanded the question will be on agreeing to the amendments of the Senate in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BURNES moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 97, noes 44.

Mr. HATCH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BURNES. I demand tellers on the yeas and nays; and pending that I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should now adjourn, will it be possible for this deficiency bill to be enrolled, and signed by the Speaker, so as to be presented to the President to-night?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

Mr. RANDALL. It could not reach him anyhow to-night, because the Senate has already adjourned.

Mr. HATCH. But a good deal of other business can be attended to.

Mr. BURNES. I suggest that a recess be taken for half an hour, so as to give time for the enrollment of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But there is a motion pending to adjourn. Does the gentleman demand tellers on the yeas and nays?

Mr. BURNES. I do.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. BURNES and Mr. RANDALL were appointed tellers.

The House again divided, but before the count was concluded Mr. BURNES withdrew the demand.

So, no further count being demanded, the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Paine, vice-chairman, and others, executive committee of the constitutional centennial commission, in favor of the co-operation by the Government of the United States in a proper celebration of the centennial anniversary of the framing and promulgation of the Federal Constitution, at Philadelphia, in September, 1887. I move its reference to the Select Committee on the Centennial Celebration, and as it is brief I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to print this memorial in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is it about?

Mr. CAMERON. It relates to the proposed centennial celebration of the framing and promulgation of the Constitution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We ought not to print anything of the kind in the RECORD, but I shall not object this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the memorial will be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Select Committee on the Centennial of the Constitution and the Discovery of America.

The memorial is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your memorialists have the honor to represent the constitutional centennial commission, which was organized at Philadelphia on the 2d of December, 1886, by the commissioners appointed by the governors of the States and Territories, for the purpose of providing for the proper celebration by the nation of the centennial anniversary of the framing and promulgation of the Federal Constitution.

No national memorial celebration can be of deeper significance than that which relates to the completion of the structure of our Government by its architects and builders, and its solemn dedication to the service of the people and mankind. That hour marked the most momentous epoch in our history. The labors of that day preserved for all time the precious fruits of freedom and self-government. Unique in origin; without a prototype in design; of enduring strength, and of phenomenal success, in the history of political philosophy the Constitution stands alone. Tested by danger and adversity, as well as by peace and prosperity, endeared to us by tradition and hallowed by experience, it has become the object of our reverential and affectionate regard. To it no American mind can be too attentive, and no American heart too devoted, and it is believed that the people will gather, as around a shrine, to commemorate by appropriate exercises the great work which was accomplished in Philadelphia by the statesmen of the Revolution, and to return in a devout and heartfelt manner their thanks to Divine Providence for the blessings which they have enjoyed during a century of federal constitutional government.

Animated by these feelings, and conscious of the sublime meaning of the approaching event, the commissioners have framed and outlined a programme of exercises which in their judgement would be appropriate. They have provided for the delivery of an oration and a poem in commemoration of the signing of the Constitution. They have determined that there shall be a military display, in which the United States shall be invited to be represented by each branch of its military and naval service; that the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia shall be invited to be represented by their militia and volunteer service; that the President of the United States be requested to designate officers to command the same; that there shall also be an industrial processional display. That invitations to participate in the celebration shall be extended to the President of the United States and his Cabinet, to the Federal judiciary, to Congress and the representatives of all departments of the Federal Government, to the governor of each State and Territory, to the judiciaries and legislatures of the same, and the representatives of the several departments thereof; to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and to the various civic organizations and associations of the Union; and that the resident representatives of the foreign governments having friendly relations with the United States be invited to participate. The commission also resolved that there should be created in the city of Philadelphia a suitable memorial, commemorative of the signing and adoption of the Constitution and of the progress of the nation since that period.

Thus the commissioners have endeavored to gather the people together in the city of that august convention which framed the Constitution; and have invited them to visit the hallowed ground of its birthplace, and by reviewing the scenes, recalling the deeds, and reviving the memories of the great statesmen who framed it, to renew their vows of fealty to the Constitution, and knit in closer bonds of union the members of our great Republic.

Your memorialists respectfully urge upon the attention of your honorable bodies the fitness of your hearty co-operation, and ask you by timely and appropriate action to authorize the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to arrange for the proper representation and participation by the military and naval services of the United States; to designate the troops and marines and their officers which are to take a part, and to provide for the proper supplies and encampment of the men.

And your memorialists further petition that Congress shall by appropriate resolutions recognize the importance and the dignity of the coming celebration and pledge their hearty co-operation; that the nation shall be represented by competent commissioners who shall be clothed with authority to unite with the commissioners of the different States and Territories in the prosecution of the work of carrying out the details of the programme, and particularly in the erection of a suitable memorial, to which each State and Territory shall contribute, but to which the nation shall furnish the cap-stone and the crown.

And your memorialists further petition that the President be authorized to designate a competent commission, to be charged with the duty of collecting and publishing all documents, whether drawn from the public archives or from private sources, which relate to the history and formation of the Constitution, including the debates in the Federal conventions and in the conventions of the several States which successively adopted and ratified the Constitution, so that a monument of historical literature may be built up, and a fund of information furnished for the instruction of the philosopher and the student when contemplating the political achievements of mankind.

And your memorialists further petition that Congress heartily co-operate in our work and insure the success of a celebration, national in its character and world-wide in its significance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred so much of the President's message as relates to the execution of the treaty with China on the subject of the opium traffic, to report a bill to carry into execution the second article of the treaty of 1881, which embraces that subject, and to submit with the bill a written report. I ask that the bill may be read the first and second times and placed on the Calendar, and as early as possible on the reassembling of the Senate I shall ask the Senate to consider it.

The bill (S. 3044) to provide for the execution of the provisions of article 2 of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Emperor of China on the 17th day of November, 1880, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 5th day of October, 1881, was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the letter of the Secretary of State addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, concerning the unsettled claim of Messrs. Bishop & Co., bankers, of Honolulu, against the Government of the United States for interest and charges upon money advanced to C. S. Mattoon, United States consul, for the relief of destitute American seamen, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 960) for the relief of J. R. McGoldrick; and
A bill (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. MANDERSON. On behalf of the Committee on Printing I report back the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] to print 5,000 extra copies of the conference report on the bill (S. 1532) being the interstate-commerce bill.

There has been considerable delay in the action of the Committee on Printing, caused, however, by the difficulty in complying with a provision in the sundry civil appropriation act passed at the last session of Congress. The delay has been caused by the difficulty experienced by the Public Printer in making a correct estimate of the printing ordered by Congress during the present fiscal year. As this is the first report made in compliance with that law, I ask that the report be read and that there may be immediate consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska, from the Committee on Printing, submits a report and asks that it be read. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Printing, having had under consideration a resolution of the Senate for printing 5,000 additional copies of the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on Senate bill 1532, to regulate commerce between the States, being Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 12, have ascertained from the Public Printer that the estimated cost of said printing will be $45.55, and that the cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year is $40,775.65. The committee reports favorably on the passage of the resolution, and submits as part of its report the correspondence with the Public Printer in the matter of estimates for the printing of this report and of compliance with the requirements of the act of August 4, 1886.

Papers accompanying the report of the Committee on Printing on printing 5,000 additional copies of the report of the committee of conference on interstate commerce.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
Washington, D. C., December 17, 1886.

SIR: I am directed by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing to request from you an estimate of the cost of printing 5,000 extra copies of the report of the conference committee on Senate bill 1532, Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 12.

In making this request I would invite your attention to a clause in the act approved August 4, 1886. (See laws session 1, Forty-ninth Congress, page 255, top of page.)

This (which did not emanate from the Committee on Printing) seems to require an elaborate statement from you to accompany each estimate. It occurs to me that it might be well to have blanks prepared, asking the estimate, with another for it and the information required, and I have thought it proper to bring the same to your attention.

I would also repeat my verbal statement that the law requires the standard of paper to be fixed early in the session, and that it has always been thought desirable that the standard should be fixed and the advertisement approved by the joint committee and sent out before the holiday recess.

Very respectfully,
BEN: PERLEY POORE,
Clerk of Printing Records.

Hon. THOMAS E. BENEDICT, Public Printer.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1886.

SIR: The estimated cost of printing 5,000 extra copies of the report of the conference committee on the Senate interstate-commerce bill, No. 1532, being Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 12, is $45.55.

Very respectfully,

G. H. BENEDICT, Chief Clerk.

Maj. BEN: PERLEY POORE,
Clerk of Printing Records, United States Senate.

SENATE COMMITTEE ON PRINTING,
Washington, D. C., December 18, 1886.

SIR: I have received yours of this date, in answer to a request from the Senate Committee on Printing, for the estimated cost of printing 5,000 copies of the report of the conference committee on the Senate bill 1532. In my letter of the 17th to the Public Printer, requesting this estimate, I invited his attention to a clause in the act approved August 4, 1886.

I am directed by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing to return the estimate sent, and to request that it may be accompanied "with a statement from the Public Printer of the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made."

I am further directed by the chairman of the Committee on Printing to request that the estimate may be returned, "together" with the statement required, at the earliest possible moment, as there is a great demand on the part of Senators for the extra copies of the report.

Very truly yours,

BEN: PERLEY POORE,
Clerk of Printing Records.

G. H. BENEDICT,
Chief Clerk, Government Printing Office.

GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1886.

SIR: Yours of December 17, inviting my attention to "a clause in the act approved August 4, 1886," and a further communication of December 18, 1886, addressed to my chief clerk, stating that you have been "directed by the chairman of the Senate Committee on Printing (C. F. M.) to return the estimate sent, that it may be accompanied "with a statement from the Public Printer of the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which the appropriation is made," have been duly received. Both communications have had my prompt and serious consideration, and a reply to the first communication had been drafted when the second was received. I trust that it will suit the convenience of the committee that I include my reply to the first, and a statement of the reason for a failure to render an immediate statement as requested in the second, in one communication.

The question of the adoption of methods to meet the mandatory clause of public resolution 117, approved August 4, 1886, has, I am informed, received the attention of the experienced clerical force of this office at different times since the passage of the resolution, and every effort to meet its requirements has been given up as an absolute impossibility, and the law considered as entirely inoperative. Under the methods of account and record keeping in this office when I assumed its charge, and continued with slight changes to this date, such an effort would be necessarily a failure. As an illustration of this, on September 13 last not a single item of the Congressional work for the fiscal year of 1885 had been charged up, the same being upward of a year in arrears, and it was only by insisting on much extra labor on the part of the clerical force that I have just succeeded in getting the accounts of the last fiscal year in shape for the annual report to Congress. The Congressional work for the present fiscal year has not yet been touched, and it would take some weeks of steady labor to bring it up to date. I beg to call your attention to the fact that I am not responsible in any way for this condition of the accounts of this office, and to the further fact that I have made the most unremitting efforts to bring order out of confusion, and have all my arrangements made, after months of labor, for beginning on January 1 a complete system of book and account keeping in this office, which will remedy all apparent deficiencies in our present system.

I am as yet not fully prepared to agree with the experienced and competent heads of the printing and clerical departments of this office that the law in question is inoperative. Yet I recognize clearly the almost insuperable difficulties in the way of obeying it. The law seems to contemplate that the Public Printer, whenever he receives notice from the joint committee to furnish an estimate, shall accompany the same with a statement of the actual amount and cost of all work previously ordered by Congress for the same fiscal year. This is an impossibility, for the simple reason that work "ordered by Congress" is frequently held for months in the hands of those preparing the copy, or is delayed by failure to return proofs, or is kept waiting to receive illustrations, or, by the difficult and extensive character of the printing, can not be completed within months, and often years, after it is ordered. I believe it to be a fact that work ordered by Congress upward of seven years ago is still lying uncompleted in this office for various reasons which it has not appeared to be in the power of the Public Printer to remedy.

It is proper to assume, however, that Congress has not required the Public Printer to perform an impossibility, and that what the law contemplates is that he should furnish a reasonable estimate of the probable cost of work previously ordered by Congress. A statement of the actual "amount and cost" of the work ordered by Congress for the present year would not include over 15 per cent. of said work, for the reason that that amount is all that is fully completed and in a condition to be charged up, and no record exists or can exist of the actual "amount and cost" of uncompleted work.

It is a difficult and embarrassing question to consider the question even of furnishing an estimate of the amount and cost of work ordered by Congress with each request for a new estimate, and it apparently could not be done without additional legislation. Only a portion of the work now ordered by Congress is estimated upon by the Public Printer (namely, that recommended by the Committee on Printing), while all other work ordered is proceeded with without estimate. To render any system of estimates at all approximate it would seem to be necessary to amend the law to require the Public Printer to estimate on all the work ordered by Congress. Of course this would include the necessity of Congress providing that the copy and illustrations of all work should be prepared and submitted to the Public Printer previous to being ordered, and he should, as a business necessity, be given some time in order to make an approximately correct estimate. The work would require a large special clerical force, consisting of experienced printers, and would necessarily add considerable to the expenses of this office. It is estimated that the uncompleted work ordered by Congress now in this office would reach $500,000; and it is all chargeable to the appropriation for the year during which it is finished.

I am ready to make any and every effort to carry out the law, provided I can master the difficulties which have puzzled the oldest and most experienced employés of this office in previous efforts to solve them. I can give no date for beginning to furnish the statements required by the committee, and it is absolutely out of my power to respond to the request to furnish a statement in accordance with the law to accompany estimate rendered December 18, which is herewith returned. It is the opinion of the clerk in charge of Congressional work that even a partial statement (including not over 25 to 30 per cent. of work ordered) could not be rendered without several weeks of continuous labor directed to that end.

In conclusion, I will state that I am ready with the form of advertisements and proposals for the quantity of paper required for the ensuing year, together with samples of the kinds required, and will be ready to report to the committee at its earliest convenience.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

TH. E. BENEDICT, Public Printer.

Clerk of Printing Records, United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution reported from the Committee on Printing will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies of the conference report on Senate bill 1532 be printed.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCMILLAN (through Mr. CONGER, in his own necessary absence) introduced a bill (S. 3045) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Duluth, Pierre and Black Hills Railroad Company, across the Missouri River at Pierre, Dak.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLAIR. By request of the Union Veteran Army Association of the United States, I introduce a bill to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States and certain laws relating to pensions enacted since the revision of these statutes, and for other purposes.

This bill is quite voluminous. It embraces a great many features of proposed amendment of pension laws, some of which have already been acted upon by the Senate, but I see no way to eliminate them from the rest of the bill. I therefore introduce the bill as drawn, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (S. 3046) to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to pensions and certain laws relating to pensions enacted since the revision of these statutes, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 3047) to increase the pension of J. A. Underwood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 3048) granting an increase of pension to Enoch G. Adams; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3049) to establish an assay office at Portland, in the State of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation; and

A bill (H. R. 10239) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 263) providing for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mass.;

A bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas;

A bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 10239) making appropriations to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it important to have certain enrolled bills sent to the President of the United States, and the members of the Committee on Enrolled Bills of the Senate are not in the city. What action shall be taken? By the unanimous consent of the Senate they may be sent without a formal examination by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Chair have authority to appoint for the time being a temporary Committee on Enrolled Bills, consisting of three persons. We ought not to send a bill to the President without its being examined.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills have been examined by the proper officers—the clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They ought to go through the regular order, for safety.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that they were examined by the committee yesterday. So the Chair is of opinion that the appointment of the committee suggested is not necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I withdraw my motion, and simply suggest that the Chair send the bills.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask leave to submit a concurrent resolution calling for the printing of the usual number of the report of the Commissioner of Education, and also, accompanying the resolution, a letter from the Commissioner. I ask to have the resolution and accompanying paper referred to the Committee on Printing.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1885–'86 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 25,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Printing under the rule, with the accompanying communication.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. HOAR. I offer two resolutions. The first should be adopted, and then the second should go under the rule to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolutions will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed, when the river and harbor appropriation bill shall be reported, to report as to each public work for which an appropriation is made in said bill, the facts which render such appropriation advisable and of national importance, and the condition of the work, if begun.

Resolved, That there be an additional clerk for the Committee on Commerce for the remainder of the session.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the resolutions be considered separately.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the first resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not see any members of the Committee on Commerce here; but I should like to ask if that is not a labor which could be performed by the regular clerk.

Mr. HOAR. It is agreeable to the committee to have it done, and the work was performed last session. It is the same resolution which was adopted last year for the convenience of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the first resolution.

The first resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on the adoption of the second resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The second resolution must be referred.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the second resolution be referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate under the rules.

ARREARS OF PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which comes over from yesterday under the rule; it will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. INGALLS December 21, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 35, to remove the limitation in the payment of arrears of pensions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. PLATT. I do not think the Senator from Kansas desires to press that resolution this morning in the thin condition of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I am very desirous of securing a vote upon the resolution at the earliest practicable moment, but so many Senators have already departed in anticipation of the approaching adjournment for the holidays, and so many others are paired, that the resolution may go over and be placed on the Calendar of General Orders; and as soon as practicable after the reassembling of Congress I shall ask a vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go over and be placed on the Calendar.

JAMES W. SCHAUMBURG.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. On the 12th of July last, by instruction of the Committee on Claims, I reported a bill (S. 2840) for the relief of the legal representatives of James W. Schaumburg. The bill is now on the Calendar, being Order of Business 1697. I am now instructed by the committee to ask the recommittal of the bill to the Committee on Claims, the object being to consider the propriety of making a slight change in the recommendation heretofore made. I move, therefore, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Calendar is now in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There lacks about one of a quorum, I am afraid, here now; but I will assume there is a quorum. However, there is not anything like a quorum of gentlemen who are unpaired, and if we come to any real business we shall fail at once. I therefore move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator allow me to dispose of a resolution which will take no time?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

REDUCTION OF CUSTOMS DUTIES AND INTERNAL TAXES.

Mr. DAWES. On the second day of the session, it will be recollected, I introduced a resolution in reference to tariff reduction. The debate which has sprung up has been on the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. There does not seem to be any objection to the passage of the resolution which I offered, and I ask that it may be adopted now. It is only a resolution instructing the Committee on Finance to inquire into the matter. It leaves the debate just where it was before.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the point the Senator wishes to accomplish?

Mr. DAWES. I wish to have the resolution adopted so that it can go to the committee, who are considering the matter. If there is any debate on it, of course I shall not press it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution heretofore submitted by him. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted by Mr. DAWES December 7, 1886, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be instructed to inquire and report as soon as practicable what specific reduction can be made in customs duties and internal taxes which will, in their judgment, reduce the receipts to the necessary and economical expenditures of the Government without impairing the prosperity and development of home industries or the compensation of home labor.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF VISITORS TO WEST POINT.

Mr. MANDERSON. On behalf of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] and myself, constituting the members of the Board of Visitors to the West Point Military Academy, appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, I submit a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment under the concurrent resolution of the two Houses being until Tuesday, January 4, 1887, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 22, 1886.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Chair will submit at this time a report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, inasmuch as one of the bills, at least, should reach the President without delay.

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas;

A bill (H. R. 9987) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Saint Louis River at the most accessible point between the States of Minnesota and Wisconsin; and

A bill (H. R. 10239) making an appropriation to supply a deficiency in the appropriation for public printing and binding for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

SCHEDULE OF CLAIMS ALLOWED.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules of claims allowed by accounting officers under appropriations, balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

BOARD OF MANAGERS, SOLDIERS' HOME.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the President of the Board of Managers of the National Homes for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, transmitting the annual report of said board; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REFERENCE OF SENATE BILLS.

The SPEAKER, under the rule, laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were severally read a first and second time, and referred as indicated, namely:

The bill (S. 2837) relative to the location of the town-site of Wallace, Kans.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (S. 2761) to incorporate the Windsor Hotel Company of the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 3014) to fix the charge for passports at one dollar—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2408) for the relief of Charles A. Ruffee—to the Committee on Claims.

Joint resolution (S. R. 90) appointing James B. Angell a member of the Board of Regents, Smithsonian Institution—to the Committee on the Library.

ARMS AND EQUIPMENTS FOR THE MILITIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, making an annual appropriation to provide arms and equipments for the militia, with House amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and request for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. FORNEY. I ask the House to agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. In reference to this bill, which has been amended by the House and the amendment disagreed to by the Senate, the Houses have reached that stage of disagreement when a conference has been asked by the Senate; and the gentleman from Alabama moves to agree to the request of the Senate.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the managers on the part of the House some time during the day.

REGENT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up for present consideration the joint resolution (S. R. 90) appointing James B. Angell a member of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the place of one of the regents deceased. The board meets in a few days and it is desirable that this appointment should be made without delay to fill the vacancy.

The joint resolution was read.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] why it is necessary to name the appointee in the joint resolution?

Mr. SINGLETON. The appointment is made by Congress. I will say to the gentleman, if he wishes the information, that this appointment is made in place of a northern gentleman, deceased.

Mr. BLOUNT. Can the gentleman from Mississippi inform us whether this is the usual way of filling these vacancies?

Mr. SINGLETON. It is, sir.

Mr. MILLS. We have had considerable discussion here at different times about this question of appointment, and it has been contended that Congress has no power to make appointments——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman will find that this is the usual way of making these appointments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. MILLS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT SCOTT, KANS.

The SPEAKER. Upon the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of a public building at Fort Scott, Kans., the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House, and asks for a committee of conference. If there be no objection the request will be granted, and the Chair will appoint the conferees at some time during the day.

There was no objection.

SECTION 1661 REVISED STATUTES.

The SPEAKER. Upon Senate bill (S. 222) to amend section 1661 of the Revised Statutes, the Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House, the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. FORNEY, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. MCADOO, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HOPKINS.

REPORT OF VISITORS TO THE MILITARY ACADEMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a report of the Visitors to the Military Academy at West Point; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. O'DONNELL, for the day, on account of important business.

To Mr. SKINNER, for this day, on account of important business.

To Mr. MCRAE, until after the holiday recess, on account of important business.

To Mr. AIKEN, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. DIBBLE, for two days, on account of important business.

To Mr. COMSTOCK, for this day.

SAINT PAUL, MINNEAPOLIS AND MANITOBA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10056) granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota; and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the right of way is hereby granted, as hereinafter set forth, to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company, a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, for the extension of its railroad through the lands in Northwestern Dakota set apart for the use of the Arickaree, Gros Ventre, and Mandan Indians by executive order dated July 13, 1880, commonly known as the Fort Berthold Indian reservation, and through the lands in Northern Montana set apart for the use of the Gros Ventre, Piegan, Blood, Blackfeet, and other Indians, by act of Congress approved April 15, 1874, and commonly known as the Blackfeet Indian reservation.

SEC. 2. That the line of said railroad shall extend from Minot, the present terminus of said Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway, across said Fort Berthold reservation, north of the township line between townships numbered 153 and 154 north; thence along the Missouri River by the most convenient and practicable route to the valley of the Milk River; thence along the valley of the Milk River to Fort Assinnaboine; thence southwesterly to the Great Falls of the Missouri River.

SEC. 3. That the right of way hereby granted to said company shall be 75 feet in width on each side of the central line of said railroad as aforesaid; and said company shall have the right to take from said lands adjacent to the line of said road material, stone, earth, and timber necessary for the construction of said railroad; also ground adjacent to such right of way for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, not to exceed in amount 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length for each station, to the extent of one station for each 10 miles of its road.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to fix the amount of compensation to be paid the Indians for such right of way, and provide the time and manner for the payment thereof; but no right of any kind shall vest in said railway company in or to any part of the right of way herein provided for until plats thereof, made upon actual survey for the definite location of such railroad, and including the points for station-buildings, depots, machine-shops, side-tracks, turnouts, and water-stations, shall be filed with and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and until the compensation aforesaid has been fixed and paid; and the surveys and construction of such railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians, and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

SEC. 5. That the right of way across lands occupied or reserved for military purposes along the line of said railroad is hereby granted to said company the same as across said Indian reservations: Provided, however, That the survey and location of said railroad across such lands shall be first approved by the Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear the report in that case.

The report was read, as follows:

The reservations through which this right of way is granted are situated in the northwestern part of Dakota and the northeastern part of Montana, and were set aside largely by statute (vol. 18, p. 28) and executive orders, and intended by the Indian Department to be more in the nature of temporary hunting grounds than permanent reservations for the tribes, which only partially occupy the same. The line passes through the northern limit of the Fort Berthold reservation, through a rough country known as the "Dog Dens," which is not and has not been occupied for any purpose by the Indians, whose camps are on the Missouri River very far to the southward. The reservation in Montana embraces 33,000 square miles, occupying all the northern approaches to that Territory. Upon it are located only three small Indian agencies, each hundreds of miles apart from the others, while all the intervening country is unoccupied. The game having been exterminated, it is no longer even hunted over. This vast area of solitude seems to be maintained only as an impediment to civilization, preventing settlement, obstructing progress, forming a place of refuge for the lawless, and blockading the routes of trade and commerce so necessary to the welfare of the great mining towns and agricultural settlements of the Territory.

In addition, the reservation has long been condemned by the Indian Department as an unfortunate location for the Indians; first, because of the difficulties of improvement, and, secondly, because its contiguity to the British possessions is the cause of continuous raids and reprisals across the border, which are now the subject of diplomatic correspondence. In order to obviate these objections a law was passed at the last session of Congress which met the approval of the President, and under which he has appointed a commission for the purpose, if possible, of removing these Indians from the border and providing them with suitable lands in some more hospitable valley, with a milder climate and more productive soil. If this had been previously done these lands would now be covered by the provisions of the general statute granting to all railroads the right of way across the public lands (vol. 18, p. 482), but from the provisions of which all reservations are excepted without the consent of Congress.

When we consider that in order to procure the building of transcontinental railways across the plains and mountains the Government has been obliged to carpet the road-beds of some lines with its interest-bearing bonds, and to endow others with vast grants of the public lands, its policy should warmly encourage those who, desiring no subsidy and seeking no land grant, only ask permission, from their own resources, to give the Government and the people the benefit of other roads. This it did in the broad and beneficent act which grants to enterprise a general right of way through the public lands open to all, and granting exclusive privileges to none, which has invited competition and destroyed monopoly in the rapidly developing Territories of the West. In so much of these reservations as are covered by treaty the right of way to build every kind of road and railroad is expressly conceded by the eighth article of the treaty of October 17, 1855 (vol. 11, pp. 658-9), under which the Indians hold their rights.

This article is in the following words:

"For the purpose of establishing traveling thoroughfares through their country, and the better to enable the President to execute the provisions of this treaty, the aforesaid nations and tribes do hereby consent and agree that the United States may, within the countries respectively occupied and claimed by them, construct roads of every description, establish lines of telegraph and military posts, use materials of every description found in the Indian country, build houses for agencies, missions, schools, farms, shops, mills, stations, and for any other purpose for which they may be required, and permanently occupy as much land as may be necessary for the various purposes above enumerated, including the use of wood for fuel and lands for grazing, and that the navigation of all lakes and streams shall be forever free to citizens of the United States."

Such portions as are covered by statute and executive orders are merely set apart for the occupancy of the Indians. The fee remains in the Government. No right to the soil is conferred. The power that set them aside can modify them. But notwithstanding this the bill out of abundant caution carefully provides for all of the rights of the Indians and their proper compensation. It is known that the construction of the road is earnestly desired by them. Congress has for several years past made special appropriations for their relief in winter, but on one occasion at least the charity of the Government failed, as, owing to their remote position, it was found impossible to reach them with supplies, and many perished from starvation. They thoroughly understand that the construction of a railroad would remove such danger in the future. Such construction will also greatly reduce the cost of transporting the Government supplies, and effect an immense saving, not only at the Indian agencies, but also at the military posts. For these reasons the Army officers, as well as the Indian officials, eagerly look for the construction of the road, and warmly advise the passage of this bill, which will remove the only obstructions.

The company designated is one of the most reliable and capable in the Northwest and has ample means to complete the enterprise speedily. Your committee is advised that the grade is completed and the track laid down to the eastern edge of these reservations, and a large amount of work has been done beyond in the West. The executive officers of the Government have the power under the article of the treaty cited to permit the construction to go on across the reservation, but they prefer that the consent of Congress should be obtained. The Secretary of the Interior has been duly consulted about this bill, and having examined it carefully recommends it to the committee (see his letter and that of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs hereto attached) and the committee, after due deliberation, report it to the House and recommend its passage with an amendment in the form of an additional section, to be known as section 6.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 11, 1886.

SIR: I return herewith House bill No. 10056, Forty-ninth Congress, second session, "A bill granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota," referred to the Department for examination by the House Committee on Indian Affairs, and have the honor to state that so far as this office is concerned there is no objection to its passage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. C. ATKINS, Commissioner.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 11, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of 9th instant, inclosing, for views, &c., House Report No. 10056, of the current session, "granting to the Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway Company the right of way through the Indian reservations in Northern Montana and Northwestern Dakota."

In reply, you are respectfully informed that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, to whom the bill in question was referred, reports, under date of 11th instant, that, so far as his office is concerned, there is no objection to its passage.

A copy of his report is herewith inclosed.

This Department is not aware of any reason why the bill should not become a law.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman from Montana [Mr. TOOLE] whether this is a unanimous report.

Mr. TOOLE. Yes, sir; a unanimous report.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to inquire whether the amount of land appropriated by this bill for stations, a strip 300 feet in width and 3,000 feet in length, is not a good deal more than we have been in the habit of setting apart for such purposes; also whether it does not go beyond the spirit of the article of the treaty which has been read in the report of the committee. That treaty contemplates the amount of ground which is necessary for stations, residences of agents, and the like; but is not this more than is necessary, as well as more than we have been in the habit of setting apart in such cases?

Mr. NELSON. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will permit me to answer him, I will say that in reference to this matter we followed the rule which has been adopted in reference to right-of-way bills through the Indian Territory, and the amount given by this bill is really less than the Government allows by the general act in relation to roads crossing public lands. That act gives twenty acres for stations at every ten miles.

Mr. HOLMAN. That certainly is not uniform.

Mr. NELSON. That is the general law. It also gives a right of way 200 feet wide, while this is only 150 feet—75 feet on each side of the track.

Mr. HOLMAN. Well, if this is in conformity with the general law, I shall not object.

Mr. COX, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an inquiry in reference to this bill. I listened attentively to the reading of that clause of the treaty which the committee have recited in their report. Will the gentleman undertake to say that there is no treaty with these Indians with which this bill is inconsistent?

Mr. TOOLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. NELSON. I will say to the gentleman that the last treaty is that of 1855, referred to in the report, by which treaty the Government expressly reserves the right of way for all public roads, turnpikes, or highways.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman having charge of this bill whether there is any objection to inserting a clause providing that the mortgage shall not exceed the actual cash invested in the construction of the road.

Mr. NELSON. I think that is implied in the phraseology of the bill. The company are allowed to mortgage the right of way and the franchise for the purpose of raising money to construct the road, and for no other purpose; so that any mortgage going beyond that would be outside the law—irregular and illegal.

Mr. COX, of New York. Has this bill ever been vetoed?

Mr. NELSON. No, sir.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

SEC. 6. That said company shall not assign or transfer or mortgage this right of way for any purpose whatever until said road shall be completed: Provided, That the company may mortgage said franchise, together with the rolling-stock, for money to construct and complete said road: And provided further, That the right granted herein shall be lost and forfeited by said company unless the road is constructed and in running order within two years from the passage of this act.

The amendment proposed by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask that before there be any further recognition for the passage of bills by unanimous consent, committees having reports to make may present them.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

PROMOTION OF TELEGRAPHIC FACILITIES.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, which, by a resolution of February 26 last, was directed to make inquiry in relation to land-grant telegraph lines, have directed me to present a report upon the subject, accompanied by a bill, which is reported in lieu of a number of bills on this subject that have been referred to the committee. I ask that the bill, with the report, be referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

The bill (H. R. 10398) supplementary to the act of July 1, 1862, entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," and also to the act of July 2, 1864, and other acts amendatory of said first-named act, was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MAURICE RUDDLESDEN.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Accounts, reported back favorably the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be requested to provide for the payment to Maurice Ruddlesden, in one of the general appropriation bills, the difference between the pay of a laborer and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from July 1, 1885, to June 30, 1887.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 10026) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River, between the cities of Omaha, Nebr., and Council Bluffs, Iowa, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN H. KINKEAD AND OTHERS.

Mr. MORROW. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1353) and that it be now considered and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1353) referring to the Court of Claims for adjudication the claims of John H. Kinkead, Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood.

Whereas John H. Kinkead, of Nevada, and Samuel Sussman, of California, did, on the 28th day of October, 1868, purchase a certain building situate on lot known as No. 1 on the official plat of the town of Sitka, in the Territory of Alaska, from the Russian-American Company, the owner of said building; and

Whereas said building had been declared by the protocol of the transfer of Russian-America to the United States to be private property; and

Whereas thereafter the collector of customs of the United States did take from said Kinkead and Sussman a lease of a portion of said building, and entered thereupon; and

Whereas afterward General Jefferson C. Davis did seize the whole of said building, on the ground that the same was the property of the United States, notwithstanding the commissioners appointed to ascertain private property had certified the same to be private property; and

Whereas afterward said Kinkead and Sussman did present their petition to the United States Court of Claims claiming rent for said building; and

Whereas said court did, on the 11th day of June, 1883, dismiss said claim, for want of jurisdiction only; and

Whereas Charles O. Wood, of Ohio, did in like manner purchase a certain other building, situate on lot known as No. 24, from said Russian-American Company, and did in like manner present his petition to the Court of Claims for rent of the same, the same having been in like manner seized for the use of the United States, notwithstanding the same had been certified to be private property; and

Whereas said Court of Claims did in like manner dismiss the claim of said Wood, for want of jurisdiction only: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That jurisdiction be, and is hereby, conferred on the Court of Claims to hear the claims of John H. Kinkead and Samuel Sussman, and Charles O. Wood, for the rent and value of certain buildings in the town of Sitka, in the Territory of Alaska, alleged by them to have been acquired by virtue of purchase from the Russian-American Company, upon the evidence already filed in said court and such additional legal evidence as may be hereafter presented on either side; and if said court shall find that said parties acquired a valid title to said buildings, respectively, alleged to have been purchased by them, said court shall award to said parties a fair and reasonable rent for the use of the said buildings for the time, if any, the same have been occupied by the United States, and also a suitable indemnity for said buildings themselves; and the receipt of such rent and indemnity shall thereafter bar any further claim by said parties for the use of said buildings or for the value thereof; and before receiving the same all of said parties shall execute a release to the United States for all right, title, and interest whatever in and to the said property; and any defense, set-off, or counter-claim may be pleaded by the United States as defendants, as in cases within the general jurisdiction of the court, and either party shall have the same right of appeal as in such cases.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the preamble to this bill is hardly necessary.

Mr. MORROW. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is a Senate bill I make no objection.

The bill was passed.

Mr. MORROW moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY RESERVATION NEAR SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 6313), and that it be now put on its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6313) to release unto the city of San Antonio, Tex., for its use as a public thoroughfare, certain portions of the military reservation near said city.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to open up and to release unto the city of San Antonio, Tex., for public use as a thoroughfare, that portion of the military reservation adjoining said city which, at the time said reservation became the property of the United States, was known upon the map of said city as Pine street.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of the bill; and the House proceeded to consider the same.

An amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was read, as follows:

Add, after the word "street," in line 8, the words:

"Provided, That for a distance of 656 feet north of Grayson street, the east side of said street proposed to be opened shall be on a north and south line, parallel to and 16 feet 6½ inches west of the old east side of Pine street: And provided further, That the said right of way be granted upon the express understanding and condition that the Government reserves its right to the continued use of its target range, under such regulations as may be necessary to provide all proper precautions against injury to passing persons and vehicles."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SAYERS. I move further to amend by striking out, in lines 3 and 4, after the word "authorized," the words "and directed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAYERS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT EASTPORT, ME.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2901), and that the bill be now considered and passed.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2901) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell and convey the United States custom-house and post-office property at Eastport, in the State of Maine, lately destroyed by fire, the proceeds thereof to be invested in the purchase of a new site for and to provide for the erection of a new public building at that place.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to sell at public auction, in the town of Eastport, Me., to the highest bidder, after thirty days' notice in all of the newspapers published in the town of Eastport, the land and premises known as the United States custom-house and post-office, on Washington and Water streets in said town of Eastport, Me.; the time and place of said sale in said town to be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury at a date not later than sixty days after the passage of this act, with power to reject any or all bids, and to readvertise the said property in like manner as often as may be necessary to secure the value thereof, and the cost to be paid from the proceeds of sale of said property.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall invest the purchase-money of the said property received by him, so far as the same may go, in the purchase or acquisition by condemnation of a site, and cause to be erected thereon a suitable and commodious fire-proof building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the post-office, custom-house, and other Government offices, at the town of Eastport, in the State of Maine. The cost of said building, including site, approaches, and heating apparatus, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the sum of $100,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet, including streets and alleys: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Maine shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be used and expended for the purposes provided in this act.

There being no objection, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the House proceeded to consider the same.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BOUTELLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

GREENSBURGH LIMESTONE COMPANY AND OTHERS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the following bill, and that the same be passed.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7017) for the relief of Greensburgh Limestone Company and others.

Mr. MILLS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana what is the amount of that claim?

Mr. BRAGG. I think this is too important a bill to be passed in this hasty manner. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will at least allow me to make a statement. The bill to which I refer, I find on reflection, is a Senate bill, and the bill which was read by the Clerk is the House bill of the same import.

Mr. ROGERS. Is this explanation subject to a point of order?

The SPEAKER. It is. The bill sent up and read is a House bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill pending before the House on my motion is a Senate bill, and the Clerk has been reading from the copy reported to the House. It is a Senate bill, and is on the Speaker's table, I presume. It came from the Senate after pending there for several years, at any rate, I think, for five or six years, and seems to have been carefully considered by the Senate Committee on Claims. I understand the case underwent a thorough examination by the House Committee on Claims, and, I understand, was reported from that committee unanimously.

The bill involves a question growing out of a contract for stone for the Cincinnati public building. The parties furnishing the stone insist that a wrong construction was put on the contract, and they were required to furnish a more valuable stone than the contract called for. The bill is so drawn as to guard against any possible misinterpretation on the part of the Court of Claims, so that no possible injustice can be done to the Government. The bill, as I have already stated, was referred in the House to the Committee on Claims, and reported back, as I understand, unanimously. I know something of the facts.

Mr. MILLS. What is the amount of this claim?

Mr. HOLMAN. I can not state the amount claimed. I do not know. I think it is not large. It is whatever the court may find justly due the parties furnishing the stone under the contract. It is for furnishing the stone for the basement of the post-office and United States court building at Cincinnati.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Allow me——

Mr. HOLMAN. Excuse me for a moment. These parties who make the claim furnished the stone for the basement of the Cincinnati public building, as I have mentioned. The main structure of the building is of granite from the State of Maine. The limestone used in the basement of the building, as I understand, was furnished by these claimants—was furnished from the county of Decatur, in my own district.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I wish to say, in reference to the report from the Committee on Claims, that while it is true, as stated by the gentleman from Indiana, that it was a unanimous report, yet it was not reported by a full committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know, of course, anything about that. This whole question arose under a contract, as I have mentioned; and the question is whether or not these parties were bound to furnish stone of a given quality, and character, and value, or an article of less value, under the contract.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; it is too important a bill to be passed in this hasty way. The statute of limitations runs against this claim. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman will certainly withdraw his objection.

Mr. BRAGG. Well, under the circumstances, I will withdraw my objection. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the bill sent to the Clerk's desk and read is a House bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is, however, in terms, the same bill; but I will now move that the House discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1829) for the relief of the Greensburgh Limestone Company and others, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Greensburgh Limestone Company, a corporation duly organized under the laws of the State of Indiana, William W. Lowe, Daniel W. Levett, and Oliver M. Thompson, partners doing business under the firm-name of W. W. Lowe & Co., and John L. Scanlon, being the parties of the second part named in a certain contract in behalf of the United States made by Samuel Hannaford, such contract being one for the delivery of certain stone as therein described for the erection of a custom-house and post-office at Cincinnati, Ohio, and bearing date the 21st day of August, 1874, or the survivors of such parties, are hereby authorized and empowered to bring in the Court of Claims a suit against the Government of the United States, upon the said contract, for the damages by them sustained, in regard to the premises in said contract provided for, by reason of their being required, in the execution of such contract, by the superintendent and others in charge of the construction of the said building, to deliver stone, as is alleged, of sizes and character different from those called for in the said contract, or different from those which they were entitled to deliver thereunder. And the said court is hereby authorized and directed to take jurisdiction in said case, and to render judgment therein for whatever sum, if anything, shall be shown by the evidence to have been the increased cost, damage, and expense to which the said claimants were subjected by reason of their being required, as aforesaid, to deliver stone different from that provided for in said contract, if the court shall hold that such requirement was not authorized thereby: Provided, That such recovery shall in no case be in excess of what shall appear from the said evidence to have been saved to the Government in avoiding loss or waste of stone, in the expense of cutting and fitting the said stone for the structure or structures for which they were designed, as provided in said contract, and in handling and setting such stone in said structure or structures; the claimants in no case to recover for anything that they shall not show to have been done by them not required by the contract, nor for anything that they shall not show to have been saved to the United States in the cost of the building by reason of the departure therefrom. And in the said action each party to the same shall be entitled to give in evidence all competent and relevant testimony already heretofore taken and filed in said court in a certain action, numbered 11972, heretofore prosecuted on said contract, and also all other competent and relevant testimony which either party may offer in the case. And each party to the said cause shall be entitled to take an appeal from the judgment of the Court of Claims to the Supreme Court of the United States, as in other cases.

Passed the Senate June 8, 1886.

Attest:

ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary,
By CHARLES W. JOHNSON, Chief Clerk.

The Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and it was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to. [Applause].

EDWARD G. PENDLETON.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. 7807) to muster Edward G. Pendleton as captain of cavalry into the service of the United States, and to pay him for his services from August —, 1861, to July 10, 1864, inclusive, together with the amendments thereto reported by the Committee on War Claims, and that the same be put upon its passage.

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Let the report be read.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. I hope the gentleman will allow the report to be read. It will take but a few minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. If you wish to take up the time of the House I do not object, but any claim coming from the Committee on War Claims changing an officer's muster can not pass here by unanimous consent.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the report be read.

Mr. BRAGG. I do not care whether the House listens to the report or not; I insist on my objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill is not before the House.

CONSTITUTIONAL CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present at this time for reference a memorial of the Constitutional Centennial Commission of Philadelphia asking the co-operation of Congress for a celebration by the nation of the centennial anniversary of the framing and promulgation of the Federal Constitution. I am advised that this has been already printed by order of the Senate, and it need not again be duplicated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Library.

DAVID RYAN.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 9122) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan against the United States; and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan, of Alton, Ill., against the United States for extra work, if any, done by him for the United States upon the national cemetery road at Springfield, Mo., and to render judgment thereon as in other cases, with right of appeal to each party to the Supreme Court.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SPRINGER) was read, as follows:

The bill covers a claim to the amount of $3,000 for extra work by the claimant upon the national cemetery road at Springfield, Mo. The facts are complicated, and your committee are unable to determine whether the claimant is entitled to relief or not. But the case is such as, in justice to the claimant, entitles him to a judicial investigation. Your committee, therefore, recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, referring the case to the Court of Claims for judicial determination, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 7233, and recommend that the latter bill lie upon the table.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRISON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THOMAS MATHEWS AND OTHERS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3554) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others, and put it upon its passage with the amendments recommended by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to investigate the claims of Thomas Mathews, for the sum of $57; H. A. Crane, for the sum of $37.80; William McChesney, for the sum of $19.80; John K. Post & Co., for the sum of $652.80; E. W. Rathbun & Co., for the sum of $586.60; Irwin & Sloan, for the sum of $613.40; C. C. Morton, for the sum of $104.80; Charles H. Getman, for the sum of $114.80; Edward Morrow, for the sum of $122.60; Smith, Murdock & Co., for the sum of $107.60; Getman, Boyd & Co., for the sum of $66.20; Daniel L. Couch, for the sum of $145; Tailing & Pratt, for the sum of $71.40; Tailing & Randall, for the sum of $46; L. A. Card, for the sum of $75.40; E. L. Thornton, for the sum of $35; Page, Fairchild & Co., for the sum of $61.60; D. P. Fairchild, for the sum of $55; O. M. Bond & Co., for the sum of $59.40; I. P. Wetmore, for the sum of $31; Ross & Co., for the sum of $74; Bond & Jenkins, for the sum of $23; Crane, Belden & Co., for the sum of $46.40; Bond, Kenyon & Co., for the sum of $8.60; Kenyon, Wright & Co., for the sum of $40.20; Charles O'Hara, for the sum of $10; Page & Co., for the sum of $7.20; Hagaman & Murdock, for the sum of $36.40; Cheney, Ames & Co., for the sum of $10.80, now or formerly importers in the customs district of Oswego, N. Y., being the several amounts of fees alleged to have been unlawfully collected of them, respectively, by collectors of customs at the port of Oswego, N. Y., from the 1st day of April, 1873, to the 31st day of December, 1882, inclusive, under section 2654 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (second edition); and in case he shall be satisfied that such claims, or any part or parts thereof, were unlawfully collected, he shall refund the same to the said firms or parties, or their legal representatives, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

The committee recommend the following amendments:

In line 15 strike out the name "Morrow" and insert "Monen;" also,
In lines 20 and 21 strike out the word "Tailing" and insert "Failing."

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. BROWN, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

That this bill is identical with a bill (No. 7106) introduced in the House of Representatives, Forty-eighth Congress, and under the rules then referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and by them reported favorably to the House February 18, 1885, too late for action by the House. We adopt their report, as follows:

That the collector of customs at the port of Oswego, N. Y., from the 1st day of April, 1873, to the 31st day of December, 1882, inclusive, demanded and collected of the persons and firms hereinafter named the several sums set opposite their respective names. These several sums are made up of fees collected by the collector at said port during the time named for certificates claimed to be of the character authorized and covered by section 2654 of the Revised Statutes (section 2, act of March 2, 1879, Statutes at Large, vol. 1, page 706). The legality of these several payments was tested in the case of Cochrane vs. Schell, Supreme Court of the United States, October, 1882, term, in which decision it was held that the stamp affixed to consular invoices (on importations similar to those made by the persons named in the bill) was not such a certificate as warranted the collection from the importer of a fee of 20 cents. In a letter from the Secretary of the United States Treasury concerning the subject-matter of this bill and the fees therein mentioned, dated December 19, 1884, the Secretary disposes of the whole matter. Following is a copy of the letter:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.
Washington, D. C., December 19, 1884.

SIR: In response to a communication made under your direction on the 24th of June last to the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting for his consideration (H. R. 7106) a bill for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others, I have the honor to return herewith a copy of a letter, under the date of the 10th instant, from the collector of customs at Oswego, N. Y., advising the payment to Thomas Mathews and the other persons named in the bill of the amounts set opposite the several names of the same persons in his letter. The claims to these sums arise under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States procured at the October term, 1882, in the case of Cochrane vs. Augutus Schell, in which decision it was held that the stamp affixed to consular invoices (on importations similar to those made by the persons named in the bill) was not such a certificate as warranted the collection from the importer of a fee of 20 cents. The sums named in the letter were for fees of this character exacted under the supposed authority of section 2654 of the Revised Statutes (section 9, act of March 2, 1879, Stats. at Large, vol. 1, page 706). Accompanying the letter are detailed statements of the sums collected from each person named in the bill, with the date of collection, as taken from the records of the collector's office.

The claimants would seem to be justly entitled to a refund of the amounts exacted of them.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. E. COON,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT,
Of the Committee of Ways and Means, House of Representatives.

The following is a list of the persons and firms affected by this bill and covered by the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury and the letter of the collector of the port of Oswego, N. Y., to wit:

Charles H. Getman	$115 20
J. K. Post & Co	324 20
E. W. Rathbun & Co	585 20
Kinyon, Wright & Co	41 80
Paige, Fairchild & Co	64 00
Cheeney, Ames & Co	10 80
William McChessney	20 20
Crane, Belden & Co	46 20
Bond & Jenkins	23 20
O. M. Bond & Co	49 20
Failing & Pratt	71 40
Ross & Co	72 60
L. A. Card	75 20
H. A. Crane	37 80
Daniel L. Couch	142 80
Irwin P. Sloan	611 40
Edward Monen	124 60
Smith, Murdock & Co	107 60
Hogoman & Murdock	35 60
Cnarles O. Harra	10 40
Page & Co	$7 20
Bond, Kinyon & Co	8 40
C. C. Morton	103 20
Thomas Mathews	54 80
E. L. & S. Thornton	35 80
Failing & Rundell	45 60
D. P. Fairchild	55 20
I. P. Wetmore	32 00
Total	2,911 60

These sums, there is no doubt, were collected without authority of law, and in the opinion of your committee ought to be returned to the parties named. These several sums are now in the Treasury of the United States.

Your committee find that said bill ought to be amended as follows, to wit: In line 15 the word "Morrow" should be stricken out and the word "Monen" inserted in its place. In line 20 the word "Tailing" should be stricken out and the word "Failing" inserted in its place. In line 21 the word "Tailing" should be stricken out and the word "Failing" inserted in its place.

And the bill as amended we recommend be passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Before the right of objection is waived I wish to ask the gentleman from New York whether these are the only parties who claim under this provision, or whether this is the beginning of the reopening of all these claims on the part of those who imported goods during that period.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know whether there are others or not. These have been presented to me, and I present them to the House. They are founded upon a decision of the United States Supreme Court, which holds that all such claims are collectible and can be enforced against the collector.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Why did they not proceed in the Court of Claims?

Mr. PAYNE. To save the expenses of litigation both to themselves and to the Government.

I repeat, they are founded on a decision of the United States Supreme Court and recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means of the last House and the Committee on Claims of the present House.

There being no objection, the amendments were considered and agreed to, and the bill as amended ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PAYNE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORT OF DELIVERY, LEWES, DEL.

Mr. LORE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (S. 2256) to create a port of delivery at Lewes, Del., and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Lewes, in the State of Delaware, shall be, and is hereby, constituted a port of delivery within the collection district of Delaware; and the deputy collector of customs stationed there shall have power to enter and clear all vessels, whether foreign or domestic, coming to that port.

Mr. RANDALL. Before consent is given, I wish to ask whether that is a unanimous report from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. LORE. I understand it is.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want any misunderstanding about this, and I say that in perfect respect to my friend from Delaware. My colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] is a member of that committee, but is absent from the House to-day. I am willing to have it come up at any time hereafter when my colleague is present.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is for the creation of a port of delivery?

Mr. LORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no officer to be appointed?

Mr. LORE. No, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. But there is an officer necessarily.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, not if it is the creation of a mere port of delivery.

Mr. LORE. I will state to my friend from Pennsylvania that I submitted this to his colleague from Pennsylvania on the committee——

Mr. RANDALL. I will not object to the present consideration of the bill if the gentleman from Delaware will allow me to open the question by a motion to reconsider hereafter, in case there shall be reason to do so on account of the objection of my colleague.

Mr. LORE. I will make no objection whatever to that.

The SPEAKER. It will be understood, then, that the motion to reconsider may be made hereafter.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes; say upon the first day of the session after the holidays.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be read a third time; and having been read the third time, was passed.

The SPEAKER. The understanding is that a motion to reconsider the motion by which the bill passed may be made on the first day of the session after the holidays.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar the bill (H. R. 640) to quiet the title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, and consider the same with the amendments I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, there is no need of that; I object to the bill.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HOLMES. I hope that motion will be withdrawn.

May I inquire who demanded the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] demanded the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

PRESCOTT AND ARIZONA CENTRAL RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CAREY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 9339) granting the right of way to the Prescott and Arizona Central Railway Company across the Fort Whipple barracks military reservation, in Arizona; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STABLE FOR HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 10091) for the construction of a stable for the horses and wagons for the use of the officers of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WARREN HALL.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 1774) for the relief of Warren Hall; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour for the consideration of bills under the rule begins at twenty minutes past 1 o'clock. The call rests with the Committee on Territories.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7217) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] has forty minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I would not have made any point on this question of time did I not know from the study I have given to the subject that the issues involved are so numerous and so important that no man can do full justice to it in the hour allowed. If the questions which are raised by the bill, Mr. Chairman, were mere matters of policy, if it merely involved the policy to be pursued by the General Government toward the five civilized tribes inhabiting the Indian Territory, I would possibly have felt willing, in consequence of my lack of experience in the treatment of this Indian question, to have refrained from entering into a discussion of the subject. But feeling as I do feel that the issues involved in this bill affect the honor of this nation, ay, more, sir, believing they affect the good faith which a great and powerful people should observe toward weak and defenseless tribes, I can not, with my convictions of duty as a member of the Committee on Territories, remain silent.

The bill presents objections at the very threshold. When we go to organize certain areas in Territorial governments wise statesmanship at least requires that there should be clearly ascertained and well-defined boundaries; wise statesmanship further requires that there should be at least within those areas a settlement of people constituting a sufficient nucleus for a well-organized society. The bill upon your table, Mr. Chairman, is not a bill with clearly defined boundaries. It is a bill on its face presented in an alternative character. It proposes to organize a Territory to be composed, in a certain contingency only, of what is known as the Public Land strip, but under certain other circumstances, if the consent of the five tribes can be secured—I should say, more properly speaking, if the consent of the five tribes, under the provisions of the bill, can be coerced, if there can be such a thing as the coercion of consent—why, then, Mr. Chairman, the Territory is to consist of an entirely different area. In the one case of the Public Land strip it includes 3,600,000 acres—5,740 square miles. In the other case it is to include 44,000,000 acres. And yet for either of these areas, whatever may be the area of this Territory, the same governmental machinery is provided, the same governor, the same legislature, the same judiciary, the same constabulary force—all the machinery of a government in the one case the same as in the other.

Is that wise statesmanship? Look at the population. Why, in the Public Land strip alone there is not a lawful settler; there is not a lawful settler within its limits. You take the Public Land strip, and this House, only on last Saturday, has stripped this bill of this feature of it by the passage of a bill at the instance of my friend from Kansas, Judge PETERS, by which the Public Land strip is annexed to the judiciary department of Kansas, and also to the land district of Kansas. That is what has become of this portion of the area, and the only area over which this Government has any right whatsoever to erect a Territorial government.

Well, if we take the other contingency. What is the population of the Indian Territory? The whole population of the Indian Territory is about 79,000 Indians, of whom about 64,000 are in the five civilized tribes, and the other 15,000 are uncivilized Indians. Is there a nucleus for society there? In addition to that, we are told in the report of the Secretary of the Interior that there are some 36,000 whites besides, composed, he tells us, of "licensed traders, railroad men, laborers, claimants to Indian citizenship, cattle men, intruders, thieves, loafers, gamblers," &c. Such is the population for which we are to erect a great government.

Why, Mr. Chairman, the idea of talking about erecting a government for a country of this kind, in the one event to consist of 3,600,000 acres, in the other of 44,000,000 acres—it would be as wise, when we do not own this land, when this land is to be hereafter acquired, and wherein there is no population constituting the nucleus of a future political State—it would be as wise as the conduct of an architect who should attempt to construct a magnificent temple and buy the land afterward on which to locate it. That is the wisdom and the statesmanship which are displayed in this bill.

But I said, Mr. Chairman, and that is my great objection to this bill, that good faith toward a weak and defenseless people required that it should not pass. In order to understand that, I am compelled to go somewhat into the history of the Indian Territory, and I beg the attention of those who are interested in this matter while I briefly go over that history. The Indian Territory so-called has never been organized as a political department of the Government. It was a part of the territory acquired from France in 1803, and to which the Indian title of the Osages was extinguished in 1825. As early as 1804, shortly after the acquisition of the Indian Territory, or rather the acquisition of Louisiana, the Congress of the United States passed an act by which it was provided that the President in his discretion might settle Indians then east of the Mississippi River on lands west of the Mississippi River; they to exchange their lands on the east for the lands they were to receive on the west.

In pursuance of that policy, as early as 1809 a delegation of Cherokees had an interview with Mr. Jefferson, and as early as 1817 the Cherokees, then residing in Georgia, North and South Carolina, Alabama, and Tennessee, became divided in their minds as to the policy of removal, but a portion of the tribe determined to remove, and, in pursuance of that determination, they removed and settled in the then Territory of Arkansas. By the year 1817 fully one-third of the tribe had removed. In 1828 the Government made a treaty with those Indians then residing in Arkansas, by which it was provided that they should be removed from Arkansas and be assigned new homes in what is now the Indian Territory. And here I propose to read a single clause from the terms of that treaty:

> The United States, on the 6th of May, 1828, declaring it to be the wish of the Government to secure permanent homes for the Cherokee nation, as well those residing in Arkansas as those residing east of the Mississippi—a home that shall never in all future time be embarrassed by having extended around it the lines, or placed over it the jurisdiction, of a Territory or State, nor be pressed upon by the extension in any way of any of the limits of any existing Territory or State, declare, by treaty of that date, that the United States "agree to possess to the Cherokees and guarantee it to them forever, and that guarantee is hereby solemnly pledged, of seven millions of acres therein described, together with a perpetual outlet west, and a free and unmolested use of all the country lying west of the western boundary of the previously-described limits and as far west as the sovereignty of the United States and their right to the soil extend."

It was an exchange of land. It was made for a consideration. There was a quid pro quo. They acquired the title to the land for that consideration. They surrendered the Indian title of occupancy to a vast body of land in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, upon the inducement and upon the distinct terms that they were to have a permanent home, which should never in all future time be disturbed or molested by the white man, to which they were to hold indisputable title, and over which no State or Territorial government was to extend.

In 1833 a new treaty was made, which again confirmed this possession, and again in 1835 at New Echota, in the State of Georgia, with the Cherokees then remaining in Georgia a third treaty was made. Under that treaty the provisions of the former treaties were reaffirmed and reguaranteed, and a further cession was made to this people of 800,000 acres of land which was afterwards discovered to lie in the State of Kansas, and which has been subsequently receded. It was provided by that treaty that the land included in the original cession of 7,000,000 acres, the land included in the outlet west, and the 800,000 acres should all be guaranteed to them in one patent, and the Government of the United States, in pursuance of that treaty and of the act of Congress of 1830, to which I will soon refer, executed a patent on the 31st of December, 1838, by which the land in those three several tracts, amounting to over 14,000,000 acres, was patented to those Cherokees, and their title, by that treaty and by this patent, is as clear and indisputable as the title of any white man to any homestead which he holds in this country to-day. I have said that under the act of 1804 there was provision simply for an exchange of lands, but in 1830, when again, in the further progress of our Indian policy, this question of the removal of the Indians came up, the Government went a step further and provided that, if the Indians saw fit, the lands upon which they were settled west of the Mississippi should be patented to them.

In 1832 and 1833 the Creeks were removed to the lands immediately south of those on which the Cherokees had been settled, and their line extended west to the western boundary of the Indian Territory. The Seminoles of Florida were originally part of the Cherokees, and were settled on the same tract with them and occupied the lands immediately south. In 1830 a treaty was made with the Choctaws and the Chickasaws who were in Mississippi. The Choctaws and Chickasaws were located on the same lands in the Indian Territory and were settled immediately south of the Creeks.

Now, what I wish to call the attention of the House to is that the treaties with the Creeks, the treaties with the Choctaws, the treaties with the Seminoles, the treaties with the Chickasaws, reaffirmed in terms the same obligations which the United States had taken upon itself in reference to the treaties with the Cherokees, namely, that no State or Territorial line should be extended over those people without their full and free consent.

Mr. Chairman, these cessions to the Cherokees, the Creeks, the Seminoles, the Choctaws, and the Chickasaws embrace the entire Indian Territory as it is now set down on the map. It is apparent that there was one great purpose on the part of our fathers in reference to the location of these tribes in that Territory. You may say what you please about the policy of the thing; it is apparent there was, throughout, a general purpose or scheme, which was the establishment of a permanent home for these people with which no white man should ever interfere; and in the exercise of their rights there they were never to be molested by any State or Territorial government.

My friend who sits before me [Mr. STRUBLE] made at the last session of Congress a speech which I read with great interest. He cited a great many authorities in support of certain views which he presented in reference to the claims of the Indians in this Territory. My friend read a great deal from different writers on the law of trusts, and from law dictionaries, and from legal decisions; but he seems to have forgotten one great leading principle in the construction of all instruments. I read his exposition of the law with great interest, and I do not know but that I may have occasion to use it wherever I find a case to which it is applicable. [Laughter.]

But, sir, when I find that this Government, in the establishment of treaty after treaty, has reaffirmed these obligations, has pursued one main controlling purpose, that there has been one leading scheme, the establishment of this territory as permanent homes for these Indians, has time and again solemnly covenanted with these people that no State or Territorial government should be placed over them; when I come to construe these treaties and these subsequent contracts, I take them all together, and treating them as one matter, just as I would do in ascertaining the intention of the testator in a will, or of the parties to a contract, I seek to ascertain the leading, controlling purpose; and when that is ascertained, all your precedents, all your decisions, all your technical rules must give way. Technical rules of construction are of service, Mr. Chairman, when they aid us in ascertaining the meaning of the parties of an instrument; but when your technical rules are introduced for the purpose of obscuring that meaning, I resort to the controlling purpose, and I say precedents and adjudicated cases must give way.

Mr. Chairman, I endeavored in the remarks which I had the honor to submit on Saturday last to show, first, that it would be unwise and unstatesmanlike to establish a Territorial government over a territory of uncertain area; and, secondly, that it would be equally unwise and unstatesmanlike to establish such a government over any territory where we did not have such a population as would constitute the nucleus for a future political State. In maintaining those two propositions I had called the attention of the House to the fact that, under this bill, it being alternative in its character, there was a provision that there should be a Territorial government, under certain circumstances, over simply what is known as the Public Land strip, a territory which in its area is about one-twenty-fifth the size of Montana and about one-twenty-sixth the size of Dakota. I had also shown that in reference to other territory which might be incorporated under this Territorial government, it was dependent altogether upon how it might be acquired or whether it could be acquired in further negotiations with the Indians.

I had shown, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the lands in the Indian territory, that, under treaties which had been made in 1828, in 1833, and in 1835, this Government had entered into a solemn covenant that no State or Territorial government should ever exist over that Indian territory. I had shown that, in conformity with the act of Congress passed in 1830, the United States Government on the 31st of December, 1838, had granted a title to the Cherokee Indians, in the first place, to 7,000,000 acres of land, then to a perpetual outlet as far west as the sovereignty of the United States extended, and, besides, to 800,000 acres of land situated in the State of Kansas; making altogether some 14,000,000 acres of land to which letters patent had been granted. That is as far as I had proceeded in the historical narrative which I had the honor of submitting to the House.

We further find, Mr. Chairman, that in 1842 the Government of the United States, by letters patent, granted a fee-simple title to the entire southern portion of the Indian Territory, occupied by the Choctaws and Chickasaws, as far as the one hundredth degree of west longitude, and in 1852 granted a further patent to the Creeks (including the Seminoles) for all that portion of the Indian Territory which lay between the territory of the Choctaws and Chickasaws and that of the Cherokees. These three letters patent, of 1838, of 1842, and of 1852, cover the entire area of what is known as the Indian Territory. Thus it follows that that entire territory is secured to the Indians, both by letters patent from the Government of the United States granting them a fee-simple title to the lands, and further, by the solemn treaty engagements of the Government.

The question arises, how far has the situation been modified by subsequent treaties? I propose to state those modifications with the utmost frankness as I understand them, and I will state them in the order of time. In 1855 the Government of the United States entered into a treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws under which all the land west of the ninety-eighth degree of longitude extending to the one hundredth degree south of the possessions of the Creeks and the Seminole; was leased to the United States. That is the language of the treatys but, Mr. Chairman, while the word "lease" is used in the treaty, it is declared that the land is leased for a permanent home for the Wichitas and such other Indian tribes as the Government may see fit to locate thereon. Therefore, while the transaction was nominally a lease, it was to all intents and purposes an absolute conveyance, because the declaration accompanies the lease that the territory is conveyed as a permanent home for these Indian tribes.

In 1866, after the war, this lease was converted in terms into an absolute conveyance; and when I first examined this treaty I was led, with other members of the committee who signed the minority report, into the error of supposing that this conveyance was free from any condition or limitation whatsoever. A further examination, however, disclosed the fact that the conveyance was made subject to the treaty of 1855 and subject to the original treaties, which provided for the integrity of the entire Indian Territory, and that the treaty of 1866 contained a provision by which the Government reaffirmed and reassumed and reobligated itself by all the preceding covenants. That has been the construction which has been placed upon it by the officials of the Interior Department. It has been frequently stated in a previous discussion on this question that Acting Commissioner Holcombe has given it as his opinion that this cession was accompanied by this trust that the land should be used entirely for the settlement of Indians. (See letter of Acting Commissioner Holcombe to Hon. S. T. Kirkwood, Secretary of the Interior, April 25, 1881, furnished by Secretary Kirkwood in response to a resolution of the Senate, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, Senate Executive Document No. 111.)

Mr. Chairman, I find that Secretary Schurz on two occasions in 1879 gave the same opinion, holding that there was nothing in the treaty of 1866 which was a departure from the original scheme of settling this land with Indians and providing them with a permanent home, and expressly asserting that the title acquired by the Government by the treaties of 1866 was secured in pursuance and furtherance of the same purpose of Indian settlement, which was the foundation of the original scheme. (See Executive Document No. 50, Forty-eighth Congress, second session.) But, Mr. Chairman, an examination of the treaty of 1866 discloses this further fact: that the United States in the treaty required the Choctaws and the Chickasaws to assent to certain provisions to the effect that there should be a general legislative assembly for the Indian Territory, which was to be composed of at least one representative from each Indian tribe numbering as many as five hundred, and that in addition there should be a representative for each thousand Indians in the Territory. This was to constitute a general legislative assembly; and it was further provided that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or some other person to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior should be the governor of this proposed Territory.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that this provision has never been carried formally into effect; but the insertion of these clauses in the treaty shows what was clearly contemplated at the time, namely, the erection of an Indian legislative assembly in the Territory. The treaty of 1866 with the Choctaws and Chickasaws, as well as the treaty of 1866 with the Creeks and Seminoles and the treaty of 1866 with the Cherokees, contained a provision that there should be this legislative assembly, to which all these tribes consented and in which every tribe of Indians lawfully resident in the Territory was to be represented.

I infer from this, Mr. Chairman, that it was clearly contemplated at the time that here was to be a great legislative department of government which was to regulate the internal affairs of the Territory; and, Mr. Chairman, the existence of such an organization is utterly inconsistent with the idea of establishing such a Territorial government as is contemplated by this bill. The two things can not coexist; one or the other must give way. The treaties of 1866 provided for the establishment of this legislative government; and in providing for it they necessarily did away with the idea of the establishment of any such government as this bill proposes.

That was the provision in reference to the Chocktaw and Chickasaw settlement. Now, we come to the cession which was made by the Creeks and Seminoles. The Creeks, by Article III of the treaty of 1866, ceded the west half of their entire domain. The article reads:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south; the eastern half of said Creek lands, being retained by them, shall, except as herein otherwise stipulated, be forever set apart as a home for said Creek Nation; and, in consideration of said cession of the west half of their lands, estimated to contain 3,250,560 acres, the United States agree to pay the sum of 30 cents per acre.

The Seminoles ceded their entire domain. Article III of their treaty reads:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede and convey to the United States their entire domain.

Now, the purpose of the cession is clearly manifest from the language of these treaties. Some of my friends who favor the passage of this bill have referred us to definitions of what constitutes a trust, and argued that no trust accompanied this cession. We have had references to Perry on Trusts; and I do not know but these gentlemen, in their zeal and diligence, have gone as far back as Coke on Littleton.

But, Mr. Chairman, bearing in mind that here was the Government of the United States on one side, and that the other parties to this agreement were Indians, half civilized Indians, I take it we are to interpret this treaty according to a fair construction of the meaning of its words. Here is the purpose clearly made manifest that it was for the settlement of Indians and other freedmen; and it has been held by the Department of the Interior in the construction of this treaty that there was a trust which accompanied this cession, and that the Government was, and is, bound by the terms of this treaty to locate thereon none but Indians and freedmen, and that the freedmen referred to were negroes who were held in slavery by the Creeks and Seminoles themselves. That is the construction which has been placed upon the treaty by the Government. That was the opinion of Acting Commissioner Holcombe. That was the opinion of Secretary Schurz, in two letters written in 1879. That is the opinion of Judge Parker, in his decision in the Paine case, where he holds that no particular form of words is necessary to show that a piece of land has been designated for a special purpose, but if the meaning can be clearly ascertained from the words, the inference is indisputable that it had been assigned specially for that purpose.

We come now to what has been called—improperly called in this bill—the cession of the Cherokees; and I want the committee to understand that while this bill speaks of the cession of the Cherokee outlet, there never has been a cession by the Cherokees of one foot of their lands, so far as relates to the Cherokee outlet.

The sixteenth article of the treaty of 1866 with the Cherokees is as follows:

ARTCLE XVI. The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of 96°, to be taken in a compact form in quantity not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty, as the United States may decide.

Said lands thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee nation at such price as may be agreed on between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President; and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

The Cherokee nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever—— as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

As to what?

Here is no cession to the United States at all. Here is an agreement to cede to friendly Indians whom the United States may see fit to settle on these lands—to be ceded in that form—not to exceed 160 acres to each, and until so ceded and so occupied by these friendly Indians, there is express provision retaining in the Cherokee Nation the jurisdiction and authority over all these lands.

Whatever may be said in reference to the other portions of the Territory, certainly as to the Cherokee outlet there can be no question whatever. There is no attempt here to call this a trust.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is sought in this bill to get rid of the difficulties, which are apparent even to the majority of the committee, by a commission to be appointed under the provisions of the bill, which is to negotiate with these Indians for the surrender of their rights.

My first objection, Mr. Chairman, to this commission is just this: The bill proposes to establish a Territorial government in the first place, and appoint a commission to go there to acquire the lands afterwards. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the wiser course would be to appoint a commission to secure the surrender of the Indian title in the first place, and then establish the government afterwards.

Mr. STRUBLE. I would like at this point to ask the gentleman whether or not he is aware of the passage of an act by the Forty-eighth Congress authorizing the President to proceed by the appointment of a commission to negotiate with these Indians for the surplus lands in the Territory, with a view to open the same to homesteaders for settlement?

Mr. BARNES. I have never examined the act in question, but I understand some such act was passed, and that the Secretary of the Interior, in his report, has given certain reasons why that act has not been carried out. That is the act to which, I suppose, the gentleman refers.

Mr. STRUBLE. Have you examined those reasons?

Mr. BARNES. I can not say that I have. I know that act has not been carried out.

Mr. STRUBLE rose.

Mr. BARNES. If the gentleman will wait I will, in the course of my argument, show what I favor. And on that very question I understand the Secretary of the Interior took the position it was not obligatory on him to appoint a commission, and therefore it has not been done.

These Indians have themselves already, in advance, insisted on their rights in separate legislative council of each of these tribes, and in general council of the five tribes.

Again, time and again, by their respective delegations, before the Committee on Territories, they have insisted on the maintenance of their rights, and that they would not surrender these lands.

I do not think they would, under the provisions of the bill, accept the commission, because they are not to treat with these Indians on terms of equality. And that is this bill—the creation of this territorial government in terrorem over them. It seeks to compel their acquiescence by saying through this commission, you have no choice. See the Government of the United States, against which you are helpless, in the plenitude of its power is determined to erect this territorial government. In fact it has already erected it. Why should you hold out any longer? Why not surrender?

I say that is not the free, the full, the fair and untrammeled consent which our fathers in 1828, 1833, and 1835 guaranteed to these people. It is not a free consent. It is consent forced, and forced in violation of the solemn covenants of these treaties. It is consent so extorted that it amounts to a repudiation of those treaties, and such repudiation, in the language of the board of Indian commissioners in one of their reports, would be such dishonor as would excite the scorn of the civilized world.

Mr. Chairman, this bill goes further and seeks to declare null and void special rights known as the Cherokee strip lease.

Now, what is that lease and what were the circumstances under which it was made? It is true, as I understand, that it is occupied by certain cattle syndicates. I am not here to advocate any cattle syndicate, nor am I here to stand up in favor of any cattle monopoly or any other monopoly, but I am here to stand up and maintain the solemn guarantees into which we entered with these people. I repeat, What were the circumstances under which this Cherokee strip lease was made?

Why, before it was made the Indian agent, Tufts, resident in the Territory in March, 1883, reported that there were constant lawless incursions being made into the Territory upon these lands from the surrounding States. People were grazing their cattle there, and were paying nothing to the Indians; that the Indians were receiving no benefit, or that they were receiving nothing for the pasturage; that these people were cutting down timber and destroying it as far as the Cimarron River, as much as 60 miles south of the Kansas line; that unless this wholesale destruction was stopped all timber on these lands would be destroyed within three years, and that much of the land would be rendered worthless.

Mr. Price was then the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and called the attention of Chief Bushyhead, of the Cherokees, to the facts as reported by the agent. What does he do? He calls a council of the Cherokees, and when they assemble they pass an act in which provision is made for a contract for a lease, as it is called, of the lands to a certain incorporated company in the State of Kansas. It has been stated that the Government never approved of this lease, but Chief Bushyhead furnishes a copy of that lease to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. Is any objection raised by the Government about it? If there was an objection to it, then was the time to make the objection.

If it was not fair, if it was not equitable or legal, why was not the objection then made to it?

Mr. PETERS. Let me ask the gentleman was there not this objection: Did not the Secretary of the Interior state positively that he would not approve the lease, but that he would protect the lessees as against any other party or parties who went in there without a lease?

Mr. BARNES. I do not understand the latter part to be true. I understand the position of the Secretary of the Interior to be just this: that the Cherokees had a perfect title to the land and that it was no business of the Government of the United States what they saw proper to do with it; that he, the Secretary of the Interior, would not interfere in any way; that while he did not approve or disapprove of the lease the reason was because they had as much title to the lands as any white man had.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman does not pretend to state that that was the official decision of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BARNES. I do, sir; and I will quote that opinion in full after a while. That was the ground of the decision, that these people had the title just like a white man had; and so the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, refused to approve or disapprove the lease because the Government had no right to interfere either for approval or disapproval.

I may as well here refer to the answer of Secretary Teller to a resolution of the Senate of December 3, 1884, inquiring concerning leases of lands in the Indian Territory, to be found in Senate Executive Document No. 17, Forty-eighth Congress, second session:

The Cherokees have a fee-simple title to their lands, and they do not recognize the right of the Department to interfere in the management of their affairs with reference thereto.

And again, speaking of the Cherokee strip, on page 5:

The land is theirs, and they have an undoubted right to use it in any way that a white man would use it, with the same character of title, and an attempt to deprive the nation of the right would be in direct conflict with the treaty as well as the plain words of the patent. They are quite capable of determining, without the aid of the Indian department or Congress, what is to their advantage or disadvantage, and the Government can not interfere with their rightful use and occupation of their lands, which are rightfully theirs, as the public domain is that of the United States, subject only to the provisions of article XVI of the treaty of 1866, which, at most, is only a contract to sell certain portions of the land; but, until the Government settles friendly Indians thereon and pays for the land, the right of possession and occupancy is especially reserved.

This letter of Secretary Teller still controls the Department of the Interior, for Commissioner of Indian Affairs Atkins, in his letter of July 10, 1885, in the Faucett case, thus expresses himself in regard to it:

The opinion of the Department as to the title by which the Cherokee Nation holds its lands is a matter of official record in Department letter of January 3, 1885. And "under the general power of supervision of Indian affairs, vested by law in the Secretary of the Interior, the views of the Department as thus expressed must, until reversed or modified by competent authority, be held to govern this office."

Mr. PERKINS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but would like to ask this question: If it was not the position or the opinion of the Attorney-General that, as you suggest, the Government of the United States had no right to interfere, but yet it was a matter that was being discussed and considered by Congress, and for that reason he would take no formal action, but leave it to be determined by Congress?

Mr. BARNES. No, sir; I do not find any such statement as that from the Attorney-General.

Mr. PERKINS. I understand that was his position.

Mr. BARNES. I do not think it was.

Mr. STRUBLE. His position, if I understand it, was expressly against the legality of the leases without reference to Congressional action.

Mr. BARNES. But that is another question entirely. I will come to that directly.

The opinions of the Attorneys-General have been quoted here—two Attorneys-General—that of Mr. Devens and of Attorney-General Garland. Both have been quoted in the majority report. The opinion of Mr. Devens was that the Cherokees could not settle Indians or Cherokees in that Territory; and why? Because, while they might go there temporarily, they could not make a settlement.

A settlement implies a permanent residence, and his opinion was that they could not permanently locate there, because, under the provisions of the sixteenth article of the treaty of 1866, such permanent location would conflict with the clear right of the United States under that treaty to settle friendly Indians thereon; and to allow the Cherokees to settle thereon would consequently render it impossible to carry out the provisions of this treaty.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then the gentleman concedes that if they can not settle Indians there they can not allow white men under leases to occupy the lands.

Mr. BARNES. That, the allowance of white men to graze cattle thereon is another and quite a different question, and I will answer it in the course of time. I am perfectly willing to answer any question, but really this is taking up too much of my time, and I expect to answer all such questions in the course of the discussion. While on this question about the opinions of the Attorneys-General I want to dispose of what has been said by Attorney-General Garland, in which he held that these leases themselves were void.

In the first place, in reference to that opinion, it is entirely obiter dictum, so to speak. It is entirely extra-official. It is not in response to the facts upon which the opinion was asked. The circumstances under which that opinion was sought by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs was this: There were certain disturbances growing out of the leases of lands occupied by the Cheyenne and Arapaho Indians, and it was a question whether the proper authority among the tribes had made the leases, and it was on these lands the whole disturbance arose. There was no disturbance in reference to the Cherokee strip at all.

After Commissioner Atkins took charge of the Office of Indian Affairs, in 1885, in a letter of June 25 to the Secretary of the Interior he calls attenion to the disturbances in the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations. He says not a word of the Cherokee strip or lease, and in the letter which was sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and which was subsequently sent by the Secretary of the Interior to Attorney-General Garland, dated July 7, 1885, for his opinion, he expressly says that these inquiries concerning validity of contracts, leases, &c., have no reference whatever to the lands now occupied by the five civilized tribes. Secretary Lamar, it is true, does extend the inquiry further, but there were no facts giving occasion for any such extension of the inquiry. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his two letters, mentions the facts, confines his inquiries to them, and specially excludes the lands of the five civilized tribes.

There were disturbances only among the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes. I want to call attention to the further fact that when the President of the United States, two days after this answer of Attorney-General Garland, issues his proclamation, he does not say one word about the Cherokee strip—not one syllable.

The President issued his proclamation within two days after the Attorney-General's opinion, showing that that opinion had been given in response to questions based on a state of facts reported by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and confined that proclamation entirely to the lands occupied by the Cheyennes and the Arapahoes. More than that, when the cattle were driven out from the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservations and were being driven on other lands—many of them on this Cherokee strip; and General Schofield in his official telegram to the Government reports the fact that they are being driven over the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservation on the Cherokee strip—not a word is heard from the President, from the Secretary of the Interior, or from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, claiming that it was illegal to locate them on that strip. So much for the opinion of the Attorney-General on this subject. It was entirely extra-official.

Mr. MORGAN. Did the Attorney-General frame the proclamation of the President?

Mr. BARNES. I do not know whether he did or not. I have not inquired about that.

But let us look at this question for ourselves.

Section 2116 of the Revised Statutes reads:

No purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians, shall be of any validity in law or equity unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution.

Section 2117 of the Revised Statutes provides that:

Every person who drives or otherwise conveys any stock of horses, mules, or cattle to range and feed on any land belonging to any Indian or Indian tribe, without the consent of such tribe, is liable to a penalty of $1 for each animal of such stock.

Now, I do not wish to argue about the mere names of things. I do not care whether you call this contract which was made in regard to this Cherokee outlet by the Cherokee nation (who held a perfect title to it) with this syndicate—I do not care whether you call it a lease or a contract. I shall not go into any technical definition nor look into the work of any dictionary maker to see whether it comes up to his definition of what is or what is not a lease. Section 2116 of the Revised Statutes prohibits a certain kind of contract being made; section 2117 of the Revised Statutes allows a certain kind of contract to be made.

Now, section 2117 does refer to the right of pasturage, and that is all that is contemplated by this contract with this Cherokee Live-Stock Company. They are prohibited from making any permanent settlement; they are prohibited from erecting any permanent structure. It is declared positively that the contract is in conformity with the sixteenth article of the treaty of 1866. They are to do nothing but graze their cattle. Secretary Teller says, in his opinion, that until lately this right of pasturage has never been doubted. How could it be doubted?

The very difference which exists between the provisions of section 2116 and the provisions of section 2117 of the Revised Statutes is based on the distinction between a fee-simple title and a title such as all Indians hold, the right of occupancy. As far back as the case of Johnson vs. McIntosh, in 8 Wheaton Reports, the Supreme Court of the United States recognized the distinction between the two cases, holding that while the Indian did not hold his land under a fee-simple title, he had an unlimited right to the use of the products of that land at his discretion. This view has been reaffirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, in 19 Wallace, in the case of The United States vs. Cook.

That is a case to which I call the attention of the committee—the case of uncivilized Indians having merely a title by occupancy. In that case the court says:

The right of use and occupation by the Indians is unlimited. They may exercise it at their discretion. If the lands are desirable for purposes of cultivation, they may be cleared of their timber to such extent as may be reasonable under the circumstances. The timber so cut may be sold. * * * Any cutting beyond this would be waste, and such timber could not be sold. The timber while standing is a part of the realty, and it can only be sold as the land could be. * * * When rightfully severed, as for purpose of cultivation, its severance is only a legitimate use of the land, * * * and it can be sold. [The court is preserving throughout the distinction between a sale of land and a sale of the use of it.]

The court subsequently states the doctrine more broadly, thus:

These are familiar principles in this country, and well settled, as applicable to tenants for life and remainder-men. But a tenant for life has all the rights of occupancy in the lands of the remainder-man. The Indians have the same rights in the lands of their reservations. What a tenant for life may do upon the lands of a remainder-man the Indians may do upon their reservations, but no more.

Now, Mr. Chairman, here is a clear distinction recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States from the earliest decisions down to the very latest; so that even the uncivilized Indian who holds merely by the right of occupancy can use the lands and the products of them at his discretion; and Secretary Teller says that the right of the Indian to the use of the pasturage of his lands never has been questioned until lately.

Further than that, we have a statute, not yet referred to at any time in the course of this debate (22 Stat. 590), wherein the Government of the United States has seen fit to make a distinction between the right of pasturage and the right to the products of the soil in the case of the five tribes, and the same rights in the cases of the other Indians throughout the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LORE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed 10 minutes to conclude his remarks.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I think we ought to allow him to conclude his remarks with the understanding that general debate shall conclude to-day, but that no vote shall be taken. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed to go on and conclude his remarks.

Mr. SPRINGER. There will be no objection, I suppose, to allowing me to reply to the gentleman from Georgia to-day?

The CHAIRMAN. At the end of an hour from the time when the committee began its session the committee must rise. The House may extend the time, but the committee can not.

Mr. HOLMAN. By unanimous consent the gentleman may proceed without objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] proceeding with his remarks?

Mr. BURROWS. The trouble with that, Mr. Chairman, is that it can not be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. It could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURROWS. Not where the House has made an order.

Mr. SPRINGER. If I can be recognized, I will yield ten minutes of my time to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], and I do this, with the full belief that the House, in order to give me sufficient opportunity to reply, will extend me equal courtesy.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, thanking the gentleman from Illinois for his courtesy, I will endeavor not to detain the committee much longer.

Availing myself of the privilege accorded me, I will here reply to what has been said about Georgia and the Indians. All that has been said concerning the treatment of the Cherokees by Georgia is utterly irrelevant. It has no more to do with this question than whether Queen Elizabeth was or was not engaged in the African slave-trade. Our fathers fought over this subject in Congress sixty years ago, and they indulged in crimination and recrimination, citing and reciting the statutes and the history of the different States and colonies, to show what had been the treatment in each of the Indian tribes located therein. That is altogether now a question of the past. I will only state Georgia in 1802 had ceded to the General Government the vast territory now constituting the States of Alabama and Mississippi. The cession was accompanied by the condition that the General Government would extinguish as speedily as possible the title of the Indians to lands within the State of Georgia. The General Government had long neglected to do this. Georgia insisted upon the performance of treaty obligations to her as a State. I to-day am insisting here on strict adherence by the General Government to its covenants with the Indians.

I was remarking when interrupted that the statutes of the United States have recognized the distinction as to the use of the products of the soil between the Indians generally and the five civilized tribes, because in the twenty-second volume of the Statutes at Large, page 590, it is provided that the income of other tribes from pasturage, &c., shall be covered into the Treasury; but the five civilized tribes are specially excepted.

Now, here are people holding these lands by the same sort of title by which any white man holds title to his land. Here they have made a contract by which this Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association comes into possession of this land, a contract made with full knowledge on the part of the Government, and with no objection raised at the time whatever. Here is this distinction, which has been recognized from the foundation of the Government, that the Indian has the right, even where he holds his land by the mere title of occupancy, to the unlimited use and disposition of the products of the soil.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that to step in now when the lease has been made under such circumstances, if you call it a lease—I say, strictly speaking, it is not a lease, but as I have remarked I care not for names; here is a contract which has been entered into—to step in now and say that this lease shall be void—what is it to do? It is to confiscate this land. The Cherokee Indian can not make use of it himself, and you say he shall not rent it out to the white man; you say he shall not have the profits from the pasturage of that land as a white man should. Why, sir, this is to confiscate the land; and when you do this, you hold out to him this inducement—that if he will consent to this Territorial government and give up the possession of this land under these circumstances, you will pay him a good price; and you call that free, full, and fair consent! You go with a bribe in one hand and with the instruments of coercion in the other, and you seek in this way to deprive these people of some six million acres of land. I say such a proceeding is unbecoming the character of a great Government in its dealings with a weak and helpless people.

Do you ask me (for that question has been asked) whether I do not believe that the Government of the United States has the power to abrogate these treaties? I recognize, of course, the fact that the Government can, by a law, repeal a treaty. That has been frequently decided. But I recognize it as equally true that the courts have always held, that while you may by law repeal a treaty, yet when, under a law or treaty, property rights have been acquired, you can not extinguish and destroy those property rights of Indians by a mere statute repealing a treaty.

When you address to me a question about the power to repeal a treaty, I say this is not a question of power; it is a question of right; it is a question which addresses itself to the judicial conscience of this House, whether you will exercise this power. Why, Mr. Chairman, are there to be no restraints on the exercise of power unless you can find such a restraint in a statute or decision? Are there no moral restraints on the exercise of power? Before I would break the covenants of this treaty (much as I would like to see those lands open to white settlement), I would say, let the Indian Territory stand a perpetual monument of our fidelity to our engagements.

But we are not obliged to do this. There is a way of escape in this matter—a wise way. Your committee which was appointed to investigate our relations with the Indians—a committee of which the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was chairman, has reported to this House a bill, under the operations of which a commission is to be appointed, not merely to treat with the five civilized tribes, but with the Indians generally, the negotiations looking to cutting down their reservations to such lands as they may need, and the opening of the other lands to white settlement. The gentleman from Indiana states in his report that, after his interviews with these Indians, he believes they are willing to surrender the lands now occupied by Indians in the western part of the Territory, that those Indians may be concentrated farther eastward, thus opening up the western lands to settlement.

Now, here is a scheme of negotiation which is open, which is fair, which is above-board. It is a scheme upon which the Indian himself is ready to enter. I am persuaded, from conversations that I have had with numbers of leading Indians during their visits to Washington, since my investigation of this subject, that they are ready and willing to enter into this negotiation. I had a talk on this subject only last week in my room with a leading Indian, whose expressions confirm me in these opinions. Here we have an opportunity, by the appointment of this commission, to carry out such a negotiation. I would say to my friend from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] you need not leave it voluntary; you can make it obligatory on the Government.

Mr. STRUBLE. That is the way it ought to be done, in my judgment.

Mr. BARNES. Let this commission go out there and enter into the negotiation. They will find the Indians willing to treat with them; and when a treaty has been made, when these lands have been surrendered under the terms of the treaty and without a breach of any former treaties, you will have abolished cattle syndicates, and you will have no more "monopoly" of this land; we shall hear no more of that cry; and when you have thus by legitimate means opened up a vast body of land to white settlement, you will have secured "homes for the homeless" in a manner consistent with the promotion of the public welfare and the maintenance of the national honor. [Loud applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] on this subject. I regret, however, to be compelled to say that except in the time I yielded to the gentleman he has scarcely referred to the bill before this committee.

The gentleman from Georgia has a high regard for the honor of the nation in reference to these Indian tribes. I am not surprised, sir, that the gentleman should have such tender feeling for the Cherokee Indians. If there is any gentleman on this floor who should stand up here and plead for the honor of the Government and the sacredness of treaties with the Cherokee Nation of Indians, that gentleman should be a Representative from the State of Georgia. These Indians, or the ancestors of the present Cherokees, formerly resided in the State of Georgia, and I regret to be compelled to reiterate the truth of history when I state they were driven from that State at the point of the bayonet. They were subjected to greater outrages by the gentleman's constituents, or rather the ancestors of his constituents, than have been perpetrated upon any other Indian tribe in this country.

Mr. BARNES rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield for a question, but not for a speech.

Mr. BARNES. It is an unfair mode of argument to make an attack on my State as the gentleman has done while in conclusion. I will say what he has said is not true according to history. He may hunt up any argument he pleases——

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not yield for a speech. The gentleman has said it is not true.

Mr. BARNES. I will say that what he has said is not true, and even if it were true it would show that I have improved upon my ancestry and he has degenerated from his. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very glad to hear the gentleman say he has improved on his ancestors; I would never have known it had he not said so himself.

The gentleman will find that on the Indian question, so far as my ancestors are concerned, the Indians were treated as one foe treats another. My ancestors, during the Indian occupancy, lived in what is now known as the blue-grass region of Kentucky—the land of Davy Crockett—where they met the Indians on the "dark and bloody ground," and vanquished them in many a hard-fought battle. But the ancestors of the gentleman's constituents sought only to repudiate treaty obligations, and finally declared the Indians outlaws, and would not allow them to testify in the courts of that State in suits in which a white man was a party; and they were hunted down as wild beasts and compelled to seek a home in the far West. And when they went to the West, so great were the outrages perpetrated upon them by the people of that State that they stipulated in the treaty of 1835 that the lands west of the Mississippi ceded to them should in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits of any State or Territory.

The cruel treatment to which they had been subjected in the gentleman's own State caused them to incorporate the provision to which he has appealed in their treaties.

But the gentleman has remarked that the provision was to the effect they should never be placed under any Territorial government. I will read the article. The fifth article of the treaty of 1835 provides:

That the United States hereby covenants and agrees that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall, in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits of any State or Territory.

That was the clause put into their treaty after they had been so outraged by the people of the State of Georgia. They wanted no more Territorial or State jurisdiction placed over them, without their consent.

Mr. CASWELL. Does the gentleman from Illinois intend to follow up this line of persecution? [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; we have departed from the precedent set by the gentleman's constituents in this regard. Hereafter we propose to treat them as human beings, and not to hunt them down as wild beasts. By this bill we invite them to the sacred council chamber, to the treaty-making and law-making power of the Government. This bill does not propose to interfere with any of the land in the territory owned by the five civilized tribes. They are no more included in this bill than any lands in the State of Georgia itself are included within its provisions, except in the establishment of courts, which is expressly enjoined upon us by existing treaties. And I regret the gentleman from Georgia should have founded the greater portion of his argument on the assumption that this bill does interfere with the lands of these five civilized tribes of Indians.

If language can be clearer than this I would like to know how it would be constructed. I read from the first section of the bill:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property or to impair any patent to lands now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory under the laws and treaties of the United States, or to include any territory occupied by any Indian tribe to which title has been conveyed by patent from the United States, without the consent of said tribe, or any territory which by treaty or agreement with any Indian tribe is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory; but all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries and constitute no part of the Territory of Oklahoma, until said tribes shall signify their assent to the President of the United States to be included in the said Territory of Oklahoma, except for judicial purposes as provided herein, or to affect the authority of the Government of the United States to make any regulation or enact any law respecting such Indians, their lands, property, or other rights, which it would have been competent to make or enact if this act had never passed.

So that all that portion of the speech of the gentleman from Georgia relating to treaty obligations with the five civilized tribes has no more to do with this bill than it has to do with the Indians on the Blackfeet reservation in the Territory of Montana. They are by the very terms of the bill excluded from every one of its provisions.

What does the bill provide? It provides for opening up the lands beyond those owned by the five civilized tribes, or, more clearly speaking, that portion of the Territory west of the tribes known as the five civilized tribes. How does it propose to deal with them? There is a commission provided in the bill in its eighth section, which is to be appointed by the President of the United States, and which commission is to treat with the Indians prior to any interference with or any change of existing contracts with them. So that, outside of the civilized tribes and outside of the lands which have been ceded to them, this bill will not allow any white man to enter upon a foot of territory included in the provisions of the bill, until the Indian tribe affected by it, or the tribes, if more than one, shall have first signified their assent thereto.

Mr. HERMANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. In the event of the passage of this bill by the House, and the Indian tribes fail to give it effect by withholding their assent, does it not apply exclusively, so far as the public land is concerned, to the strip known as "No Man's Land," which has but few Indians upon it?

Mr. SPRINGER. It will take effect upon the strip of land to which the gentleman refers, which is that portion of land secured from the State of Texas and on which there are no Indians.

Mr. HERMANN. Embracing some three and a half millions of acres.

Mr. SPRINGER. Embracing some three and a half millions of acres only; or to be perfectly exact, 3,672,640 acres. It can only affect that portion without the consent of the Indian tribes.

Mr. LORE. What is the population of that strip?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will come to that after a while.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour for the consideration of bills has expired.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7217) had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. SPRINGER. Would it be in order to ask unanimous consent at this time to be permitted to conclude my remarks upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to go into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SPRINGER. It can be done in the House or in committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. How long does the gentleman want?

Mr. ROGERS. He gave ten minutes of his time to the gentleman from Georgia, and he ought to have that at least.

Mr. HOLMAN. This does not extend the right to consider the bill.

The SPEAKER. It only extends the time to permit the gentleman to conclude his remarks, and the bill will afterwards take its place upon the Calendar as unfinished business.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman is to complete his hour, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding. Is there objection? There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire that there may be no misapprehension as to what this bill does provide. The first section defines the boundaries and excludes expressly the five civilized tribes; the second provides for the Territorial government, and the third provides that all laws of the United States, not in conflict, shall be applied to this Territory. In order that there may be no doubt as to the meaning of this section, or as to the intention of the bill to guard the rights of the Indians, there is a provision in this section as follows:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to interfere with the local governments of any of the Indian tribes which may now be provided for by the laws and treaties of the United States, &c.

There is a most careful and unequivocal guarding of the rights of the Indians all through the bill.

There are also provisions for opening up the lands known as Oklahoma proper and the Cherokee strip to settlement. A commission is provided by section 8 to treat with the Indians and obtain their consent before any of these lands are opened up to settlement by white people.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Is it not also provided that this act is not to go into effect until the President of the United States shall have issued a proclamation to that effect?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; I am coming to that after awhile. Until the President shall have issued a proclamation, and declared the lands open for settlement as provided in the bill, there can be no legal residents of the proposed Territory. It is unlawful for white men to go there now and take possession of the lands.

The bill provides that the lands in the region known as "No Man's Land" shall be taken under the provisions of the homestead laws only. Indian lands are also to be taken under that law, except that the actual settler shall pay $1.25 per acre, in quantities not to exceed 160 acres, in square form, to each settler. All persons who are heads of families, or twenty-one years of age, and who are citizens of the United States, or who have declared their intention to become such, shall be entitled to become actual settlers on such lands by paying the price required. An actual account shall be kept by the Secretary of the Interior of the money received as proceeds of the sales of such lands.

The amounts so received, less the cost of sale and the amount already paid to the Indians therefor, shall be placed to the credit of such tribes on the books of the Treasury.

It must be remembered that the Indian lands embraced in the provisions of this bill have not been occupied by any Indian tribes for more than twenty years; that the lands known as Oklahoma proper, nearly two million acres in the center of the Indian Territory, have already been purchased and paid for by the United States, with the declared purpose to settle friendly Indians thereon. The lands known as the Cherokee strip have been conditionally purchased for a like purpose. The United States may now without further legislation settle friendly Indians upon those lands. The lands in Oklahoma proper have already been paid for, and the title has vested absolutely in the United States. The Cherokee strip may be settled with friendly Indians by paying 49 cents an acre to the Cherokee tribe. But in view of the fact that there are no friendly Indians who can be settled on such lands, this bill provides for their settlement, with the consent of the Indians from whom we purchased, by white people, by paying the Indians the full Government price of $1.25 per acre. No Indians are to be removed from their present possessions; no lands occupied by them are to be taken, but wild unoccupied lands are to be opened to settlement by actual bona fide settlers under the provisions of the homestead laws of the United States.

The tenth section of the bill abrogates the leases which have been made by the Cherokee tribes to the cattle companies, and the eleventh section of the bill forfeits all land grants made heretofore to railroads in that Territory outside of the right of way. The twelfth section prohibits subsidies being granted hereafter by the Territory to be occupied. This concludes the provisions of the bill.

Now, as to the manner of dealing with these people. It is conceded that the Government acquired that portion of the Indian lands known as Oklahoma proper, embracing 1,887,800 acres, for the purpose of settling friendly Indians thereon. We paid under that treaty, I believe, only 25 cents an acre for the land, and obtained a deed in fee-simple to the property.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Thirty cents an acre.

Mr. SPRINGER. Thirty cents an acre. In view of the fact that the Government desires to change its purpose in regard to this land and settle upon it white men instead of Indians, the whole subject of title is opened up and the Government offers to pay the Indians the regular price, $1.25 per acre, provided they consent to let white men settle upon these lands instead of friendly Indians. The whole question rests, therefore, upon the consent of the tribes having this interest in the lands. If they do not agree to it the bill does not affect the legal status of the land, and it will continue to be reserved for settlement thereon of friendly Indians.

So with the Cherokee strip, which embraces a larger area of land, namely, 6,022,855 acres, it is provided that before any settlement shall be made upon the land this commission shall treat with the Cherokee Indians to secure from them their consent to the settlement of white men upon it instead of friendly Indians, as was contemplated in the original contract of purchase.

We have not yet completed the purchase of all the Cherokee strip. Only a portion of it has been included within the terms of our purchase. We agreed to pay nearly 50 cents an acre for it to settle friendly Indians thereon, but if this bill passes and the Indians consent, they will receive the full price of $1.25 per acre for the lands, and white men will be permitted to settle upon them. The remainder of the lands covered by the bill are in what is known as "No Man's Land," a strip of territory which has never belonged to the Indians, but which was acquired by the Government from the State of Texas. The three areas of land embraced in the provisions of this bill aggregate 11,583,295 acres, larger in extent than the States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Jersey. The lands are generally rich and suitable for agriculture, and will furnish homes and farms for more than half a million people.

Mr. HERMANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I wish to ask him a question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HERMANN. Have not the purposes been subserved for which "No Man's Land" was to be included within the limits of the Territorial government? That is to say, has not that "No Man's Land" by the recent action of this House been embraced within the land district as well as within the judicial district of the State of Kansas; and in that way have not all the purposes intended to be attained by embracing it in the Territorial form of government been subserved?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That does not interfere in any way with our bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill to which the gentleman from Oregon refers has passed the House, but has not passed the Senate. There is no legislation on the subject at this time.

Mr. HOLMAN. That bill proposes, I think, to extend the laws of the State of Kansas over that strip.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But that does not affect this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill to which the gentleman refers may never pass. There is urgent necessity for some legislation on the subject. There are a great many people going in there now and settling in what is called "No Man's Land," and I trust they will be allowed to organize a government which in time will extend to other portions of the territory.

Mr. HERMANN. What is the necessity for establishing a Territorial government over that strip of land?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The bill that has been referred to does not extend the laws of the State of Kansas over "No Man's Land," but the laws of the United States. The strip is simply annexed to the State of Kansas for judicial purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Public Land strip embraces 3,672,000 acres of land, an area nearly as large as the States of Rhode Island and Connecticut. It has never been organized under any government, and has been for years the refuge of criminals of all kinds. It is time, therefore, that something should be done, and I hope that something will now be done, to establish law and order in it, by including it within the provisions of this bill. If this bill should pass about 11,000,000 acres will be opened up for settlement, of which all except about 3,500,000 acres will depend upon the consent which the Indians are to give to that settlement.

Mr. HERMANN. And in the event of the failure of the Indians to consent to the provisions of this bill, will not that narrow strip be an exclusive territory within itself?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes; it ought to be. It is larger than the State of Connecticut.

Mr. HERMANN. And without inhabitants.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It will not have a Territorial Legislature unless the President sees fit to give it.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Oregon seems to be very much concerned about what is known as "No Man's Land." But I fear that his concern is not about that strip. The concern of himself and the other gentlemen opposing this bill is not about that strip. Their concern is as to the Cherokee strip and the Oklahoma lands which are provided for in this bill. Now, what is the position of those lands at this time? The Cherokee lands are held by a lease executed by the Cherokee Nation to the Cherokee Live Stock-Association, for which lease that association pays the Indians an annual rental of $100,000, and then sublets the lands to stock corporations at an annual rental of about $500,000. Thus the cattle company has an annual net income of $400,000 upon these Indian lands, a profit which accrues to a corporation which has no assets except this lease.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not the Cherokee outlet west of the Arkansas River stand, as to title and all other conditions, on exactly the same foundation as the balance of the Cherokee lands, and do not the treaty stipulations apply to the outlet exactly as they apply to the balance of the lands?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. They do not apply in the same way, Mr. Chairman, because the Indians have sold a portion of those lands and received $300,000 in part payment.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I will not be diverted from my argument. So far as this bill is concerned I do not care what the title to the Cherokee strip is now. It does not make any difference. That land can never be diverted to the purposes contemplated by this bill without the consent of the tribe; and if they consent to making a new treaty that will meet the purposes of the bill. Therefore, it is going beyond the matter now pending to consider what are their rights under the existing contracts or treaties. A new contract or treaty is to be made under the provisions of this bill. Nothing can be done without the consent of the Indian tribe, the same consent which made the first treaty, the second treaty, and the last treaty, and which is the only consent that can make the transaction valid.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Has not the whole 6,000,000 acres been appraised and the price fixed, and do not the Indians hold that there has been more than $300,000 paid upon it?

Mr. HOLMAN. East of the Arkansas River.

Mr. SPRINGER. There have been pending negotiations, agreements, treaties, and acts of Congress for many years with regard to this Cherokee strip, but whatever may be the existing status, that status is not to be changed by this bill without the consent of the tribe. If the tribe consents to make a new treaty with this commission, I contend it has a right to do so. Gentlemen who are opposing this bill take the position that the tribe shall not abrogate the old treaty with the United States or make a new one. That is the only question involved.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Suppose this bill should be passed and become a law, who would be the citizens of the Territory upon whom it would take effect?

Mr. SPRINGER. Everybody knows—I presume the gentleman from Michigan knows it well, and did not ask for this information—that no white man can lawfully reside in the Indian Territory at the present time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I understand that.

Mr. SPRINGER. There are none there now, lawfully; there never can be any unless we can make a treaty which will permit those lands to be opened up to settlement. It is for that reason this bill is reported. The proposed Territorial government will be in abeyance except as to the strip called "No Man's Land" until we can get the consent of the Indians to the occupancy of the other portions of the Territory by white men.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman holds that there are in fact no white residents on the Cherokee strip at the present time?

Mr. SPRINGER. There can not be legally; there are some "cowboys" there now.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would it not be best to appoint a commission first, and then organize the Territory afterward?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am coming to that point; I am glad the gentleman has made the suggestion.

What is the obstacle now to the passage of this bill? It is the lease of the Cherokee strip by the Cherokee Nation to a cattle company—the largest land lease ever put on record in this country, covering an area of over 6,000,000 acres, as large as the States of Rhode Island and Massachusetts. That is the extent of the lease to the Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association.

Now, I want to call attention to this lease, which this bill abrogates—declares null and void. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] holds that we have no right to abrogate that lease. I ask the House to understand that unless we abrogate that lease we can never make another treaty with those Indians. The Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association pays the Indians $100,000 a year under that lease, and sublets it for $500,000, making a margin of $400,000 annually. This constitutes a fund with which the cattle company may corrupt the Indian tribes and send a lobby here to Washington to oppose this bill. We can never get a new agreement from those Indians until this lease is stricken down by an act of Congress and declared to be null and void. The gentleman from Georgia maintains the validity of this lease against the opinion of two Attorneys-General of the United States, and against the distinct provisions of three acts of Congress, which declare that where leases shall be made by any of the Indian tribes of their lands without the consent of Congress such leases shall be void.

Mr. STRUBLE. The lease is also in violation of express treaty stipulations between the Government and these Indians.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; it is not only in conflict with acts of Congress but in violation of existing treaty stipulations with these Indians themselves. This lease has been made, and it is now insisted that the Indians have the right to lease these lands to cattle syndicates and prohibit the United States from opening that country to settlement by white citizens.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman recognize the mere right of occupancy on the part of the Indians in this Cherokee land strip?

Mr. SPRINGER. No, sir; there is no right of occupancy.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then the gentleman is consistent. If they have no right of occupancy of course they can not confer any; but if their right of occupancy be conceded, they can confer a grazing right, such as that lease provides for.

Mr. SPRINGER. Attorney-General Devens decided—his opinion will be found in one of the volumes of the Opinions of the Attorneys-General—that the Cherokee Nation had no right to settle one of their own tribe upon this Cherokee strip.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think it is conceded that they have no right to settle any tribe permanently upon it, but a mere right of occupancy—a right of grazing or pasturage—presents a different question.

Mr. SPRINGER. Attorney-General Garland, in an opinion delivered July 21, 1885, decided that this very lease, among others, was void; and he cites the acts of Congress to show that the Indians had no right to make it.

My friend from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] says that opinion is obiter dictum. Then, sir, every opinion of an Attorney-General is obiter dictum. It is not an opinion given in any case at law, and is in the nature of what would be called, in judicial parlance, obiter dictum. Yet, it is the opinion of the highest law officer of this Government, and that opinion was given in a disinterested and impartial manner, after a careful review of the law, for the guidance of the Secretary of the Interior upon this very question.

It is the alleged sacredness of this cattle lease which is interfering with the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma. It is the alleged right of "cattle kings" to occupy Indian lands as against the rights of white settlers—that is, preventing the passage of this bill. That cattle syndicate, as I have remarked, has a margin of $400,000, which it is annually realizing from these Indian lands and annually appropriating to itself as the price for which it sublets them. That company has no assets except this naked lease. Shall we concede that this lease is higher than the authority of Congress; that we have no power to abrogate it when it is made in express violation of an act of Congress? If we concede this, then we give over this land indefinitely to the "cattle kings" and to Indian tribes who can not occupy it legally. There has not been an Indian occupying any of the lands covered by this bill during the past twenty years. No occupancy by any Indian. The only occupancy is illegal occupancy under leases unlawfully obtained, and without any semblance of authority whatever.

Will we leave this territory in this condition indefinitely? That is the question presented to this House.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] calls attention to the bill of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], and says, let us proceed under that bill, and acquire the consent of these Indian tribes. Why, sir, as long as you proceed under that bill you will be confronted with the interests of the cattle syndicates, and those cattle syndicates will control every Indian tribe, and prevent any treaty being made with them which will interfere with these cattle leases.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under this bill would not the same trouble be confronted, except as to the provision of the bill which annuls the leases? If the gentleman desires simply to annul the leases why does he not bring in a bill for that purpose, instead of organizing a Territory over a region of country where there are no people and no lands surveyed.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill proposes to strike down these leases first. The gentleman proposes to let the leases stand, and to negotiate with the Indians with these leases still in existence. The pending bill proposes to strike down the leases, and then to negotiate with the Indians. That is what my friend from Georgia calls coercion.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a word right there?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can you not annul these leases without incurring the expense of a costly system of Territorial government over a small district of country unsurveyed and without population?

Mr. SPRINGER. Why does not the gentleman from Indiana put a provision in his bill to strike down these leases, if he is so anxious to strike them down?

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the gentleman anxious to strike them down? The bill I offered—prepared in the Interior Department—covered the whole Indian question—the whole 123,000,000 acres. It was not intended for any such purpose as to regulate a single local interest.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have studied the gentleman's bill. It proposes, he says, to cover the whole Indian question. It leaves in existence, however, leases of six millions of Indian lands illegally executed and now unlawfully in operation for the benefit of cattle syndicates.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a word?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are millions of acres of land beyond those six millions occupied by cattle-men under contracts with Indian tribes. You will find them up as far as the northeastern slope of the Cascade ranges. This is not the only instance of cattle kings on Indian lands.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has gone out among the Indian tribes during vacation on an investigating tour and has come back and tells us the cattle kings are now occupying the Indian lands everywhere. Will he not allow us to strike down these leases by which they are illegally occupying them?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not object to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the gentleman objects to this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am objecting that the gentleman is establishing, on the pretense of annulling these leases, an extravagant and expensive government where there are no people.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will not establish the government until the people go there. Let me assure the gentleman that in six months after these lands are opened up for settlement there will be at least a hundred thousand people settled upon them. The authority to establish a government must be given at the same time that settlement by white people is authorized. Is it because there can never be any people there that the gentleman allows these cattle kings to occupy these lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. That is not open to settlement.

Mr. PAYSON. As the Attorney-General has decided these leases are invalid because of the want of power on the part of the Indians to make them, I ask this question for information: Has any step been taken by the Interior Department on that opinion furnished by the Attorney-General?

Mr. SPRINGER. I believe not.

Mr. PAYSON. Why not?

Mr. SPRINGER. As far as the Cherokee strip is concerned?

Mr. PAYSON. Has this committee taken steps to inquire why the Interior Department, after calling for the opinion of the Attorney-General, and he has given it as the law officer of the Government, that these Indians had no power to make leases, and therefore they are void—has this committee taken any steps to inquire why this administration has not acted as to these cattle leases? I would be glad to be advised.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not give the gentleman the information he requires; I have not asked Mr. Lamar the reason why he has not acted upon the opinion of the Attorney-General. The President did act upon it so far as the Cheyenne and the Arapaho reservation was concerned.

Mr. MORRISON. Why does not the gentleman offer a resolution making the inquiry?

Mr. ROGERS. The inquiry made by the Secretary of the Interior of the Attorney-General did not cover the Cherokee strip or any part of it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But the answer did.

Mr. ROGERS. But I am answering your question.

Mr. SPRINGER. My answer to the gentleman from Arkansas is that it did.

Mr. ROGERS. You are mistaken, then; that is all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I will read the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. ROGERS. No; read the inquiry addressed to him.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is the question that was presented by the Interior Department:

Whether there is any law empowering the Interior Department to authorize Indians to enter into contract with any parties for the lease of Indian lands for grazing purposes; and also whether the President or the Interior Department has any authority to make a lease for grazing purposes of any part of any Indian reservation, or whether the approval by the President or the Secretary of the Interior would render any such lease made by Indians with other parties lawful and valid?

These questions are propounded with reference to certain Indian reservations, namely:

1. The Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory west of the ninety-sixth degree of longitude, except such parts thereof as have heretofore been appropriated for and conveyed to friendly tribes of Indians.
2. The Cheyenne and Arapaho reservation in the Indian Territory.
3. The Kiowa and Comanche reservation in the Indian Territory.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Then the inquiry did cover it.

Mr. SPRINGER. It did.

Mr. HAMMOND. But you are reading from the opinion of the Attorney-General, not from the inquiry.

Mr. SPRINGER. But the opinion covered the question, and quotes it. I am reading now from the opinion of the Attorney-General who quotes the language of the Secretary of the Interior, which embraces all of these lands except that portion conveyed to the friendly tribes. The gentleman can find it here for himself. The opinion of the Attorney-General covers this very point. It embodies the inquiry, and the answer to the inquiry; and it was his opinion that the leases are illegal.

Mr. HOLMAN. What, then, is the purpose to be accomplished by the bill in reference to the leases? If the leases are void it requires but an exercise of the executive prerogative of the Government to remove these trespassing cattle kings from the land. That being true, no legislation is required.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me suggest to my friend from Illinois that he ought to state to the House that he is reading from a letter addressed by the Department of Justice to the Secretary of the Interior; and the part he has read is not in quotation marks, as giving the language of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SPRINGER. I repeat, I read from the letter of Attorney-General Garland, dated July 21, 1885, on this subject, and that letter set forth the question propounded to the Department of Justice by the Department of the Interior. The Attorney-General, in his letter, gives the quotation marks to this part of his letter; and I assume, therefore, that the Attorney-General quoted correctly from the language of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BARNES. If the gentleman will allow me, I think I can state the exact facts in a moment. The truth of the business is that the Secretary of the Interior does put the inquiry; but his letter was based upon a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs which accompanied the Secretary's letter; and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says the inquiry (based upon the facts which called forth the letter) did not apply to the lands owned by the five civilized tribes.

Mr. ROGERS. That is it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will print it in full in my remarks, so that any gentleman can examine it for himself who desires to do so. But I am amazed that the gentleman from Georgia ever disputed the fact that the leases were illegal. He assumed that the lease was a mere contract for grazing purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then that part of the bill is of no avail—that part which undertakes to annul the leases.

Mr. SPRINGER. It not only annuls them but it directs the President of the United States to issue a proclamation requiring the cattlemen to remove from the lands they now occupy.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is an expression on the part of Congress of its opinion or its views, based on the opinion of the Attorney-General.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, sir; it is an expression of an opinion on the part of Congress acting on the opinion of the Attorney-General, and giving force and effect to what the gentleman from Georgia calls an obiter dictum.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a further question in the line of the question propounded a few moments ago?

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. You insist that you do not concede the right of occupancy or right of possession in the Cherokees. I find by article 16 of the treaty of 1866 the following provision:

The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all of said country west of 96 degrees of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

When was this treaty stipulation of article XVI abrogated which deprived them of the right of possession?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will refer the gentleman to the opinion of Attorney-General Devens, volume 16, page 470, of Opinions of Attorneys-General, where he decided in a case in point that the Cherokee Nation had relinquished its right to settle one of its own tribes on these lands.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But your answer is not as broad as my question.

Mr. SPRINGER. I can not go over all the acts of Congress and all the contracts and treaty stipulations with regard to this matter. To do that would take four or five hours of anybody's time. It is a long history. I simply cover the whole ground by referring to the opinion of Attorney-General Devens, which was to the effect that the Cherokees had relinquished the right to occupy those lands by several agreements made with the Government.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does the gentleman claim that their right has been abrogated by any subsequent treaty stipulation or by any subsequent statute of the United States?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do; and it has been so held by the Department of Justice, in the opinion of Attorney-General Devens.

Mr. HAMMOND. What treaty and what statute?

Mr. SPRINGER. If the gentlemen will examine the opinion I have referred to they will find the whole subject fully discussed.

Mr. HAMMOND. You can not tell us, then, except by reference?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not the dates of those several acts before me, and there is not a member of the House that has them in his mind. Negotiations have been going on for thirty, or forty, or fifty years with these Indians, and the agreements, treaties, statutes, and stipulations would fill a large volume. It is utterly immaterial, so far as this bill is concerned, what is the present legal status of these lands, or what are the provisions of existing treaties. The bill proposes to make a new treaty, in a lawful manner, and with full consent of the Indians.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to consider this bill upon its merits and not upon any imaginary idea that we are violating any treaty stipulation. I would go as far as any gentleman on this floor in carrying out in good faith every treaty that has been made by this Government with the Indian tribes of this country. I would not violate any of those treaties. But I believe the whole policy of the Government in regard to the Indians has been wrong, and that we are now in a position, or ought to put ourselves in a position, to treat with them upon a different basis and with different objects. We should provide for treating with them so that they can hold their lands in severalty and not perpetuate the tribal relation, which is the sure foundation of the barbaric practices of the Indian tribes. We should abandon the tribal system. We should pass this bill and the bill authorizing the Indians to hold lands in severalty, and make them citizens and subject to the laws as white men are, so that they shall no longer be left in the condition in which they have been all along and are at the present time.

The only change that this bill makes with regard to the civilized tribes authorizes courts to be held in the Indian Territory. Authority to establish courts within that Territory is provided for by express treaty stipulations. Their establishment is recommended in the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Atkins, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1886. He says:

The time-honored maxim, "There is no wrong without a remedy," seems to have no application to the Indian Territory, and some remedy for this unsatisfactory, and I may add alarming, situation should be wisely considered and promptly applied by Congress. The immediate necessity for the establishment of a United States district court within the heart of the territory of the five civilized nations, at some convenient point accessible by railroad—say Muskogee or Fort Gibson—no longer admits of a doubt. It is the promptest remedy that can be applied to arrest the evils referred to. In this opinion I am sustained by the late Senatorial committee of which Hon. H. L. DAWES was chairman, which last year visited this Territory under a Senate resolution; and Judge Parker, eminent for his learning, efficiency, and patriotism, fully concurs as to the necessity for the immediate establishment of this court.

The treaties made with the civilized tribes in 1866 all contained provisions for the establishment of a United States court in the Territory, with such jurisdiction and organized in such manner as may be prescribed by law; and I understand that there is a general wish among the leading and more intelligent Indians themselves that Congress at once pass the necessary law for its establishment. Measures have been repeatedly introduced, in fact are now pending in Congress, for the establishment of such a court, and I trust that the suggestions made may be deemed worthy of consideration.

To such an extent has this uncertainty of jurisdiction and authority prevailed that the borders of these nations have become the refuge of thousands of evildoers who have fled from their homes in the States and made this region a Botany Bay. Murderers, horse-thieves, gamblers, and other violators of law have flocked thither by hundreds, and are there to-day, and in many instances in open defiance of the United States marshal. Another despicable class of persons have made this country a refuge to shield them and their property from the just claims of legal creditors. They obtain upon credit the property of citizens of adjoining States, and then secretly skip across the line into the Indian country, where they are secure from arrest and their property from judicial process.

This bill provides for the establishment of the courts so earnestly recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

It provides that criminals who have escaped into this Territory shall be extradited. It provides that the Territory shall no longer be what the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs say it has been, the refuge of thieves, cut-throats, and all sorts of outlaws. It provides that it shall be a place where the law shall be supreme, and where the rights of person and of property shall be protected by the laws and the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. HERMANN. Let me ask the gentleman whether the bill which is known as Mr. HOLMAN'S bill will not answer all the purposes which are sought to be accomplished by this one. And will it not be more honorable for this Congress first to negotiate with the Indians before attempting to give them an organized Territorial government?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have already covered that part of the argument, Mr. Speaker, but I will recur to it again. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES], and my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] seem to think it possible to make a treaty with these Indians while that cattle lease continues to exist. They never can do it. The existence of the cattle-syndicate leases will prevent any further treaty with the Indians, and my friend from Oregon and those who are co-operating with him will prevent in the future any settlement of Oklahoma lands as long as they allow them to be dominated by the cattle syndicates. It is a question to be determined now by the House whether those lands shall be held for the benefit of the white people of this country, or for the benefit of a large cattle syndicate which derives an enormous revenue from them.

Mr. HERMANN. If the leases are void, what has that to do with this question?

Mr. SPRINGER. But you have signed a minority report with the gentleman from Georgia and others which holds that the leases are valid. We want to settle that disputed question by passing this bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] a question touching the substance of this case. The gentleman says that this land is about the best in that part of the continent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have not said so, but it is the fact.

Mr. MCADOO. The land is very fertile, I understand, and the climate good. The gentleman wants to open that land for the benefit of all the people of the United States. Now is it not the fact that the land to be embraced in this new Territory of Oklahoma is to-day fringed with an organized band of "boomers," who, just as soon as this bill is passed, will step in, in advance of everybody else, and occupy these lands? In other words, will not the provisions of the bill inure to the benefit of the people who are right on the ground ready to step in, as against the citizens of the older portions of the country?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am very glad the gentleman has asked that question, because I presume some such notion as that, inspired by those who are opposing this bill, may have had its influence with the press. The gentleman from New Jersey, however, I am fully aware, asks the question for information. This bill provides that any one who, prior to the agreement with the Indians, and before the President opens this Territory for settlement, shall go into it without authority shall be incapable of acquiring lands in the Territory at all. This is a material fact; and when the lands are to be acquired the applicant must swear that he went into the Territory after the President's proclamation declaring the lands open for settlement.

Mr. MCADOO. Are not the people of whom I speak right alongside the Territory—not within it; and have they not organized to take advantage of this bill as soon as it is passed, by stepping in and taking possession of the lands?

Mr. SPRINGER. If they are now organized, they will have to wait some time before the provisions of this bill can be carried out. Of course, due notice will be given that the lands are to be opened for settlement, and everybody will have an equal chance. The gentleman's constituents will have ample opportunity to go from Jersey City to the borders of the Indian Territory, and be there ready to enter at the first moment the lands are opened for settlement.

Mr. PETERS. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] will permit me to say that all this idea about a "boomer" organization is erroneous, so far as its supposed magnitude is concerned. The men embraced in that organization to enter the Territory have never at any time numbered more than two or three hundred.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And there is no such organization there now.

Mr. SPRINGER. This apprehension that preference is to be given to anybody is altogether imaginary. This bill is one of the fairest to the Indians, to the white man, and to all concerned, that could possibly be framed. We have entered upon this subject with the greatest deliberation, and have scrupulously guarded in the provisions of the bill every right of Indian or white man. There is not a line of the bill under which any Indian in this country can be deprived of any right without his consent duly had in a legal and constitutional manner—the same manner in which Indians have consented to all the treaties heretofore made. I would oppose any bill which would interfere with any Indian lands without the consent of the Indians. All the operations of this bill are to proceed with their consent, fairly and legally given; and why my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] should oppose it I am at a loss to understand, unless it is because it will cost something to provide for a Territorial government in that new Territory when the white people go there. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. But the people are not there now; and I hope my friend from Illinois and others will consent to wait until there are some people there to be organized into a Territory and until there are some lands which they can occupy; because even this "No Man's Land" strip, as it is called, embracing three and one-half million acres, has no population, and the lands have not been surveyed. I had the pleasure of passing through that region of country a short time ago.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Indiana says that no man can go there, and that there are no people there now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not say no man could go there. I said the lands have not been surveyed, and there is no population.

Mr. SPRINGER. No population! There is a population on the Cherokee strip and in the Oklahoma region——

Mr. HOLMAN. I was not speaking of the Cherokee strip.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am.

Mr. HOLMAN. I was speaking of the strip over which your Territorial government is first to be organized. There are three and one-half million acres there that have not been surveyed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And that is the only territory that can be organized, to begin with, until the consent of the Indians can be obtained.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman says there is no population there now. There is a population there, and also on the Cherokee strip, consisting of employés of the "cattle kings," who have placed their barbed wire fences over all that region, who are occupying that country now, with hundreds and thousands of cattle, and who have built houses there in which the employés of the company live. The gentleman from Indiana, so far as I know, up to this time, has never raised his voice against the illegal occupation of this land. Before he opposes this bill I want him to incorporate in his bill a provision striking down these cattle leases, which do recognize the right of people to go there and herd cattle, but do not recognize the right of people to go there and found school-houses and churches, and rear children in a civilized country. [Applause.]

It is very well for gentlemen to hold up their hands in holy horror when we talk about expelling those "cattle kings" from that country. They are the only obstacle to the acquirement of these lands by the Government and their settlement by lawful means. As long as they are permitted to maintain their leases we can take no step toward reclaiming any part of that territory for bona fide settlers under our homestead laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point which my friend makes in the discussion of this bill is that those "cattle kings" are permitted to occupy that land, and to pay into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation some hundreds of thousands of dollars annually. Now, if that is really the object you had in mind, if that is the main object, why not bring before the House a bill, if necessary to annul those leases, directing the Secretary of the Interior to say the cattle on those lands shall be removed? But is not the annulling of those leases an unimportant and subordinate feature?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman calls it unimportant. I am surprised he should say it is unimportant. [Laughter and applause.] It is important to this cattle syndicate to get $400,000 a year on leases of Indian lands or the public domain——

Mr. HOLMAN. The unimportance about it is, so far as I know, that no one is objecting to it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Ah! [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman can incorporate it into this other bill if he thinks proper. I heard no one objecting to that feature except those who thought these lands should not be made productive. Now, if these lands can pay into the treasury of the Cherokee nation several hundred thousand dollars a year, is not that better than that they should remain idle and unproductive?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman has at last let the cat out of the bag. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. You mean let the cattle into the ranch. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes. The gentleman asks is it not better these lands should be held by the cattle-kings than to open them up with a view to white settlement?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman does not quote me at all.

Mr. SPRINGER. Ah! but I think I do.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, the gentleman does not quote me correctly.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARNES] said these leases are legal, and he maintained that position he said on constitutional and legal principles. Now the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] comes and defends them on the ground of utility. He says it is better for all concerned that cattle syndicates should occupy these lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; that we should not interfere with their productiveness until we acquire title to them.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is what the cattle-kings say.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that true?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is not true. Because these cattle syndicates have violated the law, because these Indian tribes have violated the law, that is no reason why Congress should sanction such violations of law. Nearly all our troubles with Indian tribes have grown out of difficulties which result from white men encroaching upon their lands. The practice results inevitably in bloodshed, in frauds upon the Indians, and in all manner of evils.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. SPRINGER. Not now. The gentleman from Indiana and the gentleman from Georgia are virtually pleading for the occupancy of these lands by the great cattle syndicates as against the right of actual settlers to occupy them. They are obstructing the acquisition of this territory for the use of white citizens—actual bona fide settlers. Their attention has been called for nearly two years to the existence of these cattle leases, and neither the gentleman from Indiana nor the gentleman from Georgia has taken occasion to condemn these unlawful leases of Indian land.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Georgia is present, and if he thinks it important to answer that, I do not.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is uneasy about this matter. I wish to call the attention of himself and his constituents to the fact that he was out in the Indian Territory—he was out where the Indians have their lands—and he admitted to-day that he discovered the cattle kings were leasing them all the way from the British possessions down to the Staked Plains.

Mr. HOLMAN. More or less, and occupying them without leases.

Mr. SPRINGER. More or less; probably more, but more or less; and notwithstanding that fact, and notwithstanding the further fact there is no gentleman on the floor better posted on Indian treaties and Indian rights than he is, and knowing, as he must know, that no Indian tribe has the right to make a lease of that kind, and that the Secretary of the Interior can not sanction such a lease, knowing the occupancy existed, why has he not raised his voice before this in an appeal to strike down all such leases, and in favor of prohibiting illegal and unauthorized occupation of Indian lands?

Now the bill provides for getting rid of a great obstacle in the way of white settlement. That obstacle is the claim of the Cherokees and other civilized tribes to the use and occupation of the Cherokee strip and their right to lease it. So long as they are permitted to lease it and to receive a large rental for it, as they are now doing, we can never make any treaty with them which looks to the settlement of the land by white people. Therefore, these gentlemen say it is best to allow the illegal occupation, to allow the illegal appropriation of Indian lands to stand in the way of the lawful acquisition of Indian title and the opening up of this territory to the settlement of white people. Nothing else interferes; it is the cattle kings who stand in the way of the settlement by white people.

The opposition to this bill inures to the benefit of a cattle company who by their lease pay the Indians $100,000 and sublet the lands for $500,000. It is that syndicate which has fought the bill from the time it was first introduced in Congress until this moment. It is through their agency that its passage has been obstructed at every step through the House. It is their purpose to defeat its passage at all hazards.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him one question just on this subject?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield for a question on this point only.

Mr. HOLMAN. In passing over the Yakama reservation, a very fertile region, I found that thousands of head of cattle were wandering over the rich valleys and on the hillsides, and on inquiring at the agency I was informed that the owners of the cattle pastured the land without any contract being made or any authority given, and without paying anything.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Where was that?

Mr. HOLMAN. On the Yakama reservation, on the eastern slope of the Cascade Range. As I say, I was told that these cattle were allowed to range and graze in there without any authority or lease whatever or without paying the Indian occupants of the reservation anything for the privilege, and that they had no power to remove them. My question therefore to the gentleman from Illinois is this: Would it not be better for the Indians there to realize—and they are a pretty well advanced class of Indians—ten or fifteen thousand dollars a year for the use of the pastures than to have them entirely unprotected, and the cattle kings occupying their lands without paying them a cent for the privilege? Do not the cattle kings occupy a large portion of the public domain?

The same is also true of the Jacko reservation. There were cattle in large numbers there. Nothing but the military forces could keep them off. Now I claim that these lands ought to be made valuable to the Indians until the lands are acquired under a bill which the Secretary of the Interior has approved and which is before the House. You can not, except by military force, keep the cattle off. They occupy the whole public domain without military force, and that being true, is it not better that these Indians during the pendency of this legislation should derive some value from their property and not leave it to be entirely taken up by the cattle kings without compensation?

Mr. SPRINGER. I did not yield for a speech.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I want to ask this question——

Mr. SPRINGER. I will yield the floor for a moment.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Does the gentleman from Indiana claim that it is better to allow these men to occupy that country in violation of law than to enforce the law? And if there is no way but by military force to keep the cattle off I will suggest to him that nothing but the military can keep the people off.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that ought to be done, myself.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Well, that is the first time the gentleman has stated his opinion clearly to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman want the cattle-men to have free and full possession without an equivalent; or does he want the country there entirely unprotected against the cattle rings? Is that what you want?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I will tell the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has only one minute of his time remaining.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I hope these interruptions will not be taken out of my time. I yielded ten minutes to the gentleman from Georgia but have been so constantly interrupted that I have not been able to proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. SPRINGER. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that Congress should do nothing that will sanction the right of the cattle syndicates to the occupancy of the Indian lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree with you there.

Mr. SPRINGER. That occupancy is exactly what we are trying to strike down by this legislation. But the gentleman says, why not allow it to be done; why not wink at it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman is certainly not undertaking to quote me now.

Mr. SPRINGER. I am stating the gentleman's position in my own language. I am simply trying to point out the gentleman's real position. He seems to think that no wrong can result to anybody by allowing the illegal occupancy of the Indian lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. I repeat, the gentleman is not quoting from me.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not desire to misrepresent the gentleman from Indiana. I understood him to say that the lands ought to be made valuable to the Indians until they are acquired under the bill which he has introduced. That is just what the cattle syndicates on the Cherokee strip maintain. They are willing to make the lands valuable to the Indians, provided they can make them more valuable to themselves. Suppose we pass the bill which the gentleman has introduced, and then stop and await the result. This generation will pass away before the Cherokee strip passes out of the possession of the Cherokee Live-Stock Association. If this will not be the result I have failed to comprehend his language.

I do not understand him as expressing any other opinion than that which I have stated, that is to give the cattle syndicates the right to occupy illegally the Indian lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; not my opinion.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then if that is not the gentleman's position he ought not to tolerate the abuses that are now being practiced. If he is opposed to the lease of the Cherokee strip to the cattle syndicates we ought to agree upon this legislation. If he desires them to occupy it we disagree, and that is all there is of it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. You have not told us yet why it is best to negotiate first and organize the government afterwards.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman asks, is it not best to negotiate first and organize afterwards? I say we can never negotiate with the Indians unless you put the machinery in motion which is to follow the negotiation, and strike down at the same time the cattle syndicates and their leases. We must do that or otherwise all our efforts will be in vain.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to print as a part of my remarks the opinion of Attorney-General Garland in full. It is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, July 21, 1885.

SIR: By your letter of the 8th instant, inclosing a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs of the 7th, the following questions are, at his suggestion, submitted to me with request for an opinion thereon:

"Whether there is any law empowering the Interior Department to authorize Indians to enter into contract with any parties for the lease of Indian lands for grazing purposes; and also whether the President or the Interior Department has any authority to make a lease for grazing purposes of any part of any Indian reservation, or whether the approval by the President or the Secretary of the Interior would render any such lease made by Indians with other parties lawful and valid."

These questions are propounded with reference to certain Indian reservations, namely:

1. The Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory west of ninety-sixth degree of longitude, except such parts thereof as have heretofore been appropriated for and conveyed to friendly tribes of Indians.
2. The Cheyenne and Arapaho reservation in the Indian Territory.
3. The Kiowa and Comanche reservation in the Indian Territory.

Our Government has ever claimed the right, and from a very early period its settled policy has been, to regulate and control the alienation or other disposition by Indians, and especially by Indian nations or tribes, of their lands. This policy was originally adopted in view of their peculiar character and habits, which rendered them incapable of sustaining any other relation with the whites than that of dependence and pupilage. There was no other way of dealing with them than that of keeping them separate, subordinate, and dependent, with a guardian care thrown around them for their protection. (3 Kent Com., 381; Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S., 517, where most of the cases on this subject are cited and discussed).

Thus in 1783 the Congress of the Confederation, by a proclamation, prohibited "all persons from making settlements on lands inhabited or claimed by Indians, without the limits or jurisdiction of any particular State, and from purchasing or receiving any gift or cession of such lands or claims, without the express authority and directions of the United States in Congress assembled," and declared "that every such purchase or settlement, gift or cession, not having the authority aforesaid, is null and void, and that no right or title will accrue in consequence of any such purchase, gift, cession, or settlement." By section 4 of the act of July 22, 1790, chapter 33, the Congress of the United States enacted "that no sale of lands made by any Indians, or any nation or tribe of Indians within the United States, shall be valid to any person or persons, or to any State, whether having the right of pre-emption to such lands or not, unless the same shall be made and duly executed at some public treaty, held under the authority of the United States." A similar provision was again enacted in section 8 of the act of March 1, 1793, chapter 19, which by its terms included any "purchase or grant of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indians or nation or tribe of Indians, within the bounds of the United States." The provision was further extended by section 12 of the act of May 19, 1796, chapter 30, so as to embrace any "purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto." As thus extended it was re-enacted by the act of March 3, 1799, chapter 46, section 12, and also by the act of March 30, 1802, chapter 30, section 12.

In the above legislation the provision in terms applied to purchases, grants, leases, &c., from individual Indians as well as from Indian tribes or nations; but by the twelfth section of the act of June 30, 1834, chapter 161, it was limited to such as emanate "from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians." And the provision of the act of 1834, just referred to, has been reproduced in section 2116, Revised Statutes, which is now in force.

The last-named section declares: "No purchase, grant, lease, or other conveyance of lands, or of any title or claim thereto, from any Indian nation or tribe of Indians, shall be of any validity in law or equity, unless the same be made by treaty or convention entered into pursuant to the Constitution."

This statutory provision is very general and comprehensive. Its operation does not depend upon the nature or extent of the title to the land which the tribe or nation may hold. Whether such title be a fee-simple, or a right of occupancy merely, is not material; in either case the statute applies. It is not, therefore, deemed necessary or important, in connection with the subject under consideration, to inquire into the particular right or title to the above-mentioned reservations held by the Indian tribes or nations respectively which claim them. Whatever the right or title may be, each of these tribes or nations is precluded, by the force and effect of the statute, from either alienating or leasing any part of its reservation, or imparting any interest or claim in and to the same, without the consent of the Government of the United States. A lease of the land for grazing purposes is as clearly within the statute as a lease for any other or for general purposes, and the duration of the term is immaterial.

One who enters with cattle or other live-stock upon an Indian reservation under a lease of that description, made in violation of the statute, is an intruder, and may be removed therefrom as such, notwithstanding his entry is with consent of the tribe. Such consent may exempt him from the penalty imposed by section 2117, Revised Statutes, for taking his stock there, but it can not validate the lease, or confer upon him any legal right whatsoever to remain upon the land; and to this extent and no further was the decision of Judge Brewer in United States vs. Hunter, 21 Fed. Rep., 615.

But the present inquiry in substance is (1) whether the Department of the Interior can authorize these Indians to make leases of their lands for grazing purposes, or whether the approval of such leases by the President or the Secretary of the Interior would make them lawful and valid; (2) whether the President or the Department of the Interior has authority to lease for such purposes any part of an Indian reservation.

I submit that the power of the Department to authorize such leases to be made, or that of the President or the Secretary to approve or to make the same, if it exists at all, must rest upon some law, and therefore be derived from either a treaty or statutory provision. I am not aware of any treaty provision, applicable to the particular reservations in question, that confers such powers. The Revised Statutes contain provisions regulating contracts or agreements with Indians, and prescribing how they shall be executed and approved (see section 2103); but those provisions do not include contracts of the character described in section 2116, hereinbefore mentioned. No general power appears to be conferred by statute upon either the President or Secretary, or any other officer of the Government to make, authorize, or approve leases of lands held by Indian tribes; and the absence of such power was doubtless one of the main considerations which led to the adoption of the act of February 19, 1875, chapter 90, "to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases." The act just cited is, moreover, significant as showing that, in the view of Congress, Indian tribes can not lease their reservations without the authority of some law of the United States.

In my opinion, therefore, each of the questions proposed in your letter should be answered in the negative, and I so answer them.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND, Attorney-General.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

I desire also to print a copy of the lease of the Cherokee strip to the cattle syndicate, taken from Senate Executive Document No. 17, Forty-eighth Congress, second session. It is as follows:

This indenture, made the 5th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1883, by and between Dennis W. Bushyhead, principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, for and on behalf of said Cherokee Nation, party of the first part, and E. M. Hewins, J. W. Hamilton, A. J. Day, S. Tuttle, M. H. Bennett, Ben. S. Miller, A. Drumm, E. W. Payne, and Charles H. Eldred, directors in trust for and on behalf of the Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the State of Kansas, for themselves, as directors in trust and assigns, parties of the second part—

Witnesseth, That the said party of the first part, for and in consideration of the rents, covenants, and agreements hereinafter mentioned, reserved, and contained on the part and on behalf of the party of the second part, and their successors in trust and assigns, to be well and faithfully kept and performed, doth, by authority of law in him vested as principal chief, by and through an act of the national council, which said is entitled "An act to amend an act to tax stock-grazing upon Cherokee lands west of the ninety-sixth meridian," approved in special session May 19, A. D. 1883, which said act is especially referred to and made part of these presents, does by these presents lease for grazing purposes only unto the aforesaid E. M. Hewing, J. W. Hamilton, A. J. Day, S. Tuttle, M. H. Bennett, Ben. S. Miller, A. Drumm, E. W. Payne, and Charles H. Eldred, directors in trust as aforesaid, their successors and assigns, parties of the second part, all and singular, the unoccupied lands of and belonging to the Cherokee Nation, being and lying west of the ninety-sixth "meridian" and west of the Arkansas River, not including any portion occupied, sold, and conveyed to the Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes, Missourias, Osages, and Kansas Indians, or the Salines, set apart to be leased separately under act of Congress approved August 7, A. D. 1882, as hereinafter set forth; the said portion herein leased for grazing purposes containing 6,000,000 acres, more or less, and lying east of the one hundredth meridian, and the said hereinbefore named parties of the second part, their successors and assigns, shall, for the purpose herein set forth, have and hold the above mentioned and described premises from and after the 1st day of October, 1883, for and during the term and period of five years thence next ensuing from said date, subject to the qualifications hereinafter provided for, and upon yielding and paying for the same the amounts of money as hereinafter provided for; and the said E. M. Hewins, J. W. Hamilton, A. J. Day, S. Tuttle, M. H. Bennett, Ben. S. Miller, A. Drumm, E. W. Payne, and Charles H. Eldred, directors in trust as aforesaid, hereby covenant and agree, on behalf of themselves as such directors in trust for said Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association, their successors in trust and assigns, and not otherwise, in consideration hereof, and of the leasing aforesaid, to pay, on the order of the principal chief aforesaid, into the treasury of the Cherokee Nation at Tahlequah, Ind. T., yearly, and for each and every one of said five years, the annual sum of $100,000 lawful money of the United States, the same to be paid in two equal semi-annual payments, to be made and so paid in advance, to wit: On the first day of October and the first day of April in each and every year during the said term. Provided always, and it is further covenanted and agreed between the said parties hereto, that if the said semi-annual payment in advance, or any part thereof, shall remain unpaid after the expiration of thirty days after the date the same becomes due as herein agreed to be paid; or if default shall be made in any of the covenants hereinbefore or hereinafter set forth, or as contained and required by the act of the national council approved May 19, A. D. 1883, as aforesaid, on the part and in behalf of the said parties of the second part, then and from thenceforth it may be lawful, and is agreed, that said principal chief, or his successors in office, may declare the lease to be forfeited and annulled, and the said party of the first part may enter into and resume possession of the premises herein leased.

And it is further agreed, in accordance with the act of said national council, that in case the lands hereinbefore described, or any part of them included in the terms of this lease, shall be disposed of under present existing laws, or laws hereinafter to be passed by the Congress of the United States, by the said Cherokee Nation, that on the party of the first part giving six months' notice thereof to the party of the second part, that then, and in that event, the terms and conditions of this lease and the lease thereof shall terminate on the expiration of the said six months from the date of said notice, to all or to any portion of said tract of unoccupied Cherokee land thus sold or disposed of, and the parties to whom said lands or any portion of them should then be disposed of or sold to may enter into and take possession of the same; but then, and in that event, the said party of the second part, their successors and assigns, shall not be chargeable with rent on the lands so sold, but shall be allowed a rebate on all subsequent payments made on account of this lease at the rate of 1⅛ cents per acre per annum on the lands so sold or disposed of.

Further, it shall be the privilege of said party of the second part, their successors or assigns, to erect on said lands such fences, corrals, and other improvements as may be necessary and proper and convenient for the carrying on of their business and for utilizing said lands for the purposes for which they are leased. And in case this lease shall be terminated as to all or any part of said lands by the disposal of the same as heretofore provided and set out, the said party of the second part shall have the right to remove all of said improvements, fences, and corrals, except such portions thereof as may be made from the timber or other property of the Cherokee Nation, or timber for which has been obtained from the aforesaid tract. It shall further be the privilege of said party of the second part, their successors and assigns, to cut from the territory herein leased such timber as may be necessary for the purpose of building the fences, corrals, and improvements hereinbefore authorized to be erected on said leased premises, and to cut from said lands such timber as may be necessary for firewood and fuel, but not otherwise, and to commit no waste thereon.

And the said party of the second part doth further covenent and agree with the said Dennis W. Bushyhead as aforesaid, and as parts and conditions of this lease or contract, well and truly and without deduction or delay, to make all payments as required in the foregoing, in the manner limited and prescribed; and in case of any failure as aforesaid, the said party of the second part agree that they will peaceably surrender the premises herein leased, and all improvements or erections thereon; and the said party of the second part, their successors and assigns, further agree and obligate themselves, and this is one of the conditions of this lease, to make no permanent improvements (the improvement the right to make which is hereinbefore granted, being considered temporary improvements) on the aforesaid premises or leased tract, and only such temporary improvements as are authorized by the act of the national council approved May 19, 1883, hereinbefore referred to; and on the expiration of the lease or its being declared forfeited by default in the payments, as hereinbefore provided, then, and in either event, all improvements, structures, or erections thereon shall be and become the property of the Cherokee Nation; and said nation shall have possession of the same, and all and singular of such erections and improvements shall absolutely revert to and become the property of the Cherokee Nation, party of the first part.

And the party of the second part further covenants and agrees with the said party of the first part, as one of the conditions of this lease, that they will cut no timber for removal from said lands, or take or remove any material or property being part of the premises so leased; or remove or ship material therefrom; and that they will use all due diligence to prevent the cutting or removing of any timber or other material therefrom; and that they will faithfully observe the intercourse laws of the United States; that they will obstruct no mail or stage line, and that they will not interfere with the salines, located or to be located, under the provisions of the act of Congress, before mentioned, approved August 7, 1882. And it is further agreed between the parties of the first part and the second part that the grounds excepted and reserved from, and not included in, the terms of this lease, necessary for the manufacture of salt at the said salines, may and shall not exceed in the aggregate for said salines, and all of them, 100,000 acres, with a right of way to and from said salines, such as may be required properly to work them; and the said party of the second part do hereby obligate themselves, for themselves as directors in trust aforesaid, their successors and assigns, well and truly to observe and faithfully execute all and singular of the foregoing agreements and covenants, which are declared to be part of the agreement, in consideration of which this lease is granted. And the said party of the first part, principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, in accordance with the act of the national council, as aforesaid, and on condition of the faithful payment of the sum of money, as hereinbefore stipulated, in the manner and with the conditions hereinbefore prescribed, and as the further condition that the said party of the second part will well and truly fulfill all of the conditions, covenants, and agreements herein set forth, doth hereby covenant and agree by these presents that the said E. M. Hewins, J. W. Hamilton, A. J. Day, S. Tuttle, M. H. Bennett, Ben. S. Miller, A. Drumm, E. W. Payne, and Charles H. Eldred, directors in trust for the Cherokee Strip Live-Stock Association, their successors in trust, and assigns, shall and may at all times during the said term, subject to the conditions as aforesaid, peaceably hold and enjoy all the privileges of lease on the said premises, free, clear, and harmless from any let or hindrance whatsoever, together with all the privileges and rights of said party of the first part, in reference to the same, according to law and treaty stipulation.

In testimony whereof the said party of the first part, the said D. W. Bushyhead, principal chief, has signed his name as such principal chief, and caused the seal of the Cherokee Nation to be affixed to these presents, and the said parties of the second part, the said E. M. Hewins, J. W. Hamilton, A. J. Day, S. Tuttle, M. H. Bennett, Ben. S. Miller, A. Drumm, and E. W. Payne, directors in trust, have caused these presents to be signed on their behalf by Charles H. Eldred, their true and lawful attorney in fact, evidence of his authority being attached to the lease retained by the party of the first part, and the said Charles H. Eldred, director in trust, signing himself.

Done in duplicate, at Muscogee, Indian Territory, this the 7th day of July, in the year of our Lord 1883.

The signatures are omitted. It was duly executed by the parties named in the lease, or by their attorneys in fact.

Under the leave to print which was given me by the House, I desire to place on record some of the incidents in the early history of the Cherokee Indians. Mrs. Helen Hunt Jackson, in her book entitled "A Century of Dishonor," recently published, gives an account of the treatment received by them previous to their settlement in what is now known as the Indian Territory. They occupied the country along the Tennessee River and the wilds of Georgia, Carolina, and Alabama, a country which is described by the historian as "the loveliest region east of the Mississippi River, beautiful and grand, with lofty mountains and rich valleys, fragrant with flowers and forests of magnolia and pine, filled with the singing of birds and the melody of streams, rich in fruits and nuts and wild grain; it was a country worth loving, worth fighting, worth dying for."

Numerous treaties were made with these Indians by which portions of their land were ceded, always attended with more or less difficulty, and concessions always made reluctantly. In 1816 they gave up all their land in South Carolina. Previous to that they had ceded from time to time large areas of their reservation. In 1817 an important treaty was concluded, making still further concessions of lands. A portion of the Cherokee Nation had moved away, with the President's permission, to Arkansas in 1809. The eighth clause of the treaty of 1817 provided that the United States would give every head of an Indian family residing on the east side of the Mississippi, when he wished to become a citizen, "a reservation of 640 acres of land, in which they will have a life estate, with reversion in fee-simple to their children." Detailing minutely each step in the process of divesting the Cherokees of their lands east of the Mississippi, Mrs. Jackson says:

What imagination could have foreseen that in less than twenty years the chiefs of this Cherokee Nation would be found piteously pleading to be allowed to remain undisturbed on these very lands? In the whole history of our Government's dealings with the Indian tribes there is no record so black as the record of its perfidy to this nation. There will come a time in the remote future when to the student of American history it will seem well-nigh incredible. From the beginning of the century they had been steadily advancing in civilization. As far back as 1800 they had begun in the manufacture of cotton cloth, and in 1820 there was scarcely a family in that part of the nation living east of the Mississippi but what understood the use of the card and spinning-wheel. Every family had its farm under cultivation.

The Territory was laid off into districts, with a council-house, a judge, and a marshal in each district. A national committee and council were the supreme authority in the nation. Schools were flourishing in all the villages. Printing-presses were at work. Their territory was larger than the three States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut combined. It embraced the northwestern part of Georgia, the northeast of Alabama, a corner of Tennessee and of North Carolina. They were enthusiastic in their efforts to establish and perfect their own system of jurisprudence. Missions of several sects were established in their country, and a large number of them had professed Christianity, and were living exemplary lives.

There is no instance in all history of a race of people passing in so short a space of time from the barbarous stage to the agricultural and civilized. And it was such a community as this that the State of Georgia, by one high-handed outrage, made outlaws, passing on the 19th of December, 1829, a law "to annul all laws and ordinances made by the Cherokee Nation of Indians;" declaring "all laws, ordinances, orders, and regulations of any kind whatever, made, passed, or enacted by the Cherokee Indians, either in general council or in any other way whatever, or by any authority whatever, null and void and of no effect, as if the same had never existed; also, that no Indian or descendant of any Indian residing within the Creek or Cherokee Nations of Indians shall be deemed a competent witness in any court of this State to which a white man may be a party."

What had so changed the attitude of Georgia to the Indians within her borders? Simply the fact that the Indians, finding themselves hemmed in on all sides by fast-thickening white settlements, had taken a firm stand that they would give up no more land. So long as they could cede and cede, and grant and grant tract after tract, and had millions of acres still left to cede and grant, the selfishness of white men took no alarm; but once consolidated into an empire, with fixed and inalienable boundaries, powerful, recognized, and determined, the Cherokee Nation would be a thorn in the flesh to her white neighbors. The doom of the Cherokees was sealed on the day when they declared, once for all, officially as a nation, that they would not sell another foot of land. This they did in an interesting and pathetic message to the United States Senate in 1822.

Georgia, through her governor and her delegates to Congress, had been persistingly demanding to have the Cherokees compelled to give up their lands. She insisted that the United States Government should fulfill a provision, made in an old compact of 1802, to extinguish the Indian titles within her limits as soon as it could be peaceably done. This she demanded should be done now, either peaceably or otherwise.

"We can not but view the design of those letters," says this message, "as an attempt bordering on a hostile disposition toward the Cherokee Nation to wrest from them by arbitrary means their just rights and liberties, the security of which is solemnly guaranteed to them by these United States. * * * We assert under the fullest authority that all the sentiments expressed in relation to the disposition and determination of the nation never to cede another foot of land are positively the production and voice of the nation. * * * There is not a spot out of the limits of any of the States or Territories thereof, and within the limits of the United States, that they would ever consent to inhabit, because they have unequivocally determined never again to pursue the chase as heretofore, or to engage in wars, unless by the common call of the Government to defend the common rights of the United States.

* * * * * * *

"The Cherokees have turned their attention to the pursuits of the civilized man; agriculture, manufactures, and the mechanic arts and education are all in successful operation in the nation at this time; and while the Cherokees are peacefully endeavoring to enjoy the blessings of civilization and Christianity on the soil of their rightful inheritance, and while the exertions and labors of various religious societies of these United States are successfully engaged in promulgating to them the words of truth and life from the sacred volume of Holy Writ, and under the patronage of the General Government, they are threatened with removal or extinction.

* * * * * * *

"We appeal to the magnanimity of the American Congress for justice and the protection of the rights and liberties and lives of the Cherokee people. We claim it from the United States by the strongest obligation which imposes it on them—by treaties; and we expect it from them under that memorable declaration, 'that all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.'"

The dignified and pathetic remonstrances of the Cherokee chiefs, their firm reiteration of their resolve not to part with their lands, were called by the angry Georgian governor "tricks of vulgar cunning" and "insults from the polluted lips of outcasts and vagabonds;" and he is not afraid, in an official letter to the Secretary of War, to openly threaten the President that, if he upholds the Indians in their rejection of the overtures for removal, the "consequences are inevitable," and that, in resisting the occupation of the Cherokee lands by the Georgians, he will be obliged to "make war upon, and shed the blood of brothers and friends."

Mrs. Jackson, after reciting the assurances given the Cherokees by Mr. Jefferson and by General Washington, who assured them that no State or person could purchase their lands unless at some public treaty held under the authority of the United States, and that the General Government would never consent to permit them to be defrauded in any way, says:

What could Cherokee men and women have thought when, only thirty years later, they found this United States Government upholding the State of Georgia in her monstrous pretensions of right to the whole of their country, and in her infamous cruelties of oppression toward them? when they found this United States Government sending its agents to seduce and bribe their chiefs to bargain away their country; even stooping to leave on the public records of official instructions to a commissioner such phrases as these: "Appeal to the chiefs and influential men—not together, but apart, at their own houses;" "make offers to them of extensive reservations in fee-simple, and other rewards, to obtain their acquiescence;" "the more careful you are to secure from even the chiefs the official character you bear, the better;" "enlarge on the advantage of their condition in the West: there the Government would protect them." This the Secretary of War called "moving on them in the line of their prejudices."

She then sets forth the report submitted to the War Department in 1825 by Thomas L. McKinney, in which he gave a glowing description of the Cherokee country and nation at that time, and shows the great resources of the country which they occupied, and describes the numerous and flourishing villages and the amount of manufacturing done, showing that cotton and woolen goods and blankets of various dimensions were manufactured by Cherokee hands and a large trade carried on between them and the white people surrounding them, showing the progress made in religion and education and the high state of civilization which the Cherokee Nation had attained.

The following extracts will show how they were encouraged in their efforts to improve their condition by the white people who were fast surrounding them. Mrs. Jackson says:

Never did mountaineers cling more desperately to their homes than did the Cherokees. The State of Georgia put the whole nation in duress, but still they chose to stay. Year by year high-handed oppressions increased and multiplied; military law reigned everywhere. Cherokee lands were surveyed and put up to be drawn by lottery; missionaries were arrested and sent to prison for preaching to Cherokees; Cherokees were sentenced to death by Georgia juries and hung by Georgia executioners. Appeal after appeal to the President and to Congress for protection produced only reiterated confessions of the Government's inability to protect them—reiterated proposals to them to accept a price for their country and move away. Nevertheless, they clung to it. A few hundreds went, but the body of the nation still protested and entreated. There is nothing in history more touching than the cries of this people to the Government of the United States to fulfill its promises to them.

Mrs. Jackson gives the following account of the case of a suit instituted by the Cherokee Nation against the State of Georgia:

As a last resort the Cherokees carried their case before the Supreme Court, and implored that body to restrain the State of Georgia from her unjust interference with their rights. The reports of the case of the Cherokee Nation vs. The State of Georgia fill a volume by themselves, and are of vital importance to the history of Indian affairs. The majority of the judges decided that an Indian tribe could not be considered as a foreign nation, and therefore could not bring the suit. Judge Thompson and Judge Story dissented from this opinion, and held that the Cherokee tribe did constitute a foreign nation and that the State of Georgia ought to be enjoined from execution of its unjust laws. The opinion of Chancellor Kent coincided with that of Judges Thompson and Story. Chancellor Kent gave it as his opinion that the cases in which the Supreme Court had jurisdiction would "reach and embrace every controversy that can arise between the Cherokees and the State of Georgia or its officers under the execution of the act of Georgia."

But all this did not help the Cherokees; neither did the fact of the manifest sympathy of the whole court with their wrongs. The technical legal decision had been rendered against them, and this delivered them over to the tender mercies of Georgia; no power in the land could help them. Fierce factions now began to be formed in the nation, one for and one against the surrender of their lands. Many were ready still to remain and suffer till death rather than give them up; but wiser counsels prevailed, and in the last days of the year 1835 a treaty was concluded with the United States by twenty of the Cherokee chiefs and headmen, who thereby, in behalf of their nation, relinquished all the lands claimed or possessed by them east of the Mississippi River.

So many outrages had been perpetrated by the white people upon the Cherokee Indians during their sojourn within the jurisdiction of the State of Georgia that the treaty of 1835 contained, among other things, the following provision in the fifth article, namely:

The United States hereby covenant and agree that the lands ceded to the Cherokee Nation in the foregoing article shall in no future time, without their consent, be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory.

In reference to the ratification of this treaty, Mrs. Jackson says:

Even after this treaty was made a great part of the nation refused to sanction it, saying that it did not represent their wish; they would never carry it out. Hundreds refused to receive any longer either money or supplies from the United States agents, lest they should be considered to have thereby committed themselves to the treaty. In 1837 General Wool wrote from the Cherokee country that the people "uniformly declare that they never made the treaty in question. So determined are they in their opposition that not one of all those who were present and voted in the council held but a day or two since at this place, however poor or destitute, would receive either rations or clothing from the United States, lest they might compromise themselves in regard to the treaty."

These same people, as well as those in the mountains of North Carolina, during the summer past preferred living on the roots and sap of trees rather than receive provisions from the United States. Thousands, I have been informed, had no other food for weeks. For two years, to the very last moment allowed them by the treaty, they clung to their lands, and at last were removed only by military force. In May, 1838, General Scott was ordered to go with a sufficient military force to compel the removal."

Thus were the Cherokees driven from their homes east of the Mississippi River, denying as they went that they had ever made a treaty relinquishing their lands, and refusing to depart except when driven by military force.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEMPHILL. Before that I ask unanimous consent to consider Senate amendments to a House bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULBERSON. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 36, noes 49.

So the House refused to adjourn.

BONDS OF EXECUTORS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the District of Columbia, the bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the laws relating to bonds of executors in the District of Columbia, and moved that the House concur in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following section:

"SEC. 2. That any will hereafter executed devising real estate in the District of Columbia from which it shall appear that it was the intention of the testator to devise property acquired after the execution of the will, shall be deemed taken and held to operate as a valid devise of all such property."

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HEMPHILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, before the regular order is proceeded with I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in connection with the discussion which has just taken place. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] saw fit in the opening of his speech to-day to bring in the name of the State of Georgia. What his object was I do not understand, but he has misrepresented that State, sir, and I feel that it is my right and my privilege to set forth correctly the record of my State on this subject. Therefore I now ask unanimous consent that in extending my remarks I be allowed to print a reply to him on that point.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. And, Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to print in the same connection the official record of the State of Georgia in reference to this matter.

There was no objection.

L. J. WORDEN.

Mr. FUNSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8760) for the relief of L. J. Worden, and that the same be put upon its passage.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the report.

The report was read.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman who has charge of this bill a question. Do I understand that this clerk-hire proposed to be allowed is for the last fiscal year?

Mr. FUNSTON. It is for the fiscal year 1883. It has been allowed for 1882.

Mr. RANDALL. It occurs to my mind, Mr. Speaker, that this is opening up a new class of claims, and I think that if it goes anywhere this claim ought to go upon the deficiency bill.

Mr. FUNSTON. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. RANDALL. Certainly.

Mr. FUNSTON. This man was allowed this extra hire for clerks for the fiscal year 1882. He then claimed it for 1883, 1884, and 1885. The Postmaster-General allowed it for 1884 and 1885, because there were funds still remaining from box-hire, &c., but he disallowed the claim for 1883, because there were no funds remaining for that year. Further than that, he could not make the allowance for 1883, because even if there had been funds for that year still remaining they had reverted to the Treasury, because two years had elapsed.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman's statement only shows that this is a deficiency. I do not mean to interpose an objection myself. I simply wish the House to understand that they are entering upon a new field of claims.

Mr. FUNSTON. But the Postmaster-General has allowed this for 1884 and 1885.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. REAGAN. I object.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let us have the regular order.

Mr. DUNN and Mr. HAMMOND moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. FUNSTON. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. But the motion to adjourn is not withdrawn. [Laughter].

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 24, noes 52.

So the House refused to adjourn.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. McMILLIN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business, which the Chair thinks is a bill in relation to the debt of the State of Georgia. [Laughter].

The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. I hope Georgia will have a chance.

Mr. HAMMOND. On that bill the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. RANNEY] has the floor for thirty minutes.

A MEMBER. The gentleman from Massachusetts is absent.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3) to prevent the claim of the war taxes under the act of August 5, 1861, and acts amendatory thereof, by the United States, as set-off against States having claims against the General Government.

Mr. LONG. I move that the House adjourn.

JAMES A. UNDERWOOD.

Mr. PETERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10400) to increase the pension of James A. Underwood; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NATHANIEL GRIGSBY.

Mr. PETERS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10401) granting a pension to Nathaniel Grigsby; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

The motion of Mr. LONG was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with concurrent resolution, adjourned until Tuesday, January 4, 1887.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of Frank Wheeler and others, of Concord, Mass., in aid of the Hatch experiment-station bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Thomas Crawford, for relief—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILSON: Petition of S. V. Niles, for an appropriation for the benefit of the Children's Home, District of Columbia—to the Committee on District of Columbia.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 4, 1887.

HENRY M. TELLER, a Senator from the State of Colorado, appeared in his seat to-day.

The Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D., offered the following prayer:

PRAYER.

To whom can we come but unto Thee, O Lord, our God, who livest and reignest forever, for wisdom, and counsel, and guidance, and comfort, and grace in our times of need? Thou crownest the year with Thy goodness; Thy paths drop fatness; Thy years have no end. Our life is only a vapor. Thou art reminding us continually of our mortality.

We seek comfort from on high for those who are bereft. Thou judge of the widow and father of the fatherless ones, we pray for the indwelling of Thy spirit, that we may be guided with right purposes, that we may be strengthened in every time of duty, that we may be succored from temptation, that in every time of need we may have God's help, living as we do under a consciousness of Thy nearness to us. Thou art the helper of Thy people in every time of need.

We pray that Thy blessing may abide upon these, Thy servants in their persons, in their families, in their official relations, and that we may be enabled so to live that when the end shall come we may have peace—the peace of God that passeth all understanding. Give unto us true contrition for sin; help us to depart from all evil, to keep conscience void of offense toward God and toward men, and so to live usefully here that we may finally enter into the rest where death can not come. We ask for all with forgiveness and grace. In the name of the Great Redeemer. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, December 22, 1886, was read and approved.

DEATH OF SENATOR LOGAN.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, "the angel of death has been abroad throughout the land." His visitation has been most unexpected during the recent brief recess of the Senate, and has imposed upon me a duty which I have scarcely the heart to perform—the duty of announcing the death of my late distinguished colleague. At his home, which overlooks this capital city, at 3 minutes before 3 o'clock on Sunday afternoon, the 26th of December, the spirit of JOHN A. LOGAN took its flight into the unknown realms of eternity. On Friday last the funeral ceremonies were conducted by the Senators and Representatives present, in this Senate Chamber, and his mortal remains were conveyed to the silent tomb.

We are called upon to mourn the loss of one of the bravest and noblest of men—a man loved by the patriotic people of his State and of the nation, known to his country and to the civilized world as great in war and in peace, and for nearly fourteen years a distinguished member of this Senate.

I shall not at this time, Mr. President, attempt to pronounce the words which are due to the memory of him who, for so many years, performed so important and conspicuous a part in the affairs of this Republic. At an early day I shall seek to introduce appropriate resolutions, and shall then speak as best I may be able of the character and public services of our late associate, when an opportunity will be given to honorable Senators to pay fitting tribute to his memory.

Mr. President, out of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator LOGAN, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to unanimously; and (at 12 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, January 5, 1887, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 4, 1887.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, December 22, 1886, was read and approved.

BOSTON LIGHT-HOUSE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting with inclosures a communication from the Light-house Board, recommending that certain disbursements of Maj. C. W. Raymond and Capt. A. H. Payson, United States Army, for new dwelling for light-house keeper at Boston light-house, Massachusetts, be authorized by act of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

MAJ. J. A. SMITH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting with inclosures a communication from the Light-house Board, recommending that certain expenditures by Maj. J. A. Smith, United States Army, for burial of the bodies of General O. E. Babcock and Mr. Levi P. Luckey, be authorized by act of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ISSUE AND REDEMPTION OF MINOR COINS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Director of the Mint, suggesting amendments to the Revised Statutes relative to the issue and redemption of minor coins; which was referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE LAND GRANTS, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting reports by the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claim, Cañon del Rio Colorado No. 93, and the claim known as the Estancia grant No. 70, New Mexico; which were severally referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

RESIGNATION OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication; which was read, and ordered to be laid on the table:

NEW YORK, December 30, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that I have this day forwarded to the governor my resignation as a Representative from the tenth Congressional district of the State of New York, to take effect on the 1st day of January, 1887.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ABRAM S. HEWITT.

Hon. JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BYNUM, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. BACON, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LOWRY, for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. PINDAR, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. KING, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. MITCHELL, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

PUBLIC BUILDING, FORT SCOTT, KANS.

The SPEAKER announced as the conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1386) for the completion of the public building at Fort Scott, Kans., Mr. DIBBLE, Mr. WALLACE, and Mr. WADE.

RICHARD H. AND JAMES PORTER.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1368) for the relief of Richard H. and James Porter, and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read subject to objection.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury pay to Richard H. Porter and James Porter the sum of $10,100, less the sum of $750 heretofore paid them, in full for all claims for damages or compensation for property impressed by order of Colonel Johnston, in command of United States troops en route for Utah in 1857.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the report in that case will be read.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Reserving the right to object.

The report (by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri) was read, as follows:

The committee have heretofore considered House bill 8168, which is the same in substance as Senate bill 1368, and have made favorable report on said bill (H. R. 8168) by report No. 2696.

The committee report back bill S. 1368 with recommendation that the same do pass.

Mr. HOLMAN. That report I think, Mr. Speaker, conveys no information to the House whatever as to this claim; and I trust the gentleman from Mississippi will make an explanation which will furnish the House with the facts, and especially why this claim has been allowed to remain in abeyance for twenty-seven or eight years without action.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Mississippi will be allowed to make a brief explanation.

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the report which has just been read, I hold in my hand another report from the Committee on Claims, and which was adopted by the committee, as shown by the report just read.

The bill provides payment for certain property taken by General Johnston, who commanded the Utah expedition in 1857. It was referred in 1861 to the Third Auditor, and by him reported favorably and payment asked. Thereupon the opinion of the Attorney-General, Hon. Edward Bates, was asked and he approved the claim, but the Secretary still hesitating, the claim was again referred to the Auditor and rereferred several times, and the report to which I refer contains a synopsis of the action taken with regard to the matter in the Department from time to time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust my friend from Mississippi will allow that report to be read for the information of the House.

Mr. VAN EATON. I have no objection whatever, although it is rather a lengthy report.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the report will be read.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I object.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 7879) to amend the law relating to bonds of executors in the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian Reservation.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for present consideration the bill (S. 149) forfeiting a part of certain lands granted to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of railroads in that State, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

Mr. STRUBLE. This bill has been twice read in the House. I ask that the reading at this time be dispensed with.

Mr. TAULBEE. I would like to hear the bill read.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WAKEFIELD. I object.

Mr. STRUBLE. I hope the gentleman will not object. Before this matter is disposed of——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has objected.

Mr. STRUBLE. I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement, and when that shall have been made perhaps the gentleman will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Iowa making a brief statement?

Mr. WAKEFIELD. I object.

Mr. STRUBLE. I am very sorry the gentleman from Minnesota should object to my making a brief statement, and hope he will withdraw his objection.

WILLIAM WRIGHT.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 137) for the relief of the estate of William Wright, and that the same be considered at this time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $800 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation to the estate of William Wright for rent of office-rooms at Pine Bluff, Ark., during the war of the rebellion.

The bill was reported by the Committee on War Claims with an amendment striking out in line 3 "$800," and inserting in lieu thereof "$653.33."

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SMALLS) was read, as follows:

William Wright was the owner of two rooms in Pine Bluff, Ark., on the 1st of November, 1863; the United States authorities took possession of said rooms and occupied them as a military telegraph office till the 22d of May, 1865. At the time they were taken possession of Mr. Wright had stored in said rooms personal property, consisting of beds, bedding, mattresses, tables, chairs, clothing, and a writing desk, to the amount of $150.

This claim was duly presented to the Third Auditor of the Treasury for payment November 29, 1865.

On May 23, 1865, a board of survey, in pursuance of a special order, met at Pine Bluff, Ark., and among other cases investigated the claim of William Wright, and made the following report thereon:

"The board having examined the rooms referred to in account, marked 'A,' inclosed with these papers, are of the opinion that the estate of William Wright is entitled to rent for the same from the 1st day of November, 1863, to the present date, eighteen months and twenty-two days, at the rate of $35 per month, amounting to $653.33."

The proof clearly shows that the rent of the rooms was worth more than the amount found by the board.

Your committee therefore recommend that the accompanying bill be amended by striking out the words "eight hundred dollars," and inserting the words "six hundred and fifty-three dollars and thirty-three cents," and the passage of the bill as amended.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole House was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, the amendment recommended by the Committee on War Claims was adopted, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WESLEY W. TAYLOR.

Mr. CANNON (by Mr. HITT), by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10402) for the relief of Wesley W. Taylor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

SPRING GROVE CEMETERY, CINCINNATI, OHIO.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 10403) to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase 10 acres of ground of the Spring Grove Cemetery Association of Cincinnati, Ohio, for enlarging the national cemetery in Spring Grove Cemetery, at Cincinnati, Ohio, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEATH OF SENATOR JOHN A. LOGAN.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the House has heard with great sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. John A. Logan, late a Senator of the United States from the State of Illinois.

The resolution was unanimously adopted.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased statesman, I move that the House do now adjourn, giving notice that on a later day I shall ask that the proceedings of the House be suspended in order that his colleagues and friends may bear testimony to his worth.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rules, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRAGG: Petition of citizens of Washington County, Wisconsin, praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 2933)—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CONGER: Resolutions of the Western Iowa Horticultural Society, indorsing and urging the early passage of the Hatch bill for the establishment of agricultural experiment stations—to the same committee.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 5, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of December 7, 1886, a report of the Chief of Engineers relative to certain river and harbor improvements in Oregon and Washington Territory; which, with the accompanying papers, was, on motion of Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, December 21, 1886.

The Secretary of War has the honor to transmit to the United States Senate a report of the 14th instant from the Chief of Engineers, and its accompanying papers, the same being furnished in response to the following resolution of the Senate of December 7, 1886:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to advise the Senate, at his earliest practicable convenience, as to what change or changes, if any, have been made in the United States engineers in charge of the construction of the canal and locks at the Cascades of the Columbia River since the 5th day of August last, and in charge of any of the river or harbor improvements in Oregon and Washington Territory since said date, and the date and character of any such change or changes, the names of the engineers relieved, changed, or transferred, and in what respect changed or transferred, and their rank respectively, and the reasons for such change or changes; also, in case any such change has been made, whether the engineer relieved had, prior to such change or transfer, submitted to the Chief of Engineers his project or plan for the expenditure of such appropriations, and whether or not the same had been approved or rejected by the Chief of Engineers, or acting chief of engineers, or War Department, prior to such change or transfer of engineers in charge; also, what change, if any, has been made in the plan of work or the manner of proposed expenditure of such appropriation since the date of such change of engineers; also, if such change of engineers was made, what works were in charge of such engineers respectively for the two years prior to such change; and further, what river or harbor works or improvements have such engineers been in charge of since the date of such change.

"Also, that the Secretary of War be further directed to report to the Senate further, at his earliest practicable convenience, whether it is true or otherwise that the work at the mouth of the Columbia, at the entrance to Yaquina Bay, and at Coos Bay, Oregon, has been postponed until next spring, and the reasons in detail for such postponement. And further, that he transmit to the Senate, with such reports, and as a part thereof, full copies of all correspondence, whether by letter or telegram, occurring between the War Department or any of its officers and any officer, board of trade, chamber of commerce, water-way convention, or person whomsoever, since August 5, 1886, relative to the expenditure of the appropriations above referred to, and each of them."

It will be seen from the inclosed report that Maj. W. A. Jones, Corps of Engineers, was relieved of the charge of the canal at the Cascades of the Columbia River, under date of October 6, 1886, and that Capt. C. F. Powell, Corps of Engineers, was placed in charge of that work, but that no other change has been made of officers in charge of any river and harbor works in Oregon or Washington Territory since August 5, 1886.

Attention is invited to the accompanying copy of a letter from Col. John G. Parke, the officer in charge of the office of the Chief of Engineers when the transfer of the above-mentioned officers was made. Upon full consideration of the reasons of the transfer, as submitted to me by Colonel Parke in a personal interview, I deemed it my duty to relieve Major Jones and to detail Captain Powell to do this work.

The report of the Chief of Engineers shows that no change has been made in the plan for construction of the work since the transfer of the officers, but that a change was made in the project for the expenditure of the funds appropriated by the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, as will appear from the accompanying projects of Major Jones and Captain Powell.

In reference to so much of the resolution as refers to the postponement of work at mouth of Columbia, at Yaquina Bay, and at Coos Bay, Capt. Charles F. Powell, Corps of Engineers, states with regard to the mouth of the Columbia River, that—

Under existing unavoidable circumstances the stone for the Columbia jetty must be unloaded from barges at the Fort Stevens wharf, where during the late fall and winter the cost and time of stone delivery are considerably more than during spring and summer. Moreover, the face of this wharf, the only one available, is bare at low tide, from a sand fill to a height of about 5 feet; one year ago the depth of water there was 15 feet at low tide. For present jetty work a wharf extension is necessary, which, if made, would shoal again by next spring. It would be almost a waste of money to go on with the jetty before spring. The main operation for this season now under way consists of developing quarry sites already explored and which can be reached by land, and if a sure stone supply is found, of building a railroad to the jetty.

At Yaquina Bay it may be said that the improvement in progress is the construction of a jetty on the south side of the entrance. In view of the possible increase of trade an extension of this project has been deemed important, so as to afford a greater depth of channel than at first intended. It was in consequence concluded, owing to the late date at which the appropriation act was passed, to take advantage of the remaining short season of work this year for obtaining the necessary information about currents and character of bottom to enable a conclusion as to the above extension and defer jetty work until early spring.

In reference to Coos Bay, Captain Powell's recommendation was to limit operations during the fall and winter to certain quarry work and to getting out piles from the United States land for a new jetty tramway, the building of which would require several weeks, and then throw the jetty into the season of storms and short days, and subject the tramway for a short period of work to damage by drift and seas; whereas, commencement of its construction next spring would give a full season's work without exposure and risk. The appropriation is about 20 per cent. of the estimate, and the method of work for its judicious application was matter for careful study and consideration in order to avoid risk.

WM. C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the United States Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of December 15, 1886, a report of the board of engineers for fortifications, &c., relative to the proposed bridge over the Arthur Kill, between New Jersey and Staten Island; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of December 16, 1886, a report of the Chief of Engineers as to the apportionment of the money appropriated by the river and harbor act for improving the Missouri River; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in reply to a resolution of December 13, 1886, a report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office relative to the withholding from sale coal and iron lands in Alabama; which, on motion of Mr. MORGAN, was referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land claim designated as the Estancia grant No. 70; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on private land claim Cañon del Rio Colorado, tract No. 93; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented the petition of Joseph R. Nichols, president, and other officers of the Women's Temperance Union of Indiana, praying for the passage of laws for the punishment of crimes against women; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, Ohio; resolutions and proceedings of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association of Cincinnati, Ohio; a resolution of the Board of Trade of Columbus, Ohio, and a memorial of business men of Massilon, Ohio, remonstrating against the passage of the bill to regulate interstate commerce; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the board of supervisors of Saint Croix County, Wisconsin, protesting against unlawful claim to lands by certain railroads under the acts granting lands to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VEST. I ask leave to present an amended petition of Edward C. Fiedler, of the city of New York, praying the Government of the United States of America to constrain the Government of Brazil to make compensation for the charter of the steamship Circassian. I ask that this petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that leave be granted to withdraw the original petition, this amendatory petition to take its place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the order of withdrawal will be made, and the petition now presented will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. VEST presented a petition of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Missouri, representing 10,000 members, praying for the passage of the bill (S. 1579) granting to the people of the District of Columbia the right to vote upon the question of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of the executive committee of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars, State of Maine, representing 20,000 members, praying for the favorable consideration of the bill (S. 1579) relating to the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the New York committee for the prevention and State regulation of vice, officially signed, praying that any extradition treaty with Great Britain which may be ratified by the Senate, in relation to the surrender of criminals, may include the crimes of rape and seduction, and make due provision for the suppression of the alleged international traffic in girls for immoral purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the petition of a large number of residents of what is known as "No Man's Land," setting forth that they are without the protection of law and asking that that strip, or so much of it as adjoins the State of Kansas, be annexed to that State.

I ask that the petition may be read. I am not quite certain as to what committee it should go, but in the absence of any request from a Senator on the subject, I suggest that it go to the Committee on Public Lands.

There being no objection, the petition was read, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

PETITION.

To the honorable Congress of the United States of America:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, residents of the public-land strip commonly called "No Man's Land," the same not belonging to any State or Territory, and hence without civil government or municipal law, respectfully petition your honorable body to take such legal steps as may be necessary to cause to be attached to the State of Kansas the aforesaid public-land strip, or so much thereof as borders on the State of Kansas, to the end that the settlers on these lands may enjoy more fully the benefits of law and order.

Further, your petitioners would respectfully represent that the territory embracing the aforesaid strip is about 34 miles wide, and lying between the State of Texas on the south and the States of Kansas and Colorado on the north, and about 170 miles long, extending from the one hundredth meridian on the east to the Territory of New Mexico on the west, an area of 5,712 square miles; that the same is being very rapidly settled, and is capable of sustaining, when properly cultivated, a population to the square mile equal to the average of the State of Kansas.

Mr. HOAR. I present the memorial of Stephen Salisbury, vice-president, John D. Washburne, recording secretary, Nathaniel Paine, treasurer, and E. M. Barton, librarian of the American Antiquarian Society.

The memorial represents that "there is a vast amount of manuscript material relating to American history in the public archives of Great Britain, Holland, France, Spain, and other European states, and in libraries and private collections in Europe, which has never been printed, and of which no index or calendar has ever been published." This material is of great value to our Government and to the State governments and scholars who desire to write our history. It is very difficult of access in foreign archives and libraries, and the memorialists request that an appropriation may be made, not exceeding $100,000, for the procuring of copies.

The memorial is accompanied by a letter from Francis Parkman, librarian of Harvard University, Charles Deane, vice-president of the Massachusetts Historical Society, Edward E. Hale, the famous scholar and writer, John Ward Dean, and a considerable number of other eminent scholars to the same effect.

I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Library.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE presented proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Mecklenburg County, Virginia, praying that an appropriation be made for the improvement of the Roanoke River, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. I present resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Pittsburgh, Pa., indorsing the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce. As the resolution is very brief I ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be printed in the RECORD and ordered to lie on the table.

The resolution is as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF PITTSBURGH,
Pittsburgh, Pa., January 3, 1887.

DEAR SIR: At a special meeting of the chamber held this day the following action was had, and I have been instructed to forward same to you.

"The committee on transportation and railroads of the chamber, to which the bill 'to regulate commerce,' now pending in Congress, had been referred, made report recommending the indorsement of the conference report (S. 1532). On motion the report of the committee was received and unanimously approved."

Respectfully, yours,

G. FOLLANSBEE, Superintendent.

Hon. SHELBY M. CULLOM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. CULLOM. I also present resolutions adopted by the convention of the boards of railroad commissioners of Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Minnesota, Missouri, and Kansas in relation to legislation to regulate interstate commerce. These resolutions are also brief, and I ask that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD and to lie on the table, as follows:

DES MOINES, IOWA, December 16, 1886.

DEAR SIR: By instruction of the convention of the boards of railroad commissioners of Iowa, Nebraska, Colorado, Dakota, Minnesota, Missouri, and Kansas, we herewith transmit a copy of a resolution adopted by said convention at its session in Des Moines, December 16, 1886.

"Resolved, That this convention of boards of railroad commissioners of the States of Iowa, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Colorado, and Minnesota, and the Territory of Dakota, while regretting the differences which have occurred between the true friends of interstate regulation, leading to the failure of the 'Cullom bill,' yet we rejoice to learn that the conference committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States have agreed upon a measure retaining the essential features of the Cullom bill.

"That it is the sense of this convention that the State railway commissions will not attain to the full measure of their usefulness till they are supplemented by a national commission, having control of interstate commerce, and that we regard any regulation of rates based upon a prorated scale of mileage as detrimental to the interests of our respective States and Territories."

Respectfully submitted.

PETER A. DEY, President.

They set forth some other matter, but not at great length, in the petition, and as it is a matter of pressing importance and will require action at the present session, I ask that the petition may be printed in the RECORD. It is signed by Hon. Philip Joseph, a prominent colored man, and many other prominent representatives of the colored race.

Out of order, accompanying the petition, I ask leave to introduce a bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The introduction of bills is not yet in order. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent to have the petition printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The petition is as follows:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, your petitioners, the Colored World's Fair Association, a body corporate under the general laws of the State of Alabama, having a capital stock of $20,000, would respectfully represent unto your honorable bodies that a colored world's exposition will be held in the city of Birmingham, Ala., commencing September 22, 1887, and closing about January 31, 1888, to commemorate and illustrate the progress of the colored race especially in America since emancipation, and inclusive of the race in all parts of the world, by a display of works of art, live-stock, field products, machinery, manufactures, and all other articles raised, fabricated, produced or owned by colored people; that the mayor and board of aldermen of Birmingham have pledged their co-operation and aid, and the General Assembly of Alabama and State Agricultural Society of Alabama have indorsed the said exposition, as will be seen by the resolutions herewith attached and made a part of this petition.

Wherefore, the premises considered, your petitioners would humbly pray your honorable bodies to take such favorable action as will tend to the success and furtherance of said fair association, and that you will show your appreciation of this beneficent enterprise in such substantial and public manner as in your wisdom and discretion you may deem most appropriate, both as to the character and amount of the assistance you may determine to give.

Petitioners suggest that some such aid be extended to said fair association as your honorable bodies by law authorized to be made to the World's Exposition in New Orleans in 1884–'85, and your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

At a regular meeting of the city council, Mayor Lane presiding, the following resolutions, introduced by Alderman Wheelock, were passed without a dissenting voice:

"Whereas the colored people of the South, and United States generally, being anxious to secure some permanent place for the holding of the 'World's Exposition,' for the purpose of exhibiting the works of art, agricultural and mechanical industries of their race; and

"Whereas in our opinion such exposition will greatly contribute to the elevation of their race by stimulating them to industry and refinement, and will also tend to draw closer the bonds between the white and colored races of our country:

"Be it resolved, That the mayor and aldermen of Birmingham do heartily indorse the 'world's exposition of the colored race,' and believe it worthy the aid and co-operation of citizens both South and North, and the world generally, and would recommend the city of Birmingham as the proper place of holding such exposition.

"Be it resolved, That the mayor and council of Birmingham render to the board of directors full co-operation to aid them in making their enterprise a success."

In the senate, Colonel Brewer, of Lowndes, introduced the following joint resolutions, which were adopted unanimously and ordered to the house forthwith without engrossment, namely:

"Whereas there will be a world's exposition held in the city of Birmingham, Ala., commencing September 22, 1887, and continuing four months, to commemorate and illustrate the progress of the colored race by a display of works of art, live-stock, field products, machinery, manufactures, and all other articles raised, fabricated, produced or owned by colored people, especially throughout the United States of America, and inclusive of the colored race in all parts of the world; and

"Whereas this exposition would materially contribute to the elevation and advancement of the colored race by stimulating their energies and arousing their self-reliance, and thus redound to the benefit of the whole country: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the General Assembly of Alabama, That the said world's exposition is commendable in its object and must attract to its support and countenance the earnest co-operation of all enlightened men; and that we most cordially approve of it as a movement in favor of our colored citizens.

"Resolved, That a copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State, with the request that the same be laid before the Federal Congress, and that such favorable action be urged in that body by our members as will tend to the success and furtherance of this interesting and important object."

The resolutions were referred to the judiciary committee in the house, reported back favorably by the committee, and passed the house without opposition.

The executive committee of the Agricultural Society of Alabama held a meeting in the reading rooms of the Exchange Hotel, Montgomery, and Mr. Anderson offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That the executive committee of the Agricultural Society of Alabama, views with pride the progress made in agriculture by the colored people of Alabama as evidenced in their desire to inaugurate a world's fair at Birmingham, Ala., in 1887, and that the State Society of Agriculture, through its executive committee, indorses the action of the Legislature in memorializing our Representatives in Congress to advocate national aid in their laudable undertaking."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I shall introduce the bill when that order of business is reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, if there be no objection.

A petition of colored citizens of Lancaster County, South Carolina, for an appropriation to aid in paying their passage to Liberia;

A memorial of Rev. A. A. Lewis, of Florida, praying for an appropriation of $100 per capita, to be expended under the direction of the American Colonization Society, for expenses of colored emigrants to Liberia;

A petition of colored citizens praying that Congress appropriate money to transport them to Liberia;

A petition of colored citizens of Whitfield County, State of Georgia, for an appropriation to pay the expenses of emigrants to Liberia;

A memorial of colored citizens of Buncombe County, North Carolina, asking for aid to enable them to emigrate to Liberia;

A memorial of colored citizens of North Carolina, asking for aid to enable them to emigrate to Liberia,

A petition of colored citizens of Grayson and other counties of Texas, for an appropriation to aid them to emigrate to Liberia; and

A petition of citizens of Manhattan, Kans., for an appropriation to aid colored citizens to emigrate to Liberia.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7507) for the relief of James M. Hagar, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims to report back the bill (S. 2840) for the relief of James W. Schaumburg, with an original bill as a substitute, and also a report recommending its passage.

The bill (S. 3051) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of James W. Schaumburg was read twice by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I will state that the bill (S. 2840) was reported favorably at the last session, and had its place on the Calendar, but on the day of final adjournment before the recess it was recommitted simply to correct a matter in regard to the recommendation. I ask unanimous consent that the original bill now reported may take the place on the Calendar which was occupied by the other bill before the recommittal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been recommitted, the Senator from Oregon asks that it take its place where it stood on the Calendar before recommittal. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MARY S. LOGAN.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, reported a bill (S. 3050) granting a pension to Mary S. Logan; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. If there is no objection I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill. I will state that it proposes to place Mrs. Logan upon the pension-roll, and to grant her the same pension that is granted to the widow of the late General Hancock and the widow of General Thomas—$2,000 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think we had better have it printed and let it come up regularly to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes on the Calendar.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania. I stated—the Senator did not hear me—that it was by the direction of the committee that I reported the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Still, in the face of an objection the bill must go on the Calendar.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read. I do not understand it. I understood from the explanation of the Senator from Pennsylvania that there were three or four cases in one measure.

Mr. FRYE and others. No.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length, subject to objection.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary S. Logan, widow of JOHN A. LOGAN, a major-general of United States volunteers in the late war for the Union, and to pay her a pension from the passage of this act, for and during her natural life, at the rate of $2,000 per annum.

Mr. BLAIR. The bill should be corrected in the initial letter "S." It should be "A." I ask unanimous consent that that amendment be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. COKE. Let the bill lie over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie over until to-morrow on objection.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FRYE introduced a bill (S. 3052) to extend the time for filing claims in the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the ascertainment of claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORRILL introduced a bill (S. 3056) extending the provisions of the franking privilege; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to have the bill read.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted &c., That from and after the passage of this act the historical publications and printed annual reports, or any part thereof, of any incorporated historical society shall, under the frank of the secretary of such society, to be written by himself, be carried in the mail free of postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may prescribe.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to the importance of this bill.

It is known to all that in almost every State there are one or more historical societies. They are supported without charge to the General Government or the State governments, merely by the annual fees of members of the societies. They publish from time to time a volume of historical collections, and they have therefore a very small amount of funds to pay for the distribution of these volumes, which are considered of great value as educational publications and for the diffusion of knowledge among men.

This would be no tax at all upon the General Government, and I hope the proposition will be treated with favor by the committee, as I am sure it would be treated with favor by the people throughout the country. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3057) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to examine and settle the accounts of certain States and the city of Baltimore growing out of moneys expended by said States and the city of Baltimore for military purposes during the war of 1812; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3072) granting a pension to James T. Hood; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 3073) to grant arrears of pension in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANDERSON. In behalf of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARRISON) who is absent, and at his request, I introduce a bill. The bill (S. 3074) granting an increase of pension to James L. Powner; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3080) to fix the amount of United States bonds to be required of national banks, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3081) to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Winfield, Geuda Springs and Southern Railroad Company, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BLAIR. A like bill was introduced in the last Congress. It was then proposed by this association to hold the exposition in the city of Chicago. Great encouragement from the citizens, railroads, and business men was given to hold it there; but circumstances have arisen which inclined them to hold the exposition more nearly among their own people, and they have selected Birmingham, in the State of Alabama. It is the original movement enlarged and invigorated. I move that the bill be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I submit a resolution, and ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to inform the Senate, as soon as practicable, the sums of money which were owing to the United States by the bond-subsidized Pacific railroad companies, respectively, on the 1st day of January, 1887, giving detail of all payments made on account of the same, and also the sums which are due, and to become due, principal and interest, under existing law, severally and collectively, from said companies, and what difference will result to the Treasury if Senate bill No. 1200 should become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey asks for the present consideration of the resolution. The Chair hears no objection, and the question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HOAR. It seems to me that if the resolution is to pass it should also be accompanied by a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to inform Congress of all existing questions in dispute, so far as known, between those roads and the Government.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I can not hear the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will please come to order. There is too much conversation in the Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. I move to amend the resolution by adding to it—

And a statement of all existing questions in dispute between said roads, or any of them, and the Government, so far as known to the Secretary.

Let those words be inserted in the proper place. I suppose the Senator from New Jersey will have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator will bear with me a moment he can very well see what his amendment would entail. I do not expect or desire the Secretary of the Treasury to enter into a discussion of the merits of any bill before Congress. My resolution simply asks for information from the head of the proper Department of the Government who can give the information, but only touching the debt statement.

Under the Thurman act the bonds of the subsidized railroads and the legislation touching them and the accounts which were to be rendered were to be made to and through the Treasury Department of the Government. I desire to have a statement made by the proper officer of the Government, and not by any paid attorney of the railroads. In saying this I make no accusation.

If I am correctly informed, and my information is largely verified by the investigation that I have been enabled to make, if the bill (S. 1200) should become a law we would be giving to the Pacific railroads more values as a contribution out of the Treasury of the United States than the entire value of all the landed property which we have been here for the past three or four years trying to get back on the forfeited land grants.

The Secretary of the Treasury can give that information, and as to the argument of which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks, I would just as soon hear that from him as from the Treasury, and I think the public would perhaps be as well advised. But the pure, simple statement of the account, and that as compared with what the Senate bill proposes to do, is all I ask to have done, which can be done promptly. As the Senator well knows this bill (S. 1200) stands at the head of the Calendar almost, and can be called up at any day. It is necessary that the information should be given promptly and at once, and without having attached to it any extraneous matter whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts offers for adoption an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the resolution the following words:

And a statement of all existing questions in dispute in regard to the amount of such debts between said roads, or any of them, and the Government, so far as known.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now, Mr. President, I want the Senate to distinctly understand what the effect of that amendment will be. It will be to deprive the Senate of the information asked for by my simple resolution in sufficient time to enable the Senate to have the benefit of that information if this bill is to be considered at the present session of Congress. If the Senator from Massachusetts will say to me that in this short session, of which we have now less than two months' time, with the multitude of questions pressing on the attention of the Senate of a public character, that he will not ask for the consideration of the Pacific Railroad bill (S. 1200), or any matters relative to that subject until the next session of Congress, but will agree to a resolution fixing a time, say on the first day of the next session of Congress, I will withdraw my resolution and obtain the information for myself at my convenience.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey has a sincere eye for the public good in his resolution; nobody doubts that; but I am exceedingly surprised at his proposition, for the arrangement he makes is a very unusual one. Whenever the Senate comes to deal with the subject, it is of course important that it should have before it in some authentic way exactly the information which the Senator asks. It has most of it before it in two or three different reports—reports of the Secretary of the Treasury and reports of the Railroad Commissioner—but it is entirely reasonable that the Senate should have in one place put by itself, as the Senator asks, a statement of the amount of debt of these roads and a statement of the opinion of the head of the Treasury Department what the effect of this particular bill would be. That is very clear, and I make no objection to it.

But it is equally true that if that statement of the amount of these debts depends upon the Secretary's opinion of certain disputed or doubtful questions, some of which are pending in the courts, and which make a difference of millions upon millions of dollars in the result, the fact that those questions are pending or are raised between the representatives of the Government and the representatives of the railroads should be also known to the Senate, so that it may judge of the questions and may determine them.

Now, the information which I propose to have is, I have no doubt, all in the report of the Railroad Commissioner, and can be extracted from that report; but it will be a little more convenient, as we have part of this information in one place, to have it all there together.

I will say to the Senator in regard to his suggestions that there may be a possible delay; that if I were to agree not to call up the bill until the next session it would only interest stock-jobbers and not legislators. Such a postponement I can not agree to; but I shall not call it up, as far as I am concerned, until this information is obtained.

Mr. McPHERSON. That is a concession for which I thank the Senator.

Mr. HOAR. If it should not come in within a reasonable time, I would consent to have the resolution divided, and have a call sent which could be answered promptly.

Mr. McPHERSON. I prefer to have a vote upon the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts now. Let me read the amendment as proposed by the Senator:

And a statement of all existing questions in dispute in regard to the amount of such debts between said roads, or any of them, and the Government, so far as known.

Why, Mr. President, this would require considerable time and a large clerical force to copy decisions. My resolution simply calls for a statement of the accounts of the debt between the Pacific railroads, and a comparison as to what the result will be under the operation of the Thurman bill and the proposed bill which is before the Senate. All I want is that statement. I want no argument from the Treasury Department touching the disputed questions. The country well knows, the Senate knows, what the questions in dispute are. If they do not they can readily learn. The effect of this amendment is simply to postpone action.

One word further. I do not charge the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. I think I know something about this little question and the state of the public records. I do not believe my amendment will postpone action or postpone the answer to the Senator's resolution five minutes.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator offer it as a separate proposition, if he please? Then it will not interfere in any way with my call.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be offered now as a separate proposition and voted upon with the other.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let us vote on the other proposition first.

I wish to say one word more before I take my seat. Many of the statements publicly made are misleading to the railroad companies, and intended to be misleading, and therefore I think that it is the duty of Congress to thoroughly understand this question. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, or any Senator, why it is that this so-called funding bill, which proposes to confer upon the stockholders and owners of the Pacific railroad property this vast benefit—for nobody doubts that it is a great benefit to them—is supposed to be necessary to secure the Government debt on these roads when their junior securities, coming after the Government debt, in the shape of bonds, are selling at 15 per cent. premium to-day? Those who hold junior securities to a large amount of these subsidized roads, notwithstanding the great fears expressed here that the Government will not be able to collect its debt, value their securities at 15 per cent. premium.

Sir, I intend to show, and I think I can show, at all events I will attempt to show that by the operation of legislation pending in Congress to-day, if it shall become a law the effect will be to give as a donation to these Pacific railroads more money than the value of all the lands which we have been proposing to forfeit for the past three years. I do not believe it it the intention of the Senate to do such a thing, and therefore I want this information. I want it from the Government, from the proper officer of the Government, and hence I have asked for it.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it seems to me this is a very extraordinary proceeding. Here is a bill which was reported in its general features at the last Congress. There is to be a debt amounting, in round numbers, to $150,000,000, which will fall due to the Government on an average of eleven or twelve years from this time. There is due from the same corporations, the subsidized corporations, an equal amount as the principal of that debt, to which the Government claim on these roads was subordinated, which will fall due about the same time. There are various railroads, four or five in all, the two principal ones being the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific, to which that state of things applies. The Judiciary Committee was satisfied that it would not be expedient for the Government of the United States at the end of this time to drive these roads into bankruptcy and to have them sold in the market, on the one hand, or to take possession of them and run them itself as a Government operation, on the other; and if there is any Senator who differs from the Committee on either of these propositions I shall be surprised to learn the fact. The Senator from New Jersey is too experienced in the politics of this country and too experienced a legislator to have such a view on his part.

Some of these roads, I suppose, if they could be assured that the United States would make no claim to assert its authority over the road for any purpose, but would simply let them rest, would now or very soon be able to make an arrangement for a new loan which would pay off the Government loan, and go on taking it at its market value; but they cannot do it if they are not to know what the Government is to do until the debt matures.

It has been recommended by the present administration, who have responsibility in regard to it, that the present worth of that indebtedness should be ascertained; that to that present worth should be added a rate of interest a little exceeding the rate on which the Government can obtain money, and that that should be spread over a period of from fifty to sixty, or seventy, or eighty years, and the debt removed upon those terms, allowing each road to pay so much a year.

A bill based upon that theory was reported to the Senate from the Judiciary Committee at the last session. A similar bill is said to be pending elsewhere, in the House of Representatives; and having charge of the Senate bill, I announced to the Senate at the end of the last session and again at the beginning of this that it was so doubtful what would be the fate of the bill there that it seemed not worth while to trouble the Senate with an attempt to bring the matter up here until the other House had acted. If it should disapprove the whole proposition, it would be of no use to urge it here; while if the other House should mature a plan we could act on that plan with knowledge of the opinion of the House of Representatives a little more intelligently than we could before we had that knowledge. Therefore the matter has been put off from week to week.

Now, the Senator from New Jersey suddenly gets up and for the first time after all this asks to have laid before the Senate—which I do not object to—a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury of what is the amount of that debt—we have it in fact in a dozen forms already—and what will be the effect on the Government of making the arrangement contemplated by the Senate bill. I do not object to that; but certainly if that be reasonable it is also reasonable that the existing questions of law now in litigation should be also stated by the Secretary of the Treasury when he makes that answer. If my amendment does not prevail, the Secretary of the Treasury must, I think, comply with that request. He is not going to throw away any even plausible claim that has been made or may be made on the part of the Government, and therefore he must, of course, state every proposition that affects the Government debt. There are some of these questions as to which the Court of Claims unanimously decided in favor of the roads. They have gone up and are pending in the Supreme Court. There are others in which the Supreme Court has decided in favor of the roads, and there are others still undecided. My suggestion simply is that the Secretary shall accompany this statement of the debt with a pointing out to the Senate how much is certain and how much is in dispute. That is all.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President, it will be observed that my resolution asks for information touching facts, figures, accounts, papers, and the very proper place to seek that is from the officer of the Government who has charge of these accounts. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts relates to discussions of law, statements of conflicting claims. It seems to me that his amendment very properly should be referred to the law officer of the Government.

I now wish to ask the Senator if he is unwilling that I should obtain the information I seek, information upon questions of fact purely and simply, without having it trammeled with his questions of law?

Mr. HOAR. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. MCPHERSON. I mean exactly what I have said.

Mr. HOAR. The statement has not any meaning at all, because the question of fact involves the question of law. You ask the Secretary of the Treasury to tell Congress how much a particular railroad company owes the Government; and how is he to do that without determining in his own mind the principles of law by which that debt is to be ascertained?

Mr. MCPHERSON. You ask his opinion on certain disputed points, upon which the courts have not passed. How much would his opinion be valued by the Senator?

Mr. HOAR. Very well. When he states that it involves his passing on every single one of these questions in dispute—for he can not answer the Senator's question until he does that—I only want him to add to his answer a statement of the questions in dispute upon which he has passed. That is all. You can not cover the answer to the Senator's question without having the answer to mine.

Mr. MCPHERSON. It would be a most singular condition of affairs if a question so important to the people of this country as this question is known to be should be permitted to pass through this body without the opinion of the law committee of the Senate. It would be a most singular condition of things if the gentlemen who constitute the Judiciary Committee of this body should not be prepared to answer any question or give any information touching the status of a bill it had reported favorably to this body. But in order that we may understand as a purely financial business transaction how much money we are voting into the pockets of a lot of stockholders, who, the present president of this road declares, never paid a dollar in the world for their stock, I ask for this information. If we are to continue these payments, and to continue them out of the public Treasury, it is the duty of every Senator on this floor to understand thoroughly what he is about before he casts his vote in that direction.

I have asked only one thing—that I may have the state of the accounts. As to the other matters, I expect to be informed by the honorable committee who have charge of these matters in this body.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This subject has got so interesting that I should like to say a word myself.

Mr. CULLOM. Is the resolution before the Senate for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution is pending before the Senate by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I shall occupy but a minute.

If the Senator from New Jersey will look at the report of the Railroad Commissioner of last year bringing matters down to the end of the last fiscal year before this one, and if he will get the pamphlet copy of the report of this year, which, I believe, is printed for the Department but which under the reform administration of the Government Printing Office is not yet printed for the use of Congress although it has been in a month now, he will find all the information that he asks for in this resolution, with one exception which I will mention presently; and the Senator from Massachusetts will also find I think in the report of this year (which, if I remember it correctly, is like the one of last year in form, as it undoubtedly is), a statement of what are the disputes between the United States and the companies in regard to allowances for transportation, mails, &c.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont will pardon me for remarking that I have so stated to the Senate already.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that altogether in an official public document of last year and of this too—although for this year I can not lay my hand on it because the Public Printer has not yet in a month got it printed, it seems—the Senators will find brought together and not separate and on four or five pages of that report altogether and stated very clearly and very well indeed, I am bound to say for the present Railroad Commissioner, all this information, the total amount of the principal of the original bonds issued to each one of these companies, and then the aggregate to all; the total amount of all the interest the United States has paid; the total amount of the coupons outstanding which the United States are bound to pay and which have not been presented; the total amount that has been reimbursed to the United States by the services of the companies; the total amount that has been got into the Treasury by the sinking fund under the Thurman act so called. Then it goes on to state the subjects of controversy between the respective companies and the Government and what has been done about them, what the Court of Claims has decided and what the Supreme Court has decided, and how those decisions settle matters as far as they have gone. So all the information of facts which is asked for here is already before us, as it seems to me, in the most compact and intelligible way possible.

Now we come to the end of this resolution.

Mr. MCPHERSON. This report, I understand the Senator, is made by the Railroad Commissioner.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By the Railroad Commissioner, who by law has charge of all these accounts of the railroad companies.

Mr. MCPHERSON. The Senator will observe that I have asked that a report be made by the Treasury Department, so that I may have two reports.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Inasmuch as the Treasury Department has not, under the law, got the means of giving the information that the Interior Department through the Railroad Commissioner has under the law, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury will necessarily (unless he borrows it from some other Department) be less full than the report of the Secretary of the Interior embodying the report of the Commissioner of Railroads. That is clear enough.

Now we come to the end of this resolution asking the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury—which he is under no obligation to give any more than I or any other citizen—as to what will be the effect of the passage of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary as to money affairs. That is a proposition so simple within the first four rules of arithmetic that I do not believe the Secretary of the Treasury, as eminent as he is, can know any more about it than any intelligent Senator or any other intelligent citizen. It is a mere question of arithmetical computation, and that is all there is to it.

The United States, on the theory of the bill which has been spoken of—and I am not going to discuss it at large—rather than to have its mortgage run in with one hundred millions of dollars and upwards due in 1896, in round numbers—ten years hence—and be obliged to foreclose and take possession of this property, is willing to extend the time of payment at a lower rate of interest, requiring an absolute payment every year, so that there can be no ground for haggling or dispute, and that any dispute concerning transportation claims shall not affect the duty of the railroad companies to pay the full amount of the bonds due every year or every six months as it comes around. But if they have any claim against the Government beyond what the Government is willing to allow they must fight them out like anybody else. They can not hold back their payment on the bonds on any such theory as having an offset. All that is prevented. Whether it is wise or unwise for the United States to extend this debt for a definite length of time, having it reduced by a definite proportion every year at a low rate of interest, is a question for consideration. Gentlemen may differ upon it; but that is the proposition and all of it, except that in arranging the present worth of this debt the United States has been able to get nearly one-half of the amount of interest upon the interest that we have paid, which the Supreme Court decided we were not yet entitled to, if we ever were, the companies contending that when the time comes when we are to be reimbursed for those coupons we are paying from year to year we are not entitled to interest upon them.

Some members of the Committee on the Judiciary, at least, if not all, were of opinion that when the time came we could probably recover interest upon these sums that we have been paying during this course of years in coupons. But that is a disputed point; it must be admitted that it is not clear. But I felt strongly enough upon the subject to insist upon it that we should get a share in this readjustment, and fixing the sums they were to give new bonds for, of what the interest on these sums we have paid would amount to, so as to save to the United States a great many millions of dollars, which it is very far from being clear we could secure when the time comes. Whether that is wise or unwise is another question; but asking the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury as to what is the arithmetical effect of renewing a debt at 3 per cent., instead of collecting it at 6, is a thing that I do not see any use in, I must confess. If anybody wants it, and the Secretary is willing to give it, it is his affair.

Mr. McPHERSON. It is well known that the Treasury Department is furnished with experts who will be able to make this computation and make it in a manner to be intelligible to everybody. There appears before the Senate a bill so complicated and involved that I doubt very much if even the honorable Senator, distinguished as he is and earnest and zealous as he is, feels to-day that it is exactly the proper thing for this Government to do, and that he is really satisfied in his own mind with it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator refers to me I will say that I am satisfied with the bill as the best thing that the Government under the circumstances can do. The Government at present is in great danger. We are not getting into the sinking fund as much money, if the thing is to go on as it is, as we ought to get. This bill provides that if the companies or any one of them does not accept this bill in terms and do what the bill requires, then the amount to be paid into the sinking fund shall be largely increased.

We ought to bear in mind another thing, if we are to speak of the matter as we have begun to do, and I will only take a moment; and that is that there is no existing provision of law now which authorizes the President of the United States or the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else to redeem the first mortgage which is ahead of us, or to take care of it in any way; and without any provision of law they can not do it. If we let this thing run until the time comes when the first mortgage is due, which is the same time that our bonds are due, and there is no law to act under, a foreclosure can be made by confession, and the United States will be foreclosed out as a second mortgagee without the possibility of redress. The Committee on the Judiciary, looking to that, reported a separate bill to authorize the President of the United States in all such cases to interfere and protect the interests of the Government; but we can not get it passed into a law. Reform has got so rampant that it is impossible to do anything to protect the interests of the United States, apparently.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now if the Senator from Vermont should happen to be convinced after a careful computation has been made by the Treasury Department that he is mistaken with respect to the character of the bill before the Senate, I presume the Senator would change his mind on this question.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very likely.

Mr. McPHERSON. One word more while I am upon my feet. It is well known that we passed a bill here known popularly as the Thurman bill, with which I think the Senator from Vermont had perhaps more to do than any Senator in this body to-day. The Supreme Court has decided it to be a proper exercise of the power of Congress. We declared there that the Pacific railroads should pay a certain sum of money into the public Treasury as a sinking fund. Now if we have the power to require a certain amount of money of the earnings of these roads to be paid into the sinking fund, there is certainly no limit to our power to require that all the net earnings should be turned into the sinking fund.

How much better it would be for the Senate acting in the same direction that it was then, increasing the amount in the sinking fund by the operation of the Thurman act extended, a matter which everybody understands, already decided by the Supreme Court to be within the legitimate power of Congress, and within their right under the charters! That is a plain, practical proposition for every Senator. We understand exactly the meaning of it. Instead of lessening their obligations to the Government—as they should have done—the Pacific railroad companies have since the passage of the Thurman act spent millions upon millions of money in building side lines and feeders to the Pacific railroad systems, part of which could just as well have been paid into the public Treasury as a sinking fund and liquidate the debt to that extent. But no, they are continually building branches, and they are building them to-day from the surplus earnings of the roads over and above the amount paid into the sinking fund, and this, too, in the face of the fact that at the time of the passage of the Thurman act the Pacific railroads declared that they could not pay the amount required by that act without oppressing them.

Further than that, the bond securities of the roads junior to the Government debt are to-day selling at a large premium in the market. The stock of the roads which did not pay a single dollar to their construction, so said by the present president of the road, some of whose statements I shall take occasion to read to the Senate if the bill ever comes before this body, declaring as he does almost in terms that the road never cost one-half its present capitalization.

Now I claim and will show, if I can have the statement which I ask for, that the bill proposes a simple donation to the Pacific railroads of a large sum of money that the roads do not need. There is no danger of the Government debt on these roads if you compel them to pay a part of their net earnings in addition to that now paid into the sinking fund; then no harm can come to the Government.

Those intelligent, wise financiers who to-day hold millions upon millions of the junior securities of these roads which are behind the Government debt are to-day expecting confidently that the companies will pay off the first and second mortgage bonds; else why are the junior securities quoted far above par?

The effect, Mr. President, will be that it will become a magnificent stock-jobbing concern. That is the meaning of it in its result. Look at the millions of money that these railroads have paid in dividends upon stock costing nothing to the stockholders. They came here in 1878 when the Thurman bill was before the Senate, and declared that they could not pay the small amount demanded by the provisions of that bill into a sinking fund to protect the Government debt, but since then they have expended more than $30,000,000 in building branch lines alone.

I wish to know whether the general mortgage the Government has is a lien on the branch lines. I notice, however, that the branch lines are mortgaged largely, as I am informed, beyond their value, and if the Government lien should cover them also it is not a first lien; that is a matter, however, which is yet to be investigated.

Another thing that is being done, of which I have the proof, is that when freight is taken upon these side lines and carried over them to the parent line, or the subsidized road, from whose earnings the railroad company is required to pay a certain proportion into the public Treasury, the major part of the earnings are given to the branch line, and the subsidized line which pays the Government under the operation of the Thurman bill gets but a small portion. In other words, the earnings of the subsidized line are kept down to the minimum by a division of the earnings between the two lines. A method of bookkeeping unfair to the Government is resorted to.

Now, Mr. President, I simply ask for the figures and a comparative statement made by experts paid out of the public Treasury of the United States to give it. I am encountered by an amendment to the resolution which involves, if it involves anything at all, a demand upon the law officer of the Government instead of upon the Treasury.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I can not conceive what interest can be promoted unless it be the interest of some stock speculator somewhere, some bull or bear, by undertaking to discuss weeks in advance a measure which may possibly come before the Senate two weeks hence, and possibly may not reach discussion here at all at the present session. I do not think, therefore, that it would be profitable for me to enter upon a discussion of this measure at this time. Justice, however, to the persons interested requires me to say that the Senator from New Jersey, when he stated the character of the owners of the stock or the method by which the stock was obtained in any of the roads, refers to a period that has long gone by. It is true that in the years between 1864 and 1868, the period of the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad, there were transactions which when disclosed excited the interest and indignation of the American people. I myself was charged with the duty of writing a history of those transactions, which I performed to the best of my power in the other House, and I have no disposition to make any deduction from the statements there made. But Congress at that time had the question submitted to it, whether it should cause legal proceedings to be instituted to vacate that charter, whether it should undertake to take possession of the road by public authority, or what other terms it would attempt to avail itself of. It determined that it would not undertake to vacate the charter of the road at that time. It left, therefore, the stock of that road in the possession of its owners; it left the road in the possession of the stockholders, and from that time to this, a period of eighteen years from the time of the original transactions, the stock of this road has remained in the market, the investment constantly changing. It is hardly fair, therefore, in determining the question what we shall do with one of these roads to-day, to cite the misconduct of the stockholders or managers of twenty or twenty-two years ago.

The management of the road is entirely changed. Jay Gould is said to have had control of it at one time; but some two years and a half or two years ago his interest in it was entirely parted with, it is understood, and a new set of officers were elected, the offices of the road were moved from New York to Boston, and a gentleman against whose integrity I have never heard a charge assumed the management of the road—Mr. Charles Francis Adams, jr., as he then was—who declared that it should be his object to see that every obligation, direct or indirect, legal or equitable, of that road to the Government and people of the United States should be thenceforth performed, and to the performance of that promise he pledged whatever of character or integrity or capacity he possessed. Knowing something about the history of that road from that day to this, I declare that I have never heard in public or in private, and have never read, a charge or claim that Mr. Adams had failed to carry out that promise to the best of his ability.

I do not think the wildest man in the community charges the gentleman who is now at the head of the Union Pacific Railroad with any want of absolute good faith to the Government and to the people, as well as to the road which is in his charge. I say this speaking of a gentleman with whom I have been for more than four years opposed in political opinion, and whose public influence, so far as politics is concerned, is exerted against the cause and party and the opinions which I hold dear. So, in saying this, I am doing justice to an opponent, not defending his character that I have any personal duty or obligation to defend.

It so happened that about three or four years ago, before this gentleman went into the charge of this road, he made a public statement that he had investigated the Union Pacific Railroad—I think he was then Government director, or had some relation representing the public—and that he believed that it would be in the end a permanent, steady, 6 per cent. paying stock, and that the public might put confidence in it. It was at a time when it was almost impossible to get any safe and secure investment except at a very high premium, and the result was, especially in the State of Massachusetts, that trustees and guardians and widows, persons of small means, hastened to buy when they could not have got, I suppose, the stock of the Boston and Albany road, or any other of our principal railroads, for less than 180 or 175. They bought the stock of the Union Pacific Railroad, and it went from a very small sum, 20 or 30 cents on the dollar, up to 110 and 115. These investments were so general in the State of Massachusetts that a single broker in the city of Worcester, where I live, is said to have placed at about that time over three million dollars' worth of stock in the hands of the people in that vicinity. Whether that is true or not I do not know, but I have heard it so asserted.

Mr. Adams sent into the committee a few leaves cut—copies of course but copied from leaves of the present stock registry of the road, showing the nature and character of the stockholders, the small amounts they hold, the number of women and guardians and trustees, taken at random.

Now, the Senator from New Jersey gets up and cites to the public a statement made by this gentleman when he was attacking the wrongs and errors of that road twenty years ago, before he was president of the company, as if he were stating—and anybody who did not hear the explanation would have understood from the Senator from New Jersey that that is the condition of the stock owned in the road to-day. The statement of course was not so intended, but it does very great injustice to the subject.

Mr. BECK. I wish to ask the Senator a question; or I can make a statement and he can answer it afterwards.

Mr. HOAR. I would rather not yield for that purpose. If the Senator wants to ask a question, I will yield, but I do not wish him to make a statement until I get through.

Mr. BECK. What I desire to know is whether, since 1878, twenty or thirty millions of the earnings in part of each of these roads has been expended in building branch roads, as stated by the Senator from New Jersey; and if so, whether the United States retains its lien upon those branch roads subject only to the first mortgage; and next, whether a rate of freights is charged over these branch roads, as asserted, greater than is charged over the main line, either for the purpose or to have the effect of decreasing the net profits which legitimately go to the sinking fund? My object is to ascertain how far these gentlemen are in good faith trying to protect us, before we extend further privileges to them.

Mr. HOAR. The question of the Senator from Kentucky will be, when this bill comes up, a very pertinent one—one which demands and should have an answer.

Mr. BECK. I would not have asked it now but for the statement made here.

Mr. HOAR. I understand. I do not suppose that the net earnings of this road, a percentage of which belongs to the Government, have been ever expended in what would be literally or technically described as the construction of branch roads. It is undoubtedly true that the resources of the company have been expended—and I should rather refer to the documents before undertaking to make the explanation—in acquiring in various ways interests in roads which were necessary for the protection of the business of that road itself. In one instance it has been the acquiring of stock; in another instance it has been the acquiring of bonds where the bondholders controlled the branch; but the control of branch roads undoubtedly has been obtained by the Union Pacific Railroad Company. We should have roads leading to the capital for the necessity of our business of legislating here.

In regard to the matter of the difference in the price of freights, I am not able to answer the Senator from Kentucky, and I will not undertake to do so.

Mr. BECK. Do these branch roads add to our security, or may they become competing lines?

Mr. HOAR. These branch roads are not a part of our present security. One of the features of the bill, as proposed, is that it requires as a condition of this legislation that all the branch roads and all the newly-acquired properties of the company whatever are to be put into our mortgage. That arrangement is to be made before the bill becomes operative. That is the answer to that question.

But, Mr. President, I wish to repeat my sense of—I will not say the indecency, but the impropriety—the unfairness of undertaking to prejudice the public mind or the mind of the Senate in regard to a measure which may never reach us here at all at the present session by springing in advance on the Senate a discussion of this complicated subject when the Senate can not act upon it at all until the bill is regularly before us, which possibly will not happen at all during the present session of Congress or until the other House has acted.

I wish to recall the Senate to this point, that if the Secretary of the Treasury is to be asked to state the amount of this debt, which is the principal and bottom fact which we wish to know in determining what we will do with it, he ought to accompany that statement with a statement of what part of that debt, as he finds it, is free from dispute, and what part depends upon the determination of doubtful questions of law which are pending in the courts.

Now will any fair-minded Senator doubt or dispute the truth of that affirmation? If you are to know or to act upon a belief as to the amount of this debt, do you not want to know how much of it is disputed and what the question is in dispute?

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, one word more, because perhaps in some remarks of mine I may not have been as exact as I ought to have been, for I do not now remember the exact figures that I used, my statement being a general one. But I will now speak by authority, in order that the Senator from Kentucky may understand exactly what I mean, that the mileage of the Union Pacific subsidized line at the time of the passage of the Thurman act was 1,360.41 miles, made up as follows: The main line, including the bridge at Omaha, 1,042.41 miles; the Colorado Central 178 miles; the Omaha and Republican Valley 50 miles; and the Utah and Northern 80 miles. The mileage of the branch lines equaled 318 miles at the time of the passage of the Thurman bill. The amount invested in them, according to the report of the Government directors, was, in the Colorado Central $266,176, in the Utah and Northern $130,800, in the Omaha and Republican Valley $817,500; total $1,615,464. It had also invested in the Utah Central $277,000, and in the Utah Southern $1,020,500.

The total investments in the five lines at the time of the passage of the Thurman act equaled $2,912,956. The Utah Central and the Utah Southern are not included in the Union Pacific system, the latter company owning only a minor part of the stock and bonds of the two companies now consolidated as the Utah Central. The company first published a balance-sheet in 1880. Its annual reports in 1878 and 1879 gave no account of these branch lines nor of the amount invested in them. In 1880 the mileage of the branch lines had increased to 1,033.20 miles. The amount invested in them at the close of 1880 was $19,507,615, the increase of investment being $16,995,059. The question is, where did this money come from?

Mr. HOAR. The Senator stated it at $30,000,000 awhile ago.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am correcting my statement. At the close of 1885 the branch lines of the company equalled 2,687.81 miles, the increase from the passage of the Thurman act equalling 2,308.78 miles. The investment in the branch lines increased from $1,615,466 to $41,777,412, an increase equalling $40,181,956, or, deducting the investment in the Utah Central and Southern lines, $38,000,000 and odd. Mr. Adams declared that the investment equalled $46,000,000. In such case the increase in eight years, between 1878 when the Thurman act was passed and 1885, exceeded $43,000,000, upon which I believe the Senator from Kentucky says we have no lien.

Mr. BECK. I inquired if we had any lien.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am not prepared to say. I do not want to make any statement that I can not verify. I think what I have already said has been sufficiently verified. I think the bill of the Senator from Massachusetts proposes to give the Government a lien on the branch lines, therefore I assume it has no lien on them at present.

Now, Mr. President, I want to know, if in right or reason, any Senator can object to a plain resolution asking for information, asking for facts and figures, or seek to load it with an amendment calling for information that can properly not be given by any Department of this Government save the Law Department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I call for the yeas and nays. I think this matter had better go over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will announce the arrival of 2 o'clock, as it lacks but a minute or two of that hour, in order to dispose of some business on his table.

Mr. McPHERSON. Do I understand that objection is made to the present consideration of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that an objection is now too late.

Mr. HOAR. But it goes over, at any rate. I do not care about taking the floor for one minute.

Mr. HARRIS. Two o'clock would carry it over anyhow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair avails himself of the mean time to lay before the Senate bills from the House of Representatives for reference.

The message also announced that the President had on the 23d of December, 1886, approved and signed the act (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes relating to pensions to certains disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, January 5, 1887.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DAWES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, with the accompanying papers, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EUSTIS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural-experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementing thereto.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the conference report on the bill (S. 1532) be now taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the conference report on the interstate-commerce bill be now taken up.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (S. 1532) to regulate commerce.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, when the conference report was made by the committee the report was not read in full. I only desire to call the attention of the Senate to that fact, but I do not propose at this moment to have it read, as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] is prepared to address the Senate on the subject, and I will waive the reading for the present.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, the utterances of Senators in this Chamber are so liable to be misunderstood, I will not say misrepresented, that I takeoccasion to say before proceeding with my remarks, and to say it with what emphasis I may, that I am in favor of legislation for the regulation of the business of the railroads of the country within the extreme limits of the Constitution, which I understand to be for the regulation of that portion of the business done upon the railroads of the country which comes within the definition of "interstate commerce." I wish that it were so that Congress had power to go further in the subject of railroad legislation.

More than that: I am in favor of this bill with one exception. I have labored earnestly, with what diligence I might, conscientiously, to endeavor to perfect the bill and to assist the chairman of the committee and the other members of the committee in coming to conclusions upon this subject, and I am ready to agree with the report of the conference committee upon all the points except the one to which I shall call the attention of the Senate.

It is not a question of whether we shall legislate for the regulation of interstate commerce transacted by railroads, but it is a question of how we shall legislate. It is a vast and complicated subject that we deal with, vaster and more complicated, I think, than any one apprehends until he has made a careful and exhaustive study of the subject. The very fact that there were moved upon the railroads of the United States in the year 1885, 437,000,000 tons of freight, a very large proportion of which, I suppose 60 per cent. at least, came under the definition of interstate commerce, the fact that the entire receipts of the railroads of this country in the year 1885 were $765,000,000, a sum more than twice as great as the entire income of the Government, of which $519,000,000 were from freight receipts alone, shows how vast the question is. How complicated it is no one can ever know except those who have been practically engaged in the operation of railroads.

The basis upon which we must legislate, as it seems to me, is simple. The justification for legislation is that the railroad business, unlike other business, is of a mixed nature. It is partly private business and partly public business. I think that we should refrain as far as possible from legislating to affect purely private business in this country. But when a private business is "charged with a public use," as the phrase is, when the railroad undertakes to discharge a public duty as well as to conduct its private business, it is eminently proper and necessary that there should be legislation to make sure that the public business is conducted for the public welfare; that its public duty is faithfully discharged, and that no abuses are allowed to exist.

I said the basis of legislation was simple. It should be the enforcement of the common law—that, and nothing more. Congress may not justify itself, in my judgment, in stepping outside of the well-defined principles of the common law in legislation. Those principles affecting interstate railway business have had a growth of centuries. They provide the remedy for every difficulty which can arise in the operation of railroads. The application of those principles to every evil or abuse which can be charged against railroads and railroad operations will solve the difficulty and remedy the evil. The difficulty is only in the application.

So then, I think, we should confine our legislation to the enforcement of the common law. That is simple. It is only this; it can be expressed in a word: The rates charged by common carriers must be reasonable, and such carriers must only charge like rates for like services. That is all. It has been the intention of this committee to confine legislation within these limits. A careful study of the bill as it was passed by the Senate will show that we did not go outside of those limits, that we undertook to make no new law for the regulation of railroads and the business of railroads and interstate commerce in this country, but that we did undertake to hold the railroad management of this country up to the strict letter of the common law.

We did this intentionally. We did it because in the light of experience in this and other countries we believed that that was the best method of dealing with the railroad problem, because those State Legislatures which had legislated thus and stopped there had done most toward a favorable and satisfactory solution of the railroad problem in the States. For instance, all the legislation of the State of Massachusetts upon this subject is to be found in a single statute which is in chapter 225 of the acts of May 16, 1882. I read it. It is an amendment to a former statute which imposed penalties for violations of the common law. It is this:

SECTION 1. Chapter 94 of the acts of the year 1882 is amended by striking out the first and second sections thereof and inserting instead the following words: "No railroad company shall in its charges for the transportation of freight or in doing its freight business make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favor of any person, firm, or corporation, nor subject any person, firm, or corporation to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage."

That and a short-haul law upon which largely the short-haul provision of the Senate bill was modeled, and a single statute in relation to the transportation of milk, is all the remedial legislation which has been resorted to in the State of Massachusetts.

In addition to that, they have a railroad commission. That commission has very little power. It has power to hear complaints and to make report to the attorney-general of the State and to the Legislature. That simple legislation has been found to be the most effective State legislation in the United States, and it is in that State where the legislation has been most simple, where it has been strictly confined to a declaration and enforcement of the common law, where the fewest complaints against railroads now exist. It is in those States which have legislated most severely and rigidly where the most numerous complaints, and, in my judgment, the best-founded complaints, of railroad abuses now exist.

The committee believed that it was not best in experimental legislation to go too far, and this legislation is experimental. They believed that it was unwise to attempt to prescribe a remedy for every alleged abuse in railroad management by specific legislation, by hard and fast iron-bound statutes applying thereto. I think the committee were right, and therefore I have great pleasure in standing by the committee bill with the single exception to which I am to-day to call the attention of the Senate.

The discussion upon this bill is narrowed to two issues, and I think the committee and the Senate may be congratulated that the work of the committee has been practically adopted by both branches of the national legislature, with the exception of these two topics which still excite discussion. These two questions are, first, whether the Senate will adopt the modification proposed by the conference committee in the short-haul section, and, second, will it prohibit pooling instead of leaving it for the present to the investigation of the commission.

Now that these two issues come clearly before the Senate, I wish to put in juxtaposition, side by side, the provisions of the Senate bill and the provisions of the bill recommended by the conference committee upon these topics. First, I read the short-haul clause of the Senate bill, section 4:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, and from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival; but this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time make general rules exempting such designated common carrier in such special cases from the operation of this section of this act; and when such exceptions shall have been made and published they shall, until changed by the commission or by law, have like force and effect as though the same had been specified in this section.

That is all there is of it except the penalty clause, which appears elsewhere in the conference bill. The section in the conference bill is this:

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to charge or receive any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or of like kind of property, under substantially similar circumstances and conditions, for a shorter than for a longer distance over the same line, in the same direction, the shorter being included within the longer distance.

It will be seen that those words have been substituted for the words "and from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival."

But this shall not be construed as authorizing any common carrier within the terms of this act to charge and receive as great compensation for a shorter as for a longer distance: Provided, however, That upon application to the commission appointed under the provisions of this act, such common carrier may, in special cases, after investigation by the commission, be authorized to charge less for longer than for shorter distances for the transportation of passengers or property; and the commission may from time to time prescribe the extent to which such designated common carrier may be relieved from the operation of this section of this act.

The main change, as will be seen, recommended by the conference committee is as I have indicated, the striking out in the Senate bill of the words "and from the same original point of departure or to the same point of arrival," and substituting therefor the words "the shorter being included within the longer distance."

Now, I read the Senate bill provision with regard to the subject of pooling. It is this:

SEC. 19. That the said commission shall specially inquire into that method of railroad management or combination known as pooling, and shall report to Congress what, if any, legislation is advisable and expedient upon that subject.

I read next the section in the bill proposed by the conference committee on the subject of pooling:

SEC. 5. That it shall be unlawful for any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act to enter into any contract, agreement, or combination with any other common carrier or carriers for the pooling of freights of different and competing railroads, or to divide between them the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads, or any portion thereof; and in any case of an agreement for the pooling of freights as aforesaid, each day of its continuance shall be deemed a separate offense.

Elsewhere in the bill it is provided that the commission of any act which it is provided shall be unlawful may be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000.

Now, with regard to the change in the short-haul clause, I have this to say: I do not think as an original proposition the change was a wise one. I do not think it is an improvement of the bill as it left the Senate. I think the Senate bill recognized a principle which was sound, and that principle was that the question of what is a reasonable charge upon freight to a station or from a station is not to be determined by the question of what is charged for freight to or from another station. In other words, the question of reasonable freight charges must vary with the location of the place to or from which the freight is shipped, the volume and character of the business to be transacted going to and from that place. I believe that was a wise provision based upon a sound principle, and I do not think it was wise to depart from it; and I think that these words which have been inserted about the shorter distance being included within the longer distance are uncertain and ambiguous. I do not think any man knows to-day what they do mean. I think it will greatly trouble courts and commission to decide what they mean.

It is certain that the introduction of these words makes an exception to the rule. It is certain that the bill, as it stands reported by the conference committee, implies that there are some shorter distances for which more may be charged than for longer distances. It is for courts and the commission to find out what those shorter distances are, for, mathematically speaking, every shorter distance is included within the longer distance. But this bill says on this subject that it shall not be lawful to charge more on the same line in the same direction, under similar conditions and circumstances, for a like kind and amount of freights, for the shorter than for the longer distance which includes the shorter. Mathematically speaking, we should say that was impossible. Speaking of the words when put into a statute, we know they must have a construction. I have never yet seen the man who was able to say what those shorter distances were in which railroads were to be permitted to charge more than for longer distances. They are there in the bill if it passes, and the courts will have to say what they mean.

But, notwithstanding all this, I stand by the short-haul clause for the purpose of getting legislation on this subject. I am willing to surrender, so far, my judgment as to what is wise and best. Right here I want to allude to an objection based upon a possible construction which I have heard urged against this short-haul clause.

I am told that there is fear in many quarters that this construction will be put upon it: that where two or more independent lines of railroad (independent in ownership and operation) contract with each other to forward freight over the entire line so made up, and for each independent link the railroad company owning and operating it to accept a certain proportion of the through freight as its share, that portion which it so agrees to accept under these circumstances will be made the measure of the charge upon freight shipped over its own road or any portion of it. I do not think that such can be the construction of the bill.

Every road must stand by itself. It is upon the company's own road that the short-haul clause takes effect. If a number of independent companies, having independent lines which together form a continuous through route, contract as to the freights which shall go over those routes, then they, as contracting parties, are bound as to freight which is shipped over those roads as to the price, and may not charge more on freight sent under contract between those points for the shorter than for the longer distance; but the share which each road may receive for carrying such through freight does not, in my judgment, furnish the measure by which any one of those independent and independently-operated companies is to measure the rate for other freight upon its own road.

I have said this much to explain the fact that, although I do not think we have improved the Senate bill on this subject, I still take it and stand by it.

But the section of the bill proposed by the conference committee which prohibits pooling under criminal penalties I can not consent to. I would for the sake of getting legislation assent to it if I did not believe in my inmost mind that it was impolitic, unjust, and calculated to embarrass and possibly defeat the beneficial operation of the bill.

I do not think that to justify my dissent I must hold affirmatively that pooling contracts are legal and right. I think the burden of proof is upon them who would make such contracts criminal. Can it be that in the Senate of the United States and in the House of Representatives of the United States crimes are to be made and penalties of $5,000 a day are to be inflicted, and the parties who propose it are not to show why the contracts for which those fines are imposed are illegal or wrong? And to give reasons why I can not assent to such legislation, must I prove affirmatively that such contracts are right and are according to the common law? It is for those who say that pooling between railroads shall be criminal to show that such arrangements are either opposed to the common law, condemned by the common law, or they are so far wrong in principle, as being opposed to public policy, that it is just and wise legislation to make them criminal offenses.

Mr. President, we must get back to definitions. I apprehend that these contracts, which are known as "pooling contracts," are entirely misunderstood in character, in purpose, in results, and it is the evil significance which attaches to this unfortunate word "pool," which railroads never apply to these contracts, which has created an unreasonable prejudice in the minds of the people of the country, upon which it is supposed that, without investigation and without affirmatively showing anything wrong or improper in these contracts, we are to brand the making of them as criminal. It is said that "that which we call a rose by any other name would smell as sweet," but the converse of that proposition does not hold true. These contracts under other names would never be supposed to be against the public interest. Railroad companies have tried to escape from the fateful influence of that name. They have called such contracts what they more properly are—co-operation—contracts for traffic unity—but without avail; that unfortunate name is fastened upon these contracts. But I do not propose, therefore, to strike at what can not be shown to be wrong, improper, or against the public welfare or opposed to public policy.

What is a pool? What is a pooling contract? It is simply an agreement between competing railroads to apportion the competitive business; that, and nothing more. I repeat it—it is an agreement between competing railroads to apportion the competitive business. It does not touch the local business; it does not reach it; it has no reference to it. The local business is left to each individual company. It is non-competitive. A pool has nothing to do per se with making rates.

And right here I want to call attention to a glaring inconsistency in this proposed legislation. The proposed prohibition of pooling does not prohibit the railroad companies from making rates. Indeed, the whole bill compels agreements between competing roads for the making of rates. The section does not propose to prohibit a hard and fast agreement between railroads to maintain rates. Indeed, it almost compels it. It does not propose to interfere with any other means which railroads may adopt, which are inducements to the railroads themselves to maintain rates. All that it does propose to do is to make criminal the apportionment of freight between competing railroads, or the division of earnings by competing railroads. With that criminal clause in the bill, it would still be open to railroads to enter into any other kind of contracts which they might invent for the purpose of maintaining rates agreed upon. It would be open to competing roads to put a sum of money in the hands of a commissioner or an arbitrator to be used as penalties, as liquidated damages to be recovered by the other companies of any company that should violate the agreement to maintain rates. It does not apply to a hundred means by which railroad companies may in some way make it for their interest to maintain the rates which they themselves have fixed and have legally agreed to maintain under this bill. Is it not pretty remarkable legislation that there should be left the right of competing roads to fix rates jointly for competitive business; that there should be left the right to agree to maintain those rates and not cut or vary from them; that there should be left free to them every means to protect themselves against the violation of those agreements, except just this matter of apportioning between them the competitive business of the roads or the division of joint earnings?

It may be said that perhaps it is not so bad a measure after all if it leaves all those things open to the railroads, but the inconsistency of it is intensified many times.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Would it interfere with the Senator to ask a question at that point?

Mr. PLATT. I think not, though I am making an argument which rather requires a connected thread of thought in order to be intelligible, not to say effective.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I shall not ask the question.

Mr. PLATT. I say, then, that the thing which it is proposed to make criminal is contracts for the pooling of freights of different and competitive railroads or the division between them of the aggregate or net proceeds of the earnings of such railroads. Now, I want to read a word from Mr. Nimmo's report, which is called the report on the Internal Commerce of the United States in 1879, showing what a pool really is. And I want to say a word about Mr. Nimmo, whom I shall frequently quote during this discussion; I shall not quote railroad presidents, with a single exception or two; I shall not quote pool commissioners. I propose to fortify what I have to say on this subject by quotations from men who have studied this question from an independent standpoint and with no interest to favor railroads. Mr. Nimmo, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics until 1884, is an able statistician and a careful student of political problems, who in the nice adjustment of offices to civil service reform principles by the present administration was asked to make way for another man. Mr. Nimmo is certainly good authority by reason of the attention which he has given to this subject. As far back as 1879 he said:

> The use of the term "pool" as a designation of the agreements entered into between railroad companies for the apportionment of traffic, or the receipts from traffic, is of recent application. The term has usually been applied to a game of chance, in which all the players contribute toward making up the stake or pool, and the winner in the game gets the whole, whereas what is now known as a railroad "pool" is simply an agreement entered into between companies for the apportionment or division of the traffic between roads engaged in competitive traffic. By this arrangement they take no chance, but seek to escape the chances that, under unrestrained competition, they may be able to secure less than what they deem to be their equitable share of traffic and reduce to a certainty the share of the traffic which they shall secure. The main object, however, is to avoid the great losses inevitably resulting from wars of rates. In its application to the apportionment of division of railroad traffic, the meaning of the word "pool" appears to be, in a double sense, the reverse of its ordinary significance in its application to games of chance.

Again, in 1881, he said:

> A railroad freight pool is simply an agreement that, at competing points, the several contestants for traffic shall be allowed a certain percentage of it, or of the receipts therefrom, to be determined either by arbitration or by a convention of the representatives of all the competing roads. When such an agreement is faithfully observed, it is found to be comparatively an easy matter to decide as to the rates which shall be charged and to maintain them.

Sometimes the same authority agrees upon and fixes the rates, and sometimes it does not—the same authority which apportions or divides the traffic. The maintenance of rates is in no sense per se part of the pooling contract, and it is not so treated in the bill, as I have shown. It is not so treated in the bill which prohibits and makes criminal only a thing independent of and distinct from the making of rates and the agreeing to maintain them.

Now I call attention for a moment to Judge Cooley's explanation of a pool, which is to be found upon page 2 of a pamphlet by Judge Cooley in 1884, originally published in the Railway Age of Chicago, entitled, "Popular and Legal Views of Traffic Pooling." He says:

> In this country the method of pooling seems to be for the several contracting parties to create some common authority upon which will be conferred the power to establish and change rates for the transportation of property within a certain territory or over a certain line, and also to apportion the business between them. The apportionment will be made upon a consideration of what the companies severally would be likely to obtain under the operation of free competition, and it will be changed from time to time if found to be relatively unjust. The feature of arbitration upon controversies arising between the contracting parties will also be prominent in the arrangement.

> The avowed purpose in pooling is to avoid ruinous competition between the several roads represented, and the unjust discrimination between shippers which is found invariably to attend such competition.

Would you believe that in a bill largely and mainly aimed at the prevention of unjust discrimination a clause would be found making criminal that practice to which railroad companies have resorted to prevent unjust discrimination?

A pooling contract is based—that is to say, the percentage of freights or the portion of freights which each company agrees to be satisfied with—is based upon the results of traffic for several years under free competition; and it is a strange thing that, however fierce the competition, the amount of competitive traffic which a road secures remains practically the same; whether competition be fierce or whether there be little competition, the amount of traffic which a competing road secures is practically the same. This apportionment of traffic, then, is based upon what returns for some years under open competition—when competition has been fierce and when it has not been fierce—have been secured by each competing road.

The fact to which I have alluded shows that there is for every competing railroad its natural, normal share of the competitive business, business which will come to it whatever the competition may be. A competing railroad company may be justified in saying that such share of the competitive business belongs to it so long as it maintains only reasonable rates for doing it. It is upon that theory that the apportionment is made. If it constitutes an agreement for the prevention of competition, for non-competition, it is this, that the railroad company will not fight for more than its natural share of the business. Its object is, as I have shown by the quotation from Judge Cooley, to remove the inducement which exists for railroads to enter into ruinous competition or into unnatural strife for business which does not belong to them.

It may be said that the purpose of pooling is to maintain and establish equal and stable rates. What is this bill for? What has been the purpose of the committee in this bill? They have heard from all over this land that one of the chief and greatest causes of complaint against railroads was the fluctuation of rates, rates which were up to-day and down to-morrow, up for the retailer and down for the wholesaler, and fluctuating up or down as the caprice of the railroads or the emergencies of the competitive strife should require. Look at the report of the committee, look at the testimony before the committee, and you find that one of the main objects of this bill is to make rates stable and permanent when they have been found to be reasonable. I challenge any man to show that the object or purpose or faithful observance of a pooling contract—by which I mean the apportionment of the competitive traffic, or of the earnings derived from such competitive traffic—can be anything else except the maintenance of stable rates. It is supposed, I think, on the part of the public, that in some way these railroad pools fix unreasonable rates.

I challenge proof of it. I heard petitions presented at that desk this morning praying for the passage of this bill. For what purpose? To prevent excessive rates, discriminations, and pooling. It shows the utter and lamentable ignorance of what pooling contracts really are.

There is not a man who ever studied them, there is not a man who ever investigated their operation, but what will tell you that the main purpose of them is to prevent discriminations; and yet here we have a bill in which we propose to make criminal the means which the railroad companies adopt to prevent discrimination. Others may agree to it for the sake of getting legislation. I will not.

I know this is no place to discuss a legal question thoroughly and exhaustively, but I say the advocates of the prohibition of pooling can not maintain that these contracts are objectionable under the common law, certainly not that they are illegal at common law; nay, more, I would with confidence stand before the Supreme Court of the United States, or the supreme court of any of the great States of this country, and undertake to maintain that, one thing being assumed, such contracts are legal and would be enforced by the courts, and that one thing to be assumed is that the rates shall be reasonable.

A pooling contract—a contract to apportion between competing roads the competitive business for which reasonable rates have been agreed on—I undertake to say, in my judgment, will be held valid at common law.

I am not unmindful of the general principle that contracts in restraint of trade are held to be illegal—that is, in the sense that they will not be enforced by the courts. I am not unmindful of the fact that combinations wholly to prevent competition in trade would be held illegal by the courts to the extent that they would not be enforced, that courts would say to the parties to such contracts, "these are voluntary agreements of yours; you can get no sanction from the courts, because we think they are against public policy.". That is what is meant when it is said such contracts are illegal.

But contracts in partial restraint of trade have been held to be valid for the last one hundred and sixty years in all the courts of England and America. And I hold that combinations for the partial prevention of competition are governed by the same rules as govern contracts for the restraint of trade, and that contracts only for the partial restraint of competition will never be declared to be illegal and void unless it clearly appears that they are injurious to the public interest. The law of this country is well stated by the commentator in Smith's Leading Cases, commenting on the great case of Mitchell vs. Reynolds, decided, I think, in 1711, thus:

The present doctrine is that while contracts in total restraint of trade are void, yet if the restraints imposed be partial, reasonable, and founded on good consideration they are valid and will be enforced.

And Judge Bradley, of the Supreme Court of the United States, held in that very same language, in a case reported in 20 Wallace, that that was the doctrine of the common law as it exists in this country. You can not, therefore, jump to the conclusion, because a contract for the division and apportionment of freights between competing roads may in some sense to some extent regulate or limit competition, that it is illegal. I undertake to say that, with the exception of one or two cases to which I will allude, in this country there can not be a case found where such contracts have been held to be illegal unless they were for the total prevention of trade within certain limits, or unless they related to the control of a production like coal or iron, as well as the carrying of the same. It depends on whether the prevention aimed at is total, unreasonable, and injurious.

As I said, the common law of England certainly is that such contracts are legal. The common law of England and America is the same. And yet the English courts, law and chancery, each hold just such contracts as it is proposed to declare illegal and criminal to be valid, and enforce them. I want to put this question to the Senate of the United States: England has had as much experience in railroads as we have; it has had the experience of thirty years of legislation it; has experienced all the evils; it has tried all the remedies for abuses; and does the Senate of the United States propose deliberately to-day to say that arrangements which English courts with all this experience hold to be legal and valid shall subject the parties practicing them to criminal penalties of $5,000 a day? I cite from the last legal treatise on railway law, Wood's Railway Law, volume 1, published in 1885. The author is an approved law-writer both in this and other branches of the law. I read from section 207, page 590:

SEC. 207. Pooling arrangements. In England it is held that "pooling" contracts, or arrangements between competing roads by which they agree to divide their joint earnings upon certain classes of business, or even their entire earnings, are legal and valid, where it does not appear that the interests of the shareholders or of the public are prejudiced thereby. But the English authorities upon many questions connected with railway law are hardly safe guides upon similar questions in this country, for the reason that their railway system is essentially different from ours, and such companies are under the direct and immediate supervision of a court of railway commissioners, which by statute is invested with authority to hear complaints and make orders, which relieve the public against any particular oppression or illegal action of the companies; yet upon this question such authorities are entitled to weight, because they are predicated upon the common law, and not upon statutory grounds.

The two leading cases in which the English courts held that such contracts were legal are on all-fours with the contracts which it is proposed to prohibit and make criminal by this bill. One was for a division of earnings; one for a division of traffic between competing roads running between two great points. Now I want to read what, when the case was tried at law, Judge Campbell said to the Court of Queen's Bench:

The question, then, is whether the agreement is void in law.

That agreement was this:

Here two groups of railway companies, being respectively the owners of independent conterminous routes from London to Edinburgh, the west route and the east coast route, agreed to divide the profits of the whole traffic in certain fixed proportions, calculated on the experience of the past course of traffic.

They agreed to divide the whole traffic.

Lord Campbell says:

The question, then, is, whether the agreement is void in law. As it has been clearly settled that an agreement to withdraw opposition to a railway bill for a pecuniary or other consideration is not illegal, the agreement in question would only be void in case it was illegal upon other grounds, such as those suggested on the part of the defendants—that it was injurious to, and therefore in a legal sense a fraud upon, the public or the shareholders. The defendant's counsel contended that it was injurious to the public by giving, in effect, a monopoly to the plaintiffs, and thereby depriving the public of the benefit that might be derived from competition.

That bugbear of free competition was invoked there as here.

If this were so, and the parties proposed by their agreement to endeavor to prevent competition generally, there might be weight in the objection; but the effect of the agreement is only that the one company shall not compete or interfere with the other upon the particular line mentioned in the agreement; this is no more illegal than it would be for two persons engaged in trade to agree that one shall not exercise his trade nor compete with the other within a particular district.

I shall not read further, but I will say that it having been settled that such contracts are valid in England, are held to be not injurious to the public, not against public policy, this law-writer reviewing the whole question of decisions in America comes to this conclusion:

It is believed that, except when prohibited by statute, contracts for "pooling" earnings by rival lines, when made in good faith for self-protection, and which do not result in the creation of a monopoly injurious to the public, are valid and not obnoxious to the charge of being opposed to public policy.

Judge Stevenson Burke (I said I should quote but few railroad authorities, and I quote Judge Burke because he was an eminent judge before he became a railroad man) says:

In England, Parliament has established a railway commission and sanctioned by law contracts of the character and kind under consideration, but before Parliament acted upon this subject the English courts held such contracts valid.

And he closes his argument for the legality of legal pooling contracts in these words:

Many similar quotations might be made, but the single point which I set out to maintain is that such traffic contracts or arrangements honestly and fairly made in the interest of the public and of the shareholders of railway companies, are not only not void as against public policy, but they are in all respects commendable, promotive of public and private interest, and conducive in all respects to the public welfare, and, therefore, of necessity lawful.

Judge Cooley, in a very exhaustive work, from which I have already quoted, "Popular and Legal Views of Traffic Pooling," goes thoroughly into the question. He says:

The suggestion of pooling, though likely, perhaps, to occur anywhere, comes to us from England, where pooling contracts in the railroad business and others of a semi-public nature have been held not to be illegal, both when they were made on the basis of an equal division of profits and where the basis was a division of business between the contracting parties.

Judge Cooley in his argument clearly maintains that such contracts ought not to be held illegal in this country, but he says it is impossible to tell what the courts may do on the subject, as the question is still an open question.

I should not be treating this subject fairly if I did not admit that there were two cases decided in the State of New York in 1847 which seem to be conclusive so far as the law of that State is concerned, and until they are overruled it is there held that such contracts are against public policy and therefore void. Those are the only two cases. They have not escaped criticism. They have been very severely handled by other courts, and it is more than probable that they would not be followed.

I will read what Judge Cooley says about those cases. First, let me say, however, that such contracts when executed have always been held to be good by the courts of the United States. Judge Nelson, in the circuit court in Massachusetts, and Judge Matthews, in the circuit court in Ohio, have explicitly decided that when once executed the law would compel a party who had in his hands any money which, under the contract, should be paid to another party, to pay it over. It may be said that the doctrine of estoppel comes in there, but the doctrine of the legality of contracts was raised in those cases, although it was not specifically passed upon by the judges who decided them. Contracts for the pooling of business and receipts between continuous roads—roads forming a continuous line—have been repeatedly held to be good in this country.

Now, I come to what Judge Cooley says about the two New York cases, referring to the class of cases to which I have just been alluding. He says:

Before either of these cases was decided it had been held by the supreme court of New York (in 1847) that a contract between the proprietors of canal-boats for fixing rates and for a division of net earnings was void, though the object was expressed to be "to establish and maintain fair and uniform rates of freight and to equalize the business of forwarding on the Erie and Oswego Canals among themselves, and to avoid all unnecessary expenses in doing the same." The argument of the court is brief, and is summed up in two short sentences: "The object of this combination was obviously to destroy competition between the several lines in the business engaged in. It was a conspiracy, between the individuals contracting, to prevent a free competition among themselves, in the business of transporting merchandise, property, and passengers upon the public canals." "It is a familiar maxim that competition is the life of trade. It follows that whatever destroys or even relaxes competition in trade is injurious if not fatal to it."

I will not stop to read the decision in the other case because it followed the decision already referred to. Judge Cooley continues:

These cases have not passed entirely without criticism in this country. They were cited to the Supreme Court of Wisconsin not long after they were made, and were there dissented from in very vigorous terms. Referring to the maxim that competition is the life of trade, Judge Howe, speaking for the court, said that it "is one of the least reliable of the host that may be picked up in every market place. It is, in fact, the shibboleth of mere gambling speculation; and is hardly entitled to take rank as an axiom in the jurisprudence of this country. I believe universal observation will attest that for the last quarter of a century competition in the trade has caused more individual distress, if not more public injury, than the want of competition. Indeed, by reducing prices below or raising them above values—as the nature of the trade prompted—competition has done more to monopolize trade, or to secure exclusive advantages in it, than has been done by contract. Rivalry in trade will destroy itself, and rival tradesmen, seeking to remove each other, rarely resort to contract, unless they find it the cheapest mode of putting an end to the strife. And it seems to me not a little remarkable that in the case of Stanton vs. Allen—

In which I did not read the opinion of the court—

it should have been urged against the agreement that its object was to exempt the standard of freights, &c., from the wholesome influence of rivalry and competition. For it is very certain that because of that very purpose—because they did tend to protect the party against the influence of rivalry and competition—courts of law have upheld like agreements in partial restraint of trade ever since the case of Mitchell vs. Reynolds.

Judge Howe was afterward Senator Howe, and I need not say to Senators who served with him that he was an exceptionally good lawyer.

Those New York cases decided in 1847, thus criticised and dissented from by Judge Howe, may have been cited in the English cases; at least they were decided long before the English courts held precisely the opposite doctrine. Those two New York cases are the only ones in this country on which, as it seems to me, any expectation that our courts will hold such contracts illegal can be based.

Contracts for the division of competitive business of railroads, or of the earnings thereof, are not agreements to enhance or depress prices—are not agreements to control production, or the market for certain products—as in case of agreements to limit the output of coal or iron, or the supply of coal, or iron, or salt, or other commodities. Contracts for the apportionment of traffic between competing roads are easily distinguishable from the class of cases to which I have just referred.

I must not omit a dictum of Judge Deady in the circuit court in Oregon upon this very point, for although a dictum it is significant. The case is stated and his opinion quoted in full in the report of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, pages 121, 122.

The State of Oregon passed a law conforming as nearly as the circumstances of the case would admit—that is, as State jurisdiction would admit—to what is known as the Reagan bill in Congress. It was called in Oregon the "Hoult law." A receiver who was to manage a road in Oregon went to Judge Deady, of the circuit court, to know what he was to do in view of that law.

The Senators from Oregon will recollect the case undoubtedly. Judge Deady was the judge who held the court to which the receiver applied. He said that, as regarded this matter of not making any pooling arrangements, he did not think that the law was applicable, because the roads which the receiver was managing were not "different and competing roads," the language being the same which is used in this conference report bill, but that one was a supporting road to the other, and therefore he did not think that the receiver need trouble himself as to what the construction of that clause of the statute should be. But he said more—he went out of the way to say it, showing what Judge Deady would decide when such a contract was brought before him:

Pooling freights or dividing earnings is resorted to by rival and competing lines of railway as a means of avoiding the cutting of rates, which, if persisted in, must result in corporate suicide. It is not apparent how a division of the earnings of two such roads can concern or affect the public so long as the rate of transportation on them is reasonable.

Sound common sense, if not sound law. I apprehend it will be found to be sound law.

But I want to refer to the report of this very Committee on Interstate Commerce on the subject of pooling. It is not very long since this report was made. What did the Committee on Interstate Commerce think on this subject as to whether pooling should be prohibited under criminal penalties? When they reported the bill originally to the Senate, on page 200 of the report, they said:

In view, however, of the active competition which exists at the great commercial centers, the successful enforcement of legislation requiring the operation of the entire transportation system upon a basis of fixed rates would seem to depend upon a general predetermination of the rates to be established by the carriers interested. It seems necessary, therefore—

"Necessary," the committee said then—to leave a way open by which such agreements can be made, in order to avoid the constant friction that would otherwise be occasioned.

They said it in view of this very bill and of its provisions, which it is now claimed may do away perhaps with the necessity of pooling.

If competition is to have full sway, as it does now, the constant changes it would necessitate would render it impossible to maintain fixed rates, just as it is now. It should be understood, therefore, that a statute requiring the posting of rates and prohibiting changes without notice must of necessity operate in restraint of competition if enforced.

I commend to those who believe that competition must not be interfered with, what this committee say on the subject of competition:

It would not destroy the benefits of legitimate competition, but it would place a wholesome restraint upon reckless competition, and in that way lessen unjust discrimination, which is developed in its most objectionable forms under the nourishing influence of unrestricted competition.

* * * * * * *

But, in any event—

They go on to say—

the evils to be attributed to pooling are not those which most need correction, and, if agreements between carriers should prove necessary to the success of a system of established and public rates, it would seem wiser to permit such agreements rather than, by prohibiting them, to render the enforcement and maintenance of agreed rates impracticable. The majority of the committee are not disposed to endanger the success of the methods of regulation proposed for the prevention of unjust discrimination by recommending the prohibition of pooling, but prefer to leave that subject for investigation by a commission when the effects of the legislation herein suggested shall have been developed and made apparent.

The majority of the committee when this report was made believed that to prohibit pooling would endanger the success of the methods of regulation proposed in the bill. What new light has dawned since? How is it that the views of the minority of that committee come now to be the recommendation of a majority of the conference upon the bill? There is but one answer, and that is, that what has been believed to be a wise principle has been surrendered for the sake of not imperiling legislation on this subject.

I have taken the testimony of the witnesses before the Interstate Commerce Committee; I have analyzed the testimony of two hundred of them who testified on the subject of pooling, and with what result? About three-fourths of the witnesses examined say: "Do not prohibit-but legalize pooling." I agree that a good many of them were rail, road men, men of vast experience in railroad business. I agree that some of them were men like Mr. Albert Fink and Mr. George R. Blanchard, men like President King of the Erie Railroad, and other railroad presidents, some then being in and some being out of the business.

I agree that they were unanimous in favor of legalizing pooling arrangements, but I do not ask you to rely upon their opinion, not that I think a man's judgment becomes impaired or warped necessarily because he is a railroad president or manager, not because I think he has become dishonest, not because I have not respect for him myself, but because I know that whatever a railroad president may say in this country, no matter how justly it reflects the light of his experience, will go for nothing with a certain portion of the people. But every railroad commissioner and every ex-railroad commissioner who testified before the committee, with one single exception, said, "Do not prohibit, but legalize and regulate pooling." A large proportion of shippers and business men said the same.

Now, take the one-fourth of the witnesses (about that proportion) who said, "prohibit." Mark this fact. Out of the two hundred about one hundred and fifty men said, "do not prohibit, but legalize." Among the fifty men, more or less, who said, "prohibit," there are not three to be found who claimed that pools resulted in unreasonably high rates, and it was manifest that they did not know very much about it when they claimed it. The reasons given were diverse. The reasons of the witnesses who wish to have pooling prohibited may be divided in this way, and about equally divided:

First, pooling prevents competition.

Second, it encourages the building of new railroads.

Third, it produces unjust discrimination.

The latter may be dismissed; for surely we cannot strike at pools because unjust discriminations have been the result of not observing the pooling contract. What we propose to do in the future, if investigation shall develop that to be the wisest thing, is to legalize and to regulate pools. That will compel their observance, and I undertake to say that there was never discrimination in this country by parties to a pooling contract when the contract was observed. It is only when the contract is broken that the discrimination comes. We lay aside, then, that objection; it is not a valid objection. The fact is that the non-observance of the practice results in discrimination.

Then these two reasons—one that they prevent competition and one that they encourage the building of new railroads—do not agree very well, because the building of new railroads is competition, the fiercest kind of competition, the worst kind of competition, competition which the Government, if it had the power, ought to put its hand upon; and everybody who will think a moment about it will agree with me in this.

Take this instance: Here are two railroads, we will say—I do not know whether there are, if not there soon will be—between here and New York. We will say, for illustration, that each one of them cost $10,000,000 to build. What is the result? There is so much business between Washington and New York. That business must pay, if the railroad is to be fairly remunerative—and I apprehend it is for the welfare of this whole country that railroads should be fairly remunerative—that business must pay enough to pay operating expenses, all fixed charges on both roads, and reasonable dividends upon the stock capital of each road. Say it is $20,000,000, each road costing $10,000,000, and all represented in capital stock, so that after the operating expenses and fixed charges are paid it takes $800,000 to pay an 8 per cent. dividend on the stock of each. Then you have got to have out of that business, net, $1,600,000.

Now, suppose another ten million dollar road is built between here and New York, what then? That is competition. Competition must not be restrained, no matter in what form it comes. What is the result? There is another ten million dollar capital on which $800,000 more must be paid, in dividends, in addition to paying the operating expenses, and fixed charges out of a business which could just as well have been done by the two roads. There is no more ruinous kind of competition in the world, none more against the public welfare, than the building of competing railroads where none are needed. It is that evil which has led to the necessity of these contracts for the apportionment of competitive business.

But about a third of these, fifty men out of the two hundred, who said prohibit pooling, put it on the ground that it was against public policy to restrain competition, that the pooling contracts were in restraint of competition, and therefore they were against public policy and should be declared criminal.

As I have suggested, there is a class of people in this country who hold that any competition between railroads is for the public interest. It comes from men usually who want this whole railroad question to revolve around their city or their farm, or their store, their mine, their manufactory, or their bank. There are men who would be glad to have their wheat and their cattle and their coal carried for nothing. There are shippers who would rejoice to get secret rates, or pass-rates, if I may use the word, for their freight, and they welcome all competition which puts down prices to unremunerative points. Such individuals gain by such competition, but it is to the injury of every other citizen of the United States; it is to the demoralization of all business; it is the breaking down of all business honesty and lawful trade. There is a competition which is worse than the combination and co-operation of railroads.

I said I assumed in discussing these pooling contracts that the rates were always reasonable, and I challenge proof or fact to show that a competitive rate in this country is unreasonable unless it be relatively so. I agree that there are some cities which say they do not get as low rates as others do in proportion, but that would be a matter for a commission to fix. However, on a question of what is reasonable in any man's estimation, I challenge denial when I say that the competitive rates, the rates for competitive business in this country, are not unreasonably high. Indeed, all rates have gone down under pooling arrangements, both competitive rates and local rates. It is not true, as the petitions presented this morning stated, that pooling makes excessive rates, any more than it is true that it makes unjust discrimination.

There is a world of figures which might be introduced for the purpose of proving the fact that under pooling arrangements all kinds of rates have steadily on the average diminished in this country. I remember in the testimony before the Interstate Commerce Committee that question came up as to the Union Pacific. It was admitted that the through rate, the competitive rate, was as low, perhaps, as could be asked. It was shown that it had been going down steadily, year by year, until the managers of the road said they did not know what they were going to do. But it was urged that the local rate had not been reduced as the competitive rate had been reduced. The superintendent of that road, by figures, showed that about the same ratio of reduction had taken place in local freight as in competitive freight.

I take a single table, which I propose to put into my remarks, and only one, and to get it I confess that I called upon the terrible trunk-line commission in New York. I asked them to answer one question, and they did. I say that because it is headed, "Trunk Line Commission, New York, December 29, 1886."

TRUNK LINE COMMISSION, New York, December 29, 1886.

Statement showing the average earnings per ton per mile by the following roads during the years 1876 and 1885; also showing decrease in earnings per ton per mile during 1885 as compared with 1876.

Road.	1876.	1885.	Decrease in 1885.
	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
New York Central and Hudson River	1.051	0.680	0.371
New York, Lake Erie and Western	1.099	0.656	0.443
Pennsylvania	0.892	0.627	0.265
Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago	0.930	0.580	0.350
Lake Shore and Michigan Southern	0.817	0.553	0.264
Michigan Central	0.878	0.560	0.318
Average six roads	0.957	0.625	0.332

It is not competitive business alone, mind you, that this table refers to. It is all the business of these roads, competitive and non-competitive, through and local, the New York Central and Hudson River, the New York, Lake Erie and Western, the Pennsylvania, the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne and Chicago, the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern, and the Michigan Central. I take those roads because they are roads most directly interested in the movement of freight between New York and Chicago. There are other roads in what is called the trunk-line commission, but these are the ones which I think fairly illustrate the influence of pooling managements upon the price of freight.

From this table it will be seen that the average earnings per ton per mile, or what is the same, the average charges per ton per mile of these roads in 1876 was 9½ mills, almost 1 cent per ton per mile; while in 1885, the time during which this trunk-line commission has been in operation, the average had been reduced to 6¼ mills per ton per mile upon all the business of these roads, competitive, non-competitive, through and local, and the reduction is equal to 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. PLUMB. Can the Senator supplement that statement by saying how evenly that reduced rate was distributed among the transporters on the various lines of railroads?

Mr. PLATT. Of course I can not. I am not saying that there are not abuses in railway management, but I say that you will not reach them by declaring these pooling contracts criminal. I say pooling contracts are in aid of remedying the abuses of which you complain, and I shall show it before I get through, if I have not already shown it.

I might turn the attention of Senators to the statement of Mr. Edward Atkinson in the Century for the present month, where he gives in a table the charge per ton per mile for moving merchandise over the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad in each year from 1855 to 1885. In 1855 it was 3¼ cents per ton per mile in gold. In 1885 it was $6\frac{5}{10}$ mills per ton per mile. This, of course, includes non-competitive as well as competitive business.

I do not deny that discriminations exist. It is one of the reasons why this bill should be passed. Discriminations exist in spite of pools by the breaking of pooling contracts, not by the observance of them. Do not, in the name of common sense, declare that criminal which has for its end the purpose which you avow is one of the main purposes of the bill.

I want to look this bugbear of so-called free competition, which it is claimed must not be limited, in the eyes for a few minutes. I have heard the maxim that "competition is the life of trade." I have heard much talk of the so-called law of nature and social life and economic life, "the law of competition and the survival of the fittest." In the sense in which they are invoked, I deny and repudiate them both. There is a competition which is not lawful, which is not legal, which is not honest. There is a competition which degenerates from true competition, and becomes simply war and strife—war carried on and conducted upon the old maxim that "all is fair in love and war." If by "competition and the survival of the fittest" is meant competition and destruction of the weakest, I say it is anti-Christian; it is anti-republican. I say that that kind of competition which results in the destruction of the weakest, the survival of the fittest, if permitted, would lapse us into barbarism. It would be the old pagan idea—the old despotic idea—that "might makes right;" that men are ruled by the strong hand, and not by regard for the moral law. It is expressed in that common phrase, "Every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost." Talk about such competition being demanded on the grounds of public policy! The sooner Governments put an end to such competition the sooner humanity will be free to advance along that upward pathway by which it is to reach its final glorious elevation; the sooner Governments will come to that beneficent standard designed by the Creator for the happiness of mankind.

I shall show pretty soon that you cannot stop competition. Pooling arrangements do not tend to stop it. Their only province is to regulate it. The regulation of competition is not only not against public policy, but is really in furtherance of the public welfare. But I wish to verify what I have been saying by reference to the opinions of some other men. As I said, I am not going to quote railroad men, except in one instance, on this subject. I want to quote on the subject of what competition is, this free competition which it is said must not be prevented by pooling contracts—on the subject of what it is and what it accomplishes, I wish to quote some men who I think will be listened to in the Senate even if I am not. I quote from the report of Messrs. Thurman, Washburne, and Cooley, constituting an advisory commission on differential rates by railroads between the West and the seaboard. I think no man will accuse Mr. Thurman of being a subsidized railroad attorney, or Mr. Washburne, or Mr. Cooley, and I think what they have to say on this subject of competition will have some weight.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the date of that?

Mr. PLATT. The date of this is 1882. They say:

We have found, however, in the course of our investigations, that a species of competition has prevailed from time to time which has brought satisfaction to few persons, if any, and which has resulted in inequalities and disorders greatly detrimental to trade. Such competition exists when the railroad companies, or those who are permitted to solicit business and to make contracts on their behalf, set out with the determination to withdraw freights from their rivals and secure them for themselves at all hazards and regardless of gain or loss; and when acting upon this determination they throw to the winds all settled rates, and in the desperate strife for business offer any inducement in their power which will secure it. The country not long since had experience of such a season, and everywhere we listened to complaints of the injury which legitimate business suffered from it.

Again—

Under such circumstances persons were favored, and localities were favored, when the object to be immediately accomplished seemed to require it—regardless of the just maxims of legitimate business, and of the rules of the common law, which enjoin upon common carriers that they shall deal with all customers upon principles of equity and relative fairness. Legitimate business, it was said, necessarily passes into an unsettled and speculative state while this condition of things exists; safe and close calculations are impossible; transportation becomes cheap, but neither producer nor consumer is certain to reap the profit, for the middleman can not calculate upon the steadiness in low rates, and as he takes the risk of their being raised upon him, so he is in the best position to appropriate the benefit while they continue. Meantime, railroad profits disappear, and dividends cease to be paid, to the great distress of thousands who rely upon them for their living; and every interest in any degree dependent on railroad prosperity must participate in the depression and disaster which accompanies the ownership of railroad shares.

The mere statement of these results is sufficient to show that this is not what in other business is known and designated as competition. Competition is the life of trade, but this is its destruction; competition brings health and vigor, and secures equality and fairness, but this paralyzes strength and makes contracts a matter of secrecy and double dealing.

In the light of that are you going to declare as criminal these contracts, these arrangements, which nobody will deny have been resorted to by the railroads simply for the purpose of preventing this kind of competition described by Judge Thurman and Washburne and Cooley?

I am going to venture to quote a little from what Mr. Charles Francis Adams says on the subject of competition. He is a railroad president. Do not believe him if you do not want to, but I quote him because before he became a railroad president he was a most approved student of the railroad problem from a scientific standpoint. Now, in the light of his added experience, if you please, he said, in an argument before the Committee on Commerce of the United States House of Representatives on the bills to regulate interstate railroad traffic:

What, then, is this mysterious underlying cause of which the railroad abuses I have referred to as so notorious are the outward manifestations? With all possible confidence I assert that it is excessive and unregulated railroad competition. This, and nothing else. In saying what I am about to say, let me first premise that I have no intention of making myself ridiculous to you by attempting any general attack on the great laws of trade. I fully recognize their efficiency; and, as respects railroads, I concede at once all the wonderful results that have been accomplished through the free operation in this country of the particular law of competition. But all that has nothing to do with the present question. Competition is a great thing, but it works in rough ways. In other words, every abuse in the railroad system, so far as the interstate commerce of this country is concerned, can be shown to be the direct, the logical, the inevitable outcome of unregulated and desperate competition, and a mere outward skin symptom of it.

Oh, yes, prohibit these arrangements by which the railroads seek to prevent this illegitimate competition, declare them criminal, if you will, but do it with your eyes open.

I wish to take Mr. Nimmo's report and see what he says about it. Mr. Nimmo has made this an eight years' study. If anybody wants to get full information on the history and effect of pooling all he has to do is to read Mr. Nimmo's reports. He will find an almost exhaustless storehouse of facts. Mr. Nimmo says:

During the struggles referred to success waited upon intrigue and false representations. The freight agents deceived the merchants, and the merchants deceived the freight agents. For several years the railroad transportation interests of the country ran at loose ends. The contest, being carried on independently of leadership and without method, lost the name of competition and ended in demoralization.

And to-day it may be said that in some parts of this country, owing to the non-observance of apportionment contracts, just that condition of things exists which calls most loudly for the interposition of legislation.

Going on, Mr. Nimmo says:

It appears hardly necessary to observe that such a contest, involving results in the highest degree detrimental to the interests of productive industry, of commerce, and of transportation, had in it none of those conservative elements of legitimate competition which attach to ownership and to personal responsibility for results.

Let me quote a gentleman whom I regard to be the most thoroughly informed student of the railroad problem in the United States, a man who is beyond the suspicion of having an interest in railroads, a man who is so close to the industrial interests of this country that he was selected as labor commissioner of the State of Connecticut. I refer to Professor Hadley, of Yale College. I wish to read a little of what he says about this kind of competition. I read from the May number of The Popular Science Monthly, from an article entitled "The Difficulties of Railroad Regulation:"

While railroad competition has been in some respects a beneficent force it cannot be trusted to act unchecked. To the business community regularity and publicity of rates are more important than mere average cheapness. Business can adjust itself to high rates easier than to fluctuating ones. And railroad competition of necessity makes rates fluctuate. It tends to bring them down to the level of operating expenses regardless of fixed charges. If it acts everywhere as in the case of the New York Central and West Shore it leaves little or nothing to pay fixed charges, and means ruin to the investor, followed by consolidation. If it acts at some points and not at others, those points which have the benefit of competition have rates based on operating expenses, while the less fortunate points pay the fixed charges. Then we have discrimination in a dangerous form.

As long as competition exists, there is no escape from this alternative. If it exists at all points, it means ruin; if it exists at some points, it means discrimination.

I read from Professor Hadley's book on Railroad Transportation, published in 1886, a book which I commend to every student of the railroad question. Referring to combinations to prevent competition, mainly of combinations among laborers, and incidentally of combinations by way of pools to prevent indiscriminate and illegal railroad competitions, he says:

While the experiments in State socialism have been so often bad, there has been a tendency in a great many cases to go too far to the opposite extreme, and to call everything bad which restricted competition in any way.

That is the only ground upon which you propose to make these pooling contracts illegal.

Courts and legislators have tried to stop the growth of industrial monopoly by shutting their eyes to industrial facts. They have tried to prohibit such combinations altogether, the courts saying that they would not enforce contracts in restraint of trade, the legislators trying to render it illegal to make such contracts.

They could not stop such combinations because they were a necessity of business. The result of trying to prohibit them was what always happens when you try to prohibit a necessity; the worse features of the system were intensified. Secret combination was substituted for open; short-sighted and arbitrary policy was encouraged. By prohibiting the whole system the courts deprived themselves of the power of dealing with specific evils, such as secret favors or arbitrary discriminations.

I repeat what I said a little while ago: the only competition which these contracts for the apportionment of competitive business seek to prevent is the competition which discriminates between individuals, by which railroads cheat one another, and by which they violate the common law of England and America.

Competition in railroad transportation differs from every other kind of competition in the world. I do not say that it is not to be judged by the same legal rule, but I say in essence and in character it is different from competition in any other business. In the first place, it is not competition in trade. The railroad buys nothing of the producer; it sells nothing to the consumer. It simply carries—it distributes; that is all. Contracts in restraint of trade may operate the same with reference to contracts between common carriers as between merchants; but the two kinds of business differ in character. It differs from every other business, because whatever the result of the competition and the rivalry the railroad stays. Ricardo is a great advocate of the doctrine that competition is the life of trade; but he writes from a banker's standpoint. In banking, capital is circulatory. If competition drives it out of the banking business it may go into the manufacturing business. But the railroad stays, whatever the result of the competition. If "competition and the survival of the fittest" means the physical removal of the weakest, the pretended law is inapplicable, for you can not remove the railroad. When its iron rails are laid down from point to point, there it stays; and however many companies may be bankrupted by competition, there stands another company ready to take its place and to be bankrupted in turn. It is not so on the highways. It is not so on the water-ways. If two rival coach proprietors disagree and one is bankrupted, the coaches can go elsewhere and run on other roads. If rival steamboat lines disagree and by competition one is bankrupted, the boats can go elsewhere. The world is full of free highways, but the railroad is not a free highway.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he wishes to conclude his remarks this evening or would he prefer to finish them to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLATT. I would prefer to finish to-morrow if I could do so.

Mr. HARRIS. I move then, if the Senator from Connecticut yields for that purpose, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-three minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, January 6, at 12 o'clock m.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I am directed by the Committee on Railways and Canals to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. 1577) for the permanent improvement of the Erie and Oswego Canals, and to secure the freedom of the same to the commerce of the United States.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1577). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue and deliver to the State of New York, and to take the receipt of the comptroller of said State therefor, coupon or registered bonds of the United States to the amount of $5,000,000, in denominations of not less than $100 each, or so much thereof as may be necessary to make the permanent improvements upon the Erie and Oswego Canals, in said State, hereinafter mentioned. Said bonds shall bear interest at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and shall, with the interest, be payable in coin. They shall be redeemable at the pleasure of the Government at any time after ten years from their date, and due at the expiration of fifty years from their date.

SEC. 2. That said bonds shall not be issued or delivered until the said State of New York shall, by act or joint resolution of its Legislature, have pledged itself that, after the delivery of said bonds, said canals shall be maintained by said State free to the commerce of the United States, and shall forever be free for the use of the United States Government from any toll or other charge whatever for any property or vessels of the United States Government or persons in its service passing through the same, and that in case at any time said canals shall cease to be free to the commerce of the United States, the said State will repay to the United States the said $5,000,000, or so much thereof as may be paid to said State.

SEC. 3. That said bonds shall be so issued and delivered to the State of New York to reimburse it for any and all expenditures it may make or may have made since January 1, 1886, in improving the said canals by furnishing a depth of 9 feet of water, excepting over culverts and aqueducts (over which the depth shall be 8 feet), throughout their entire lengths, and by lengthening one tier of all their locks to double their present length, with the exception of those at Lockport; and that said bonds, or so many thereof as may be necessary, shall be so issued and delivered upon the completion of said improvement, and after said State shall have complied with the provisions of the second section of this act, upon presentation to the Secretary of the Treasury of a requisition of the governor of said State, accompanied by the certificate of its comptroller, State engineer, and superintendent of public works, certifying the completion of said improvement and the cost thereof.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will it not be in order to have the report read?

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. It can be read in the time of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WEBER. I ask that the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WEBER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Railways and Canals, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1577) to provide for the permanent improvement of the Erie and Oswego Canals and to secure the freedom of the same to the commerce of the United States, beg leave to submit the following report:

The Erie and Oswego Canals are located in the State of New York, and are links of vital importance in the great water-route system, by the aid of which there has been wrought the marvelous prosperity and growth of the United States during the past half century. Their influence in the past as agencies to people our prairies and to build thousands of thriving cities is clearly established by the statistics of trade, and their influence to-day as regulators of the transportation charges of nearly the entire country is attested by authority the fairness and conclusiveness of which is beyond dispute.

Senator Windom, as chairman of the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, in his very able report to the United States Senate in 1873, and again later in a masterly speech in the United States Senate in 1878, on the same subject, says:

"The chief instrumentalities by means of which those (competitive) forces will exert their power are the Mississippi River on the one side and the northern water routes on the other. * * * Both routes constitute indispensable parts of one grand system. * * * Each is needed to regulate the other and both as regulators of railway charges. Each has some advantages which the other lacks, and some impediment which the other has not; but on the whole their trade forces, commercial facilities, and economic capacity for cheap transportation will be so evenly balanced as to insure a healthy, active, and permanent competition.

* * * "But the competitive power and influence of the two great contestants (the water and railroad lines) will not be limited to any one locality, but will extend to nearly every State in the Union, and will hold in check and regulate the charges on every railroad from the interior to the seaboard. The wide sweep of competitive influence exerted by the Erie Canal is not generally understood or appreciated. You would doubtless be surprised, Mr. President, if I told you that the 'little ditch' which runs through your State holds in check and regulates nearly every leading railroad east of the Mississippi River, and that it exerts a marked influence on the cost of transportation over all the country extending from the interior of the Gulf States to the Saint Lawrence River, and from the great plains of the eastern foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains to the Atlantic Ocean. And yet such is the fact.

"Lest it may be thought that my enthusiasm on this subject has betrayed me into an exaggeration, I will give you the words of Mr. Albert Fink, a gentleman who has no prejudice in favor of water transportation, but whose ability and experience as a railroad manager is recognized everywhere. Mr. Fink has given more attention to the philosophy of transportation and written more wisely in regard to it than any other man in the United States. * * * I quote:

"'OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER, No. 346 BROADWAY,
"'New York, May 3, 1878.

"'DEAR SIR: In your letter of April 29 you ask me to explain the effect of the opening of navigation on the lakes upon rates of transportation charged by the railroads extending from the West to the interior Gulf States. You are aware that when the rates are reduced between Chicago and New York on account of the opening of the canal this reduction applies not only from Chicago, but from all interior cities (Saint Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati) to New York. If that were not the rule the result would be that the roads running, say, from Saint Louis, Indianapolis, and Cincinnati to Chicago would carry the freight to Chicago, from which point low rail or water rates would take it to the East and leave the direct railroad routes from these interior points to the seaboard without any business. Hence, whenever the rates are reduced on account of the opening of navigation from Chicago and the lake ports, the same reduction is made from all interior cities, not only to New York, where the canal runs, but also to Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore. Although the latter cities have no direct water communication with the West, yet they receive the benefit as far as low railroad rates are concerned, to the same extent as if a canal was actually running from the lakes direct to those cities, because whenever rates from Chicago to New York are reduced, it becomes absolutely necessary to reduce correspondingly the rates from Chicago to Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; otherwise these cities could do no business, as it would all go to New York.

"'The reduction of the rates from Chicago and Saint Louis to New York, Baltimore, &c., reduces the rates on shipments from western points via New York, Baltimore, and ocean to the Southern Atlantic ports, to Norfolk, Wilmington, Port Royal, Savannah, Brunswick, Fernandina, &c., and from there into the interior Atlantic Gulf States by rail or water routes to Augusta, Atlanta, Macon, Montgomery, Selma, Houston, &c. The railroads running direct from Chicago and Saint Louis, via Louisville, Nashville, and Chattanooga to the same points are obliged to follow the reductions made via the rail and ocean routes, and which reductions were primarily made on account of the existence of the Erie Canal and the opening of navigation; it follows, therefore, that the Erie Canal influences the rates of transportation from Chicago, Saint Louis, Cincinnati, &c., to the interior of the Gulf States.

"'The same is true in relation to the west-bound freight. When rates are reduced from New York to Chicago the roads from New York to Louisville reduce their rates on shipments made by way of Louisville to Memphis, Nashville, Montgomery, Selma, &c., and the direct Southern transportation lines from New York via Norfolk, Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, &c., have to reduce their rates to meet those made by the Northern lines to the same points, and vice versa.

"'It appears from the above statement that the Erie Canal and the lakes exercise their influence over the Southern country until it reaches a line where low ocean rates from New York to the Gulf cities—Mobile, New Orleans and Galveston—exercise their influence upon the rates to the adjacent interior points, to Augusta, Macon, Selma, Montgomery, Houston, &c., so that it may be said that all the rail rates are kept in check by water transportation.

"'There need be no fear that extortionate rates will be charged by railroad companies; on the contrary, the fear is that water competition will be so effective as to prevent railroads from securing paying rates.

"'Very truly, yours,
"'ALBERT FINK.

VALUE OF SAVING EFFECTED BY CHEAPENING TRANSPORTATION.

Our exports for the year ending June 30, 1885, of breadstuffs reduced to measure were 193,749,351 bushels. A saving in transportation of 2 cents per bushel upon this amount, which it is believed the improvements contemplated by the pending bill will effect, will amount to $3,874,987.02, and, with the same gain upon merchandise going westward, the outside sum provided in the bill for a work national in its benefits and permanent in its character will be saved in a single season.

Mr. Dodge, statistician to the Department of Agriculture, furnished the following estimate of grain affected by cheapening canal transportation:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, D. C., January 26, 1885.

SIR: The conclusion of our work of revision of estimates enables me to give the amount of grain affected abstractly by the cheapening of canal freights from Buffalo west to the Missouri. The product is thus given:

States.	Bushels.	States.	Bushels.
West Virginia	3,318,000	Iowa	31,270,000
Kentucky	13,425,000	Missouri	27,500,000
Ohio	41,186,000	Kansas	34,990,000
Michigan	29,772,000	Nebraska	28,325,000
Indiana	33,745,000	Dakota	22,330,000
Illinois	32,374,000
Wisconsin	20,083,000	Total	359,625,000
Minnesota	41,307,000

On the amount, as above given by Mr. Dodge, 1 cent per bushel would give $3,500,000 for distribution between the farmers and consumers.

THE NECESSITY OF CHEAPENING TRANSPORTATION.

For the year ending June 30, 1885, our total exports reached the sum of $726,682,946. Of this total cotton and breadstuffs furnished $374,169,875, or more than one-half. How to continue this absorption of our surplus products in the face of the rapidly growing competition of the eastern countries bids fair to become, if it be not already, one of the gravest questions to be considered. The comprehensive commercial system of Great Britian should not in admiration of its vastness blind us to the significance of her steady advances. She is energetically and persistently pursuing a policy of internal development of her dependencies, so that she may feed and furnish the raw materials with which to clothe her subjects and control the manufactures of the world. With one-seventh of the land surface of the globe and one-fourth of the population of the earth under her control, she rests uneasily under her present dependence upon other countries for her vast food supplies and the raw cotton for her factories. An examination of the statistics will show that this is no idle alarm, and wise statesmanship suggests the use of every means in our power by internal improvements to avert the threatened danger.

In this connection the following extracts from the report of Consul-General Cramer, dated February 12, 1885, are worthy of attention:

"Thus the export of wheat from India to Europe is annually increasing. The same is the case as to the export of wheat from Southern Russia. It has been estimated by competent authority that India will soon be, if it is not already, able to export annually about 320,000,000 bushels of wheat.

"The cost of producing wheat in India (although in a rather primitive method) is estimated to be from 8 to 9 cents per bushel, while in Dakota it is estimated to be 18 to 19½ cents.

"The cost of transportation from Bombay to England is calculated to be about 4½ cents per bushel, and from Kurrachee 2 cents more. This calculation was made before the Suez Canal dues had been reduced, which were rather high, and there is a probability that they will be entirely abolished on wheat. The Government of India contemplates constructing a railroad net of about 15,000 miles, at from 3 to 3½ per cent. interest on the money required. In England and India grain elevators and grain cars are being constructed to facilitate transportation, while plows specially adapted for Indian soil are made in and shipped from England to India. All this will cheapen the production and transportation of wheat for the European market. Of course, Switzerland will derive the same benefits therefrom as England.

"The inferences to be drawn from all this are obvious. India wheat will become, or is already, a strong competitor with American wheat in the markets of Europe.

"South America and Australia are also booming up as competitors with the United States in the wheat markets of the world. They were formerly our customers in this respect, while at present they are expected to have a surplus of wheat of about 25,000,000 bushels.

* * * * * * *

"These are hard facts, and it behooves our wheat growers and wheat exporters to look them fairly and squarely in the face and govern their actions accordingly."

* * * * * * *

In 1870 India exported of wheat 145,988 bushels. In 1884 this comparatively insignificant amount had grown to over 39,000,000 bushels, and for the present statistical year, embracing the latest reports, the figures show for eight months an export of nearly 30,000,000 bushels.

With improved machinery, improved methods of raising, which experience will develop, with farm labor at eight to nine cents per day, she needs but cheapness of transportation and better facilities for handling to make her products an important factor in the markets of Europe, where our surplus must meet in competition, and to do which we must depend upon the reduction of transportation to the lowest possible figure. Neither can we afford to rest upon a supposed superiority of the quality of our wheat products, for careful tests show that, with a proper mixture with other wheats, that of India yields from five and a half to eight and a half per cent. more flour than American spring wheat.

THE EFFECT OF THE REDUCTION OF WATER TRANSPORTATION UPON THE NATION'S PROSPERITY.

The following tables, taken from the reports on trade and navigation of the General Government by Mr. Nimmo, show the balance of trade against us before tolls were cut down, and the balance in our favor since the low-tolls and no-tolls policy was adopted:

The reasons for this great change in our favor will be seen by looking at the changes in freight rates during the past seventeen years, average freight charges per bushel for transportation of wheat from Chicago to New York since the year 1868, and also canal tolls.

* Including Buffalo transfer charges and tolls.

This is a great improvement over the $100 per ton charged for transportation from Albany to Buffalo before the completion of the canal.

The following extracts are from Mr. Nimmo's report of 1884 on foreign commerce:

"The reduction in the average rates of transportation by lake and canal from 24.54 cents per bushel in 1868 to 6.60 cents per bushel in 1884, in the rates by lake and rail from 29 cents per bushel in 1868 to 9.3 cents per bushel in 1884, and in the 'all-rail' rates from 42.6 cents per bushel in 1868 to 15.5 cents during the year 1884, was the direct result of the sharp competition which prevailed between competing railroads, and between the railroads and the water line formed by the lakes, the Erie Canal, and the Hudson River. Each transportation line has exerted a regulating influence over every other transportation line, and this competition has strongly tended to reduce freight charges.

* * * * * * *

"The completion of the Erie Canal in 1826 was the first important measure whereby the vast agricultural resources of the States and Territories situated west of the seaboard States were placed in direct communication with Atlantic sea-ports. The value of the exports of breadstuffs and provisions from the United States increased from $8,374,483 in 1826 to $73,664,431 in 1856."

In 1885 they have increased to $267,703,277. Thirty years ago our largest lake craft for transporting freight did not exceed 20,000 bushels, or 600 tons. Now 100,000 bushels or 3,000 tons is the maximum. Then the depth on the Saint Clair Flats was 9½ feet; now it is 16 feet. The depths, according to General Poe, have been to 1858, 9½ feet; to 1871, 12 feet; to 1874, 13 feet, and to the present time, 16 feet.

The proposed canal enlargement and improvement it is estimated will reduce the cost of transportation 2 cents per bushel, and bring it down to so low a figure that no further expectation of reduction can reasonably be indulged in.

WHY NEW YORK CAN NOT BE EXPECTED TO UNDERTAKE THE WORK AT STATE EXPENSE.

Several hundred miles of tributary canals have been grafted upon the trunk lines of the Erie, and every movement looking to the improvement of the main canals becomes complicated by arousing the jealousies of local interests connected with the lateral canals. All tolls were removed in 1882, and since the beginning of the season of 1883 the canals are free to the nation, while their care and maintenance fall upon the tax-payers of New York. This maintenance, embracing only absolutely necessary and ordinary repairs, amounts to about $800,000 annually, and until the canal debt of the State is extinguished about as much more is annually required to provide for that. For the present year the estimates of the comptroller of the State of New York require the levying of a tax for canal purposes of $1,702,102.30.

This burden the people of the State can not reasonably be expected to add to by undertaking the enlargement without which the canals are likely to fall into disuse or be abandoned to private corporations. Only eighteen of the sixty counties of the State border on the Erie and Oswego Canals, and the hostile sentiment of the people off the line of the canals should not be permitted development by increase of burdens, lest this outlet of the great grain fields of the West and Northwest and this controller and regulator of the transportation interests of the country be strangled by the railroad monopolies of the land.

For the year ending December 31, 1885, there was delivered at New York of flour, grain, and meal (excepting beans and buckwheat), reduced to measure, 126,637,431 bushels, by the following routes:

Routes.	Bushels.	Per cent. of total by each route.

In a commercial sense these canals originally were largely local in character, but gradually and regularly they have been changing, and are now of national benefit and importance. In 1836 the Western States furnished us but one-seventh of the total tonnage, while in 1882 seven-eighths of it came from the West, as the following tables will show. Also table of tolls collected, showing amount of revenue relinquished, the benefit of seven-eighths of which falls to the West, as per statement:

During the calendar year 1885 the west-bound freight received at Buffalo was 494,280 tons.

The bill provides for the issuing by the Secretary of the Treasury of bonds bearing 2½ per cent. interest, to an amount not exceeding $5,000,000, to be delivered to the State of New York upon the completion of certain improvements therein specified; and after the State has pledged itself that said canals shall be maintained by said State free to the commerce of the United States, or in the event that these canals shall cease to be free to the commerce of the United States, the State will repay so much as shall have been so received.

Believing that, from a commercial point of view, these canals are national in character, that their beneficial influences, directly and indirectly, are and will be felt and shared by a very great portion of our interests and people, the committee recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment, viz:

On page 2, section 2, line 5, between the word "States" and the word "and," insert the words "from any toll or other charge whatever."

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration is for the permanent improvement of the Erie and Oswego canals of the State of New York, and to secure the freedom of the same to the commerce of the United States.

It is proposed to submit some facts, figures, and arguments that may induce an examination of a subject which, sooner or later, in some shape or proposition, will come here for disposal.

One of the provisions of the bill requires from the State of New York, by legislative act or concurrent resolutions, a pledge of free maintenance to the commerce of the nation. A joint meeting of the canal committees of the senate and assembly of New York, by a vote of 14 to 1, ordered the drafting of such resolutions, which passed the Senate with an amendment that the State would guarantee the freedom of the canals only so long as it maintained them; and which amendment would have been offered at the proper time. The resolutions were defeated in the assembly—according to information received at the time—by what appears to have been a combination of railroad interests, State pride sentimentalists, and those who thought the bill did not go far enough in the direction of relief to the tax-payers of the State. Believing that the true sentiment of New York was not properly expressed in this action of the assembly, conclusive results are not now aimed at or expected, and until the people of the State manifest a clear and emphatic desire in such direction, no steps will be taken to press the measure to a vote.

I desire first to read a portion of the report of the committee thereon, which will explain in part the favorable recommendation for the passage of the bill, after which I wish to elaborate some of the more salient features, and answer, so far as the time allotted to me will permit, such objections as have thus far come within my observation.

In asking for this sum for the purposes stated it is hoped and expected that it has been shown that the importance of these links in the great water system of the West and Northwest, their influence upon the tariffs of nearly all the railroad lines between the Mississippi and the Atlantic Ocean, and the necessity of action which by reason of peculiar existing conditions, the National Government alone can inaugurate promptly, warrants at least the very careful consideration of this body. Such consideration, it is believed, will justify the expectation of your approval.

If the influence and regulatory power of the water-route be admitted, and if, as Mr. Fink says, "transportation reductions are primarily made on account of the existence of the Erie Canal," then it follows that the direct saving effected on exported breadstuffs alone will reach nearly $4,000,000 annually.

But the saving effected reaches far beyond these figures in fact, as a careful examination will show. The figures in the report given by Mr. Dodge embrace only wheat, for the grain raised in the thirteen States referred to amounts to over 2,100,000,000 bushels.

PRICE FIXED IN FOREIGN MARKETS.

It is well established that the price of our surplus products exported is fixed in the foreign market, irrespective of what it costs to raise or transport it, and that price governs the market here. It follows then that every penny saved in transportation remains in the pocket of the producer, wherever he may be, and affects every bushel of such grain raised as is susceptible of export, except that actually consumed by the grain grower upon his farm. Admitting that but one-half of the grain grown in this country is affected, a gain of over $10,000,000 per annum results from the saving of but 1 cent per bushel.

In this connection a comparison of the transportation rates by lake and Erie Canal for the years 1868 and 1884 are interesting and showing a reduction of nearly 18 cents per bushel. This saving upon the basis stated reaches fabulous figures, and would pay our national debt, principal and interest, within eight years. These reductions are owing to wise and judicious improvements of the water-route system by the United States and the State of New York, and not only enables the Western farmer to avoid the necessity of burning his corn for fuel, as has been done, but furnishes a cheaper substitute in the shape of coal. We share with you, gentlemen of the West, in the just pride you feel because of your gigantic strides in prosperity, but we modestly claim some credit for the magnificent results, and invite a study of the figures which establish the facts.

Those tables will show that as tolls were gradually lowered and finally abolished, the freights on the New York canals correspondingly sank, bringing with each reduction, surely and regularly, an acknowledgment of their controlling power in the lowering of rates on all the railroads leading to the seaboard.

COMPETITION IN THE EAST.

The threatening competition of the grain producers of the Eastern countries has been referred to in the report; but its vast importance entitles it to a place in the front rank of the questions now engaging the attention of our political economists.

Our shipments of breadstuffs to foreign lands is next to the first factor which turns the balance of trade in favor of this country, and furnishes nearly one-fourth of our entire exports. When you weaken the agricultural interest of our country you undermine the foundations of the nation's prosperity. We must not only produce from the soil, but we must have a market for our surplus. If agriculture ceases to be profitable through inability to use the surplus product, the acreage and yield will be reduced by lessening the number of those now engaged in it. This will reverse existing conditions.

Heretofore our agricultural fields have been the outlet of the crowded avenues of labor in our cities during times of depression, and have been the safety valve which prevented the extreme destitution of the workers, so common in other less-favored countries. When this outlet shall become closed in the one direction, and the flow shall be the other way, the consequences can not be pleasant to contemplate in these days of labor strikes.

Nor should we look with complacency upon—or fail to regard with anxiety—any condition of our international traffic which reduces, or threatens to reduce, the balance of trade in our favor. It is a cardinal business principle with a trader, always to receive "boot."

Some of the silver speeches with which we were favored during the last session scout the idea of financial disaster because of the continuance of coinage or free coinage, so long as the balance of trade is in our favor. Now, whatever may be our respective opinions upon that subject, we are all agreed that it is better for the country's prosperity that the balances with foreign nations should come here, and it would therefore seem that whatever is necessary to continue or improve the present condition of our national ledger should be promptly done.

CHEAPENING TRANSPORTATION.

The improvements made by the General Government on the lakes permitted increased tonnage without appreciable addition of expenses beyond the extent of handling the increased portion of the cargo. This saving will apply to canal transportation with the completion of the proposed improvements, as I will proceed to show.

In 1879, under the direction of Horatio Seymour, jr., the State engineer of New York, a careful test was made of the economy of moving grain on the Illinois system of coupling two boats together, propelling and steering them by an engine, wheel, and rudder, in the rear boat. The trip, including detentions incidental to an experimental trial, consumed ten days from Buffalo to New York.

A careful record was kept of the speed, consumption of coal, and detention at the locks. I quote from his report:

> The canal from Buffalo to Lockport is 9 feet deep, and from Lockport to Rochester will average nearly 8 feet. The average time of the steamer and consort between these points, after deducting the effect of the current, was 2.2 miles per hour, with an expenditure of fuel of 25.7 pounds of coal to the mile; while from Clark's bridge to the Richmond aqueduct, on July 15, where the water was less than 7 feet deep, the speed was only 1.7 of a mile per hour, and the coal burned 52.1 pounds per mile, or 30 per cent. less speed with more than twice as much fuel. If the canal throughout was as deep as it is from Buffalo to Rochester the running time could have been reduced at least seventeen hours, with 2 tons less coal, or with the same amount of coal I have no doubt that a saving in time of twenty-four hours could have been effected.

The detentions on the canal for lockage on this trip aggregated twenty-six hours and fifty-one minutes, which the lengthening of the locks will reduce one-half. With the improved locks and increased depth it is calculated that a steamer with three consorts can carry 39,000 bushels of wheat making 50 miles per day at a quarter of the expense of a horse boat with 8,000 bushels moving 30 miles per day. The reduction of time and expense will readily effect a saving of 2 cents per bushel. Mr. Seymour, in an interview some time ago, said the proposed improvements will reduce the cost of transportation one-third, if not one-half.

WHO SHALL IMPROVE THE CANALS.

If we arrive at the conclusion that the improvement and enlargement are necessary and wise, the question then arises as to the propriety of the National Government making appropriations for the work. National aid to the Erie Canal is not an idea of recent development. It existed before the work was begun. According to Hon. Israel T. Hatch, a former member of this House, the application for such aid made by the commissioners appointed by the State of New York was approved by President Madison in 1811, and by the then Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Gallatin, and only the anticipated rupture with Great Britain, realized the following year, prevented its being a national undertaking from the start. Hon. D. S. Bennett informs me that his bill, introduced in 1870, received the approval of the members of the Committees on Commerce and on Appropriations, all of whom favored the measure whenever the State of New York by joint resolution would accept the provisions of the bill, which called for $8,000,000 for the work. The Legislature of the State failed to act or pass such a resolution. We were then collecting tolls upon the canal commerce not only sufficient to pay for maintenance but to pay the interest and provide for the sinking funds to liquidate the canal debt.

The bill of the Hon. Edward Wemple, introduced at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, appropriating $1,000,000 per annum for ten years for this object, was reported favorably and unanimously by the Committee on Railways and Canals. This committee concluded their report as follows:

> In conclusion we say that, considered in its commercial aspect, the Erie Canal is now in every repect national in its character, aiding the citizens of this whole General Government, even those located at its farthest border, and so deserving of aid, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill with amendments.

The pending measure differs from those referred to as having met the approval of the important committees having them in charge; and these differences, it is hoped and believed, will commend the measure even more strongly than the others. We have lengthened one lock on the Erie Canal, by way of experiment, and are now able to speak from actual experience as to the improvement and its cost. The cost of lengthening this lock was $27,000. There are seventy-two locks on the Erie Canal. The five at Lockport it is not proposed to alter. One is already completed, and a few will be superseded by the lengthening and deepening, making one lock take the place of two to be improved. An average cost of $27,000 will aggregate, for the sixty locks remaining to be improved, $1,620,000.

The cost of bottoming out a foot and raising the banks a foot has been estimated by competent engineers at $1,000,000, who say that careful surveys show and actual experience in bottoming out proves that the estimate is ample. Here we have an expenditure, based on actual experience, of $2,620,000 for the contemplated improvement and enlargement of the Erie Canal, with its 352 miles. The Oswego Canal is 38 miles long, and has eighteen locks. So that we can, with good reason, assume that the total cost of the work will come within the sum named in this bill. The work can be completed in one season without interfering with navigation. Neither will the proposed improvement disturb the relation between the size of the present boats and the size of the canal, as the boats now in use have a capacity for 50 tons more than the present depth allows them to carry.

This bill calls for the sum of $5,000,000 (it may be less) when the work has been completed, and not before. It is not an entering wedge, leading to the expenditure of fabulous sums. We know what is required in the shape of improvement, and all calculations that I have seen on the subject agree that the reduction of the cost of transportation will soon balance the outlay for the work. The State of New York agrees to maintain the canals in their ordinary expenses, and pledges itself to repay to the General Government the sums expended for this improvement in case tolls are again imposed or levied. This proposition is fair to the nation and to the State, for the sum to be expended is for permanent improvement or betterments, the use of which the nation will enjoy, or in the event that the canal ceases to be free, they are permanently improved by the sum so expended, which New York should properly refund.

WHY NEW YORK SHOULD NOT FOOT THE BILL.

The question of canal improvement in New York is complicated because of the extent of the canal system of the State. Several hundred miles of tributary canals and river improvements have been grafted upon the trunk line of the Erie. Some of these have been abandoned, it is true, but the history of the State shows that every movement looking to the improvement of the main canals arouses the jealousies of the local interests connected with the lateral canals, and propositions for expenditures for the one have been met with demands for a proportionate outlay for each of the others. To make the improvements necessary, even if the sentiment of our people was responsive, would cost the State a much greater sum than would be necessary if the funds were furnished by the General Government for specific purposes as is proposed by the bill in question.

Since all tolls were abolished, the care and maintenance of the canals fall upon the tax-payers of New York. Under the most favorable circumstances, this maintenance reaches to the sum of about $800,000 annually. They provide also for the sinking fund toward the extinguishment of the canal debt of the State about $500,000 a year, and pay the interest on the canal debt until extinguished, averaging, say about $250,000, or in round numbers they are taxed $1,500,000 per year to support the canal, the benefits of which are shared by nearly the entire nation. For the last year the estimates of the comptroller of the State of New York required the levying of a tax for canal purposes of $1,702,102.30.

The Erie and Oswego Canals run through or border on eighteen of the sixty counties of the State. While it is conceded that these canal counties are important in wealth and population, yet all of their people are not such friends of the canal as to voluntarily tax themselves to maintain the present system, let alone the enlargement and improvement, so vitally necessary.

To show that this is not an idle statement I read a resolution unanimously passed recently at one of the most largely attended meetings of the Farmers' Institute of Erie County, New York. Next to New York, Erie is the most important canal county in the State:

That as tax-payers of this State we emphatically protest against any appropriation by the Legislature for the purpose of such improvement, and favor such improvement only in accordance with the plan involving the same substantial principles underlying the so-called "Weber federal aid bill," now pending in the House of Representatives.

The New York Central and West Shore Railroad parallel the Erie Canal the entire length with six tracks. It is claimed by some that these corporations are not too kindly disposed toward the canal, but it is not necessary to enter upon this feature at present. They are now combined under one control and represent a powerful influence. With an army of employés, a perfect organization, and a capital of over $200,000,000, it is safe to assume that when they choose they can divide the public sentiment upon the question of canal or no canal in the very canal counties of the State. Add to their side the vote of the counties off the line of the canals, whose people are nearly unanimously opposed to further State appropriations for improvements, and the danger looms up with such threatening force as may result in the re-imposition of tolls or the virtual abandonment of the canal system of the State. An appeal to State pride, when coupled with satisfactory prospects of direct or indirect benefits, may produce liberal expenditures for improvement, but State pride alone did not build and will not now save our canals. The mutterings of discontent as expressed in some of the newspapers of Buffalo, Rochester, Syracuse, Troy, and Albany, canal cities, grow into open revolt in the districts not contiguous to the canal.

This feeling of discontent will not lessen, for the necessities of prompt and effective measures of improvement become more and more apparent, while the burdens of canal maintenance and expenses will not diminish, but, on the contrary, will grow. These canals, if improved at all upon the basis of a free commerce, must be improved by the General Government. In view of the fact that the benefits are national in extent, it is difficult to make our people understand why the burden should not fall upon the beneficiaries, especially when it is so clearly demonstrated that a burden borne by the nation for a short period will secure benefits which will stretch far into the future. New York will pay her full share and more than her share under the proposed measure. With one-tenth of the population of the country within her borders, it is estimated that she pays one-seventh of the taxes of the Government. If this be true she will pay one-seventh of the sum called for by this improvement, and will maintain free to the commerce of the nation the ordinary expenses of operating the important link of the great water-route system which regulates and controls almost the entire transportation interests of the land. If in the future the changed condition of affairs brings a reimposition of tolls on the canal commerce, then you will have her pledge to repay the sums advanced under and by virtue of the provisions of the pending measure.

AID TO WESTERN FARMERS.

For the purpose of showing how the situation is regarded by experienced and practical men of the West, I quote from a report for 1883, made by Mr. Dennison B. Smith, secretary of the Toledo Produce Exchange. This acknowledges the beneficent results of the concessions made by the State of New York in the abolition of tolls, points to the dangers to Western interests of neglect to properly maintain the canals, and unequivocally favors national assistance. He says:

A free water highway to the seaboard, in cheapening and regulating the rates of transportation for Western producers, is of inestimable worth. No Western farmer can assert that his crop of wheat or corn is not appreciated in value 10 cents per bushel by the maintenance of the Erie Canal and its salutary restraint over the whole question of transportation. But the question assumes a higher and national importance when we consider that this cheap transport to the seaboard is quite indispensable to the export of our products in competition with the increased and cheapened productions in India, South America, and Russia.

It is to be regretted, however, that as one consequence of the absence of revenue considerable difficulty was experienced near the close of the season in navigating the canal on account of the neglect of the authorities to maintain the necessary repairs.

If this may be assumed to be the result of the concession of tolls, it follows that in a short period the canal must be unfit for use. Such a contingency would be disastrous to Western interests. The State of New York can not be expected to maintain a free canal at a great yearly cost, with widely resulting benefits to the commerce of the whole country, and especially to all interests west of Buffalo; and I am decidedly in favor of such appropriations by the General Government to the State of New York as will fairly aid in maintaining this great commercial avenue.

OBJECTIONS TO FEDERAL AID.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to consider such objections as have been brought to my attention, most of which come from my own State. In such consideration I do not intend to impugn their sincerity or impute improper motives to those who see fit to make them; but whether conscious or unconscious of the fact, they are the most dangerous enemies of the canals. They may not be inspired by railroad interests, and such interests may not be inimical to water transportation; but if there were railroad enmity and opposition, the arguments and objections I imagine would have a suspicious similarity to those which fall from the lips of pretended friends of the water ways. If as is said that as "the usefulness and business of the railways shall increase, the more important will the canals become as the regulators of the railways," it is difficult to understand that railroad managers should be so friendly to canal interests, and encourage a power which shall control and check their freight schedules.

Railroads are not apt to invite competition, at least that is not the experience of the people of New York. That is not the history of the war waged by the New York Central against the West Shore Railroad, which terminated in the absorption of the latter by the former, which now controls and manages the entire system. The canals, so long as they are controlled by the people, can not be absorbed by the railroads; and because I fear that the continuance of the present burden and the additions proposed, made necessary, as nearly every one admits, will result in throwing them off, no matter where they fall so long as relief comes to our tax-payers, I favor the only plan practicable, feasible, and just, which shall continue such control by placing the burden where the benefits fall.

Railways can not profitably compete with the water ways, it is said; therefore there is no danger. But they do compete, and, as acknowledged by high railroad authority, they carry such freights as properly and naturally belong to the water routes at less than actual cost of operating expenses. Is there not some reason in this? Their managers are astute, capable, and far-seeing officials. They simply follow one of the cardinal principles of monopolies, to break down the competitor, and when that is accomplished they recompense themselves by levying increased tribute upon their helpless victims. And though the public may look complacently upon railroad wars which bring reduced rates temporarily, in the long run they will be made to pay for the entertainment. Therefore it would seem to be quite natural that the railroad managers do not take kindly to the idea of national aid for the improvement of our canals, for the General Government seems now to be the only power which they have not yet overridden.

We are asked, too, at home "why should we suspend the great and important work of maintaining and improving our canals until we can induce the General Government to furnish us the means for carrying forward this work." The answer is, you need not suspend twenty-four hours. This bill does not delay your efforts through the New York Legislature. While we are urging our claims for assistance from Congress upon the justice and merits of the demand you can present and urge your reasons to our people why their State representatives should make the necessary appropriations to begin the work, the precise nature of which we are almost unanimously agreed upon, it being the plan recommended by Horatio Seymour, jr., State engineer, by IRA DAVENPORT, comptroller of the State, now a member of this body, and by the canal conference held at Utica a year ago last summer, presided over by the late Horatio Seymour, and when that objection is urged at home it inclines one to the belief that the bill in question has not been carefully or sincerely read.

THE STATE CALLED A BEGGAR.
